NUMBER 1.

JUNIUS E. WEST
July 16, 1866—January 1, 1947

Junius E. West was a man of purpose and vision. His was a life of energetic service devoted to his home, his business, his state and his church. In him worthy causes found a ready and fearless champion. The stamp of his influence rests indelibly upon many individuals and institutions. "His leaf also shall not wither," for the ameliorating influence of his social legislation, and the redemptive influence of his work for home and foreign missions go from strength to strength. The good seed has been sown. Strong churches stand today as monuments to his vision. In days to come men will recall his voice as it was lifted on countless occasions for his favorite causes—the Sunday School and missions—and dedicate themselves thereto with renewed devotion.

Colonel West was a man of faith and prayer. For him, as with St. James, faith without works was dead. Prayer was no trivial affair; it engaged his total energies. The Bible was God's sure word of truth. During his prolonged illness and intense suffering, he read the New Testament through more than once. His illness became a spiritual experience as he kept tryst with Him who "learned obedience by the things which he suffered." And now a door of mercy has opened and the soul has been translated to that realm where faith has become sight. There in the assembly of just men made perfect, where they are who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the lamb, there is joy in the presence of Him who is able to turn the shadow of death into morning. The bereaved need not sorrow as those who have no hope, but in thankful remembrance of the days and years of a great friendship, they may go forth in the sure expectation of a joyous reunion in the heavenly places. A grateful church pays its tribute of respect to this valiant leader.

He will be accompanied by his wife, and by the Rev. Ewart Turner, former pastor of the American Church in Berlin and European correspondent in Europe of Religious News Service during the war.

Pastor Niemoeller, arrested by the Gestapo in 1937 on order of Hitler, will speak at 3:00 P. M., at First Baptist Church, Monument Avenue

A NEW LEAF.

He came to my desk with quivering lip—
The lesson was done.

"Dear Teacher, I want a new leaf," he said,
"I have spoiled this one."

I took the old leaf, stained and blotted,
And gave him a new one all unspotted,
And into his sad eyes smiled,
"Do better, now, my child."

I went to the throne with a quivering soul—
The old year was done.

"Dear Father, hast Thou a new leaf for me?
"I have spoiled this one."

He took the old leaf, stained and blotted,
And gave me a new one all unspotted,
And into my sad heart smiled,
"Do better, now, my child."

—Kathleen Wheeler.

and at First Baptist Church at 8:00 P. M., on "The Niemoellers as I have Known Them."

The Niemoellers are members of the Evangelical Church in Germany, origin of the American Evangelical and Reformed Church. Both of them speak English, Mrs. Niemoeller having taught for two years in England, and the pastor having learned it while at Dachau, where he read over 400 American and English books and was allowed to converse daily with an English officer, also imprisoned in the concentration camp.

A MORNING RESOLVE.

I will this day try to live a simple, sincere, and serene life; repelling promptly every thought of discontent, anxiety, discouragement, impurity, and self-seeking; cultivating cheerfulness, magnanimity, charity, and the habit of holy silence; exercising economy in expenditure, carefulness in conversation, diligence in appointed service, fidelity to every trust, and a childlike trust in God.

—John H. Vincent.

The Maker of New Years

God of the years that lie behind us,
Lord of the years that stretch before,
Weaver of all the ties that bind us,
Keeper and King of the Open Door:

Grant us hope, and a courage glowing
White and pure as the stars above;
Grant us faith in a full stream flowing
Down from the heights of Thy changeless love.

Out of the ruins of doubt and sorrow,
Out of the ashes of pain and tears,
Help us to fashion a new tomorrow,
Free from the anguish of blighting fears.

Build with us, lest our great walls crumble,
Broken stone upon useless clay;
Walk with us, lest our slow feet stumble,
Grove, and falter, and lose the way.

All through the seasons of sowing and reaping,
All through the harvest of song and tears,
Hold us close in Thy tender keeping,
O Maker of all New Years!

—Selected.

THE TENTACLES OF FAITH.

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

Even now faith is reaching its tentacles out far into the new year. This truth is reflected in the realm of business. Added facilities, expanding enterprises and mounting budgets are predicted on the assurance of unseen customers. Temporary losses will be cheerfully sustained in the hope of eventual returns ere the close of the year. The forces of evil have their sights trained on distant targets.

A dynamic world responds to the tentacles of faith. It has ever been so. The unseen becomes manifest: "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us." Forces seen and unseen respond to the behest of faith. St. John realized that "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Through St. Paul the early church reached its tentacles of faith out into a hostile, pagan world.

The church today must exercise and stretch its tentacles of faith. Reaching out into the days, weeks, and months of the new year, faith should chart its course of action. Landmarks invariably begin in the realms of prophecy before they find a secure place in history. The prehensile faculty explores the chronological and geographical frontiers. The tentacles of faith should reach out into unevangelized areas at home and abroad. The substance of things hoped for—and prayed for—include more and better stewards, new converts, new churches, and the realization of the Kingdom of God on earth. A faith which is sensitive to distant goals will find its fulfilment in the economy of God. The year of our Lord, 1947, should be a year of faith, a year of spiritual adventure, a year of victory. Faith, faith is the victory.

THE FRUIT OF SOLITUDE.

One does not take a text ordinarily from the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, but these words are apropos: "Now the New Year reviving old Desires, the thoughtful Soul to Solitude retires."

Those who celebrate the new year with noisy demonstrations and rowdiness need a dose of Omar Khayyam. Old desires may be properly evaluated in silence only. Numberless memories and desires need classification. Some of these old desires should be consigned to limbo. Others, half-forgotten, should be placed again in their proper focus of attention. A good supply of healthy desires furnish the driving power for life at its best. Legitimate hopes and desires should be given full reign, for hopes that seemed too good to be true have been realized.

In solitude let us realize that only by God's mercy have we come to the gateway of a new year; let the light and love of these holy days linger in our hearts and bear their rich fruitage. Only through solitude and meditation are we able to discern the solemn meaning of these earthly days, and the high and sacred purpose for which they are given. In solitude we find holy communion with Him, who with untiring love keeps watch over us from one generation to another. So may we pass the residue of our years in the power of an endless life.

A MINISTER'S DEVOTIONS.

There are many ways by which ministers engage in their daily devotions. Many of them read the Bible. Some use devotional literature. Others spend time in quiet meditation and prayer. All these methods, individually or in combinations have great value.

Dr. John G. Truitt has devised this unusual phase of his daily devotions. He speaks of it as "one of the happy experiences of my daily routine, namely, that of remembering my fellow ministers daily in prayer and mentioning one especially by name in a little written prayer which I compose daily as a part of my devotion. It is something to bring oneself into the feeling that one may come with a friend and fellow worker into His Presence, and ask a favor of God for the fellow worker. I have found a real joy in it."

This is the right mood for daily devotions. It should be joyful rather than perfunctory and monotonous. Our ministers would be better ministers if more people were praying for them rather than criticizing them. The New Year is the time to set new devotional patterns and establish new devotional habits. The devotional period gives God the priority in our thinking and living. It undergirds every task with spiritual power. Under the leadership of God's spirit let the ministry and laity alike engage in daily devotions throughout the new year.

THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

Almighty Father, as we keep holy time under the deepening shadows of the closing year; we thank thee for all that it hath brought to us of mercy and truth. Receive our sorrow for our sins, and in thine infinite mercy blot them out of the book of thy remembrance. Let not the experiences of our past days be lost upon us. Fix in our minds every lesson of faith and duty which thou hast been teaching us. Take from our hearts every veil that would hide from us the shining of the heavenly light. Grant unto us, before the record of this year has been finished and sealed, a fresh consecration, a very honest and deep desire to live according to thy will, as it has been made known to us in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—John Hunter.

Do not spill thy soul in running hither and yon, grieving over the mistakes and the vices of others. The one person whom it is most necessary to reform is thyself.—Emerson.

Junius E. West, Churchman and Statesman

Junius E. West, former Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia and one of the State's outstanding public figures, died at 4:00 A. M., January 1, at St. Elizabeth Hospital in Richmond, after a prolonged illness.

Funeral services will be held Friday afternoon in the Suffolk Christian Church, of which he was a deacon, with the Rev. Dr. John G. Truitt, pastor, officiating.

Mr. West, who served as Lieutenant-Governor for two four-year terms, first under Governor E. Lee Trinkle and then under Governor Harry F. Byrd, was also widely known for his activities as a member of the State Legislature prior to that time.

He was father of the West bill to abolish the fee system in Virginia, and other chief interests were in school and health measures. He introduced the West health bill which had its incipency when Dr. Ennion G. Williams, of Richmond, was first State health officer. He was also father of the State Purchasing Act.

Mr. West was born at Waverly, July 16, 1866, the son of H. T. and Susan Cox West. He was educated in the public schools of the State, at the University of North Carolina and at Washington and Lee University. Later he studied law at the University of Virginia under the late John B. Minor. Forced to abandon his legal studies because of ill health, he went into the insurance business in Waverly. He moved to Suffolk in 1890, where he was senior partner in the insurance firm of West & Withers, at the time of his death.

During his years in Waverly he became superintendent of schools for Sussex County.

Mr. West served on the staff of Governor Claude A. Swanson and was elected a member of the Virginia House of Delegates in 1909. After one term in the House he was elected to the State Senate, serving two and a half terms in that body. An aggressive worker and a hard fighter, Mr. West became active in introducing educational legislation. "Colonel" West was noted for his efforts on behalf of the Tidewater section, particularly in the development of the port of Hampton Roads. He received the Army title while a member of the staff of Governor Claude A. Swanson.

He was elected Lieutenant-Governor in 1921 after a hard fight brought on as a result of his opposition to the Virginia fee system. After serving four years he was re-elected without opposition in 1926.

He became a candidate for the governorship against John Garland Pollard, but withdrew his candidacy on account of poor health. Thereafter, he devoted his efforts to his rapidly growing insurance business in Suffolk, which is now one of the State's larger agencies. At one time he owned a half-interest in the Suffolk Herald.

In former years, he was chairman of the Democratic Committee of Nansemond County, a member of the State central committee and of the State Democratic Committee. He served as president of the Democratic clubs of the State, was a delegate to Democratic National Convention in 1896, and at one time was president of the Suffolk City Council.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, RICHMOND.

January 2, 1947.

I am greatly distressed to learn of the death of my long-time friend, Lieutenant-Governor Junius E. West. I have known Lieutenant-Governor West since 1924, when I first came to the General Assembly, and of course knew of him many years prior thereto as a legislator and Christian gentleman.

Governor West was a kindly man with gentle impulses and was ever ready to extend a word of encouragement or a helping hand to those needing it. As a citizen and as an official, he has contributed much that is of value to the life of our Commonwealth. He will be greatly missed.

/s/ WM. M. TUCK,
Governor of Virginia.

A member of the Board of trustees of Elon College, North Carolina, he had held a similar position at Farmville State Teachers College.

Extremely active in church work he was a member of the Suffolk Christian Church for some 55 years and a member of its board of deacons at the time of his death. He was the honored teacher of the Philathea Bible Class for many years.

He headed the Southern Mission Board of the Congregational Christian Church for 40 years, but resigned the post a few years ago due to his ill health.

One of the charter members of the Suffolk Rotary Club and its former president, he continued active in the club until his death. He was an active member and a former president of the Suffolk Chamber of Commerce.

During the first World War he served as chairman of the United War Work campaign in Suffolk and Nansemond County. He was a Mason, Knight Templar and Shriner, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and a member of the Laurel Cliff Country Club of Suffolk.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ollie Beale West; a daughter, Mrs. Margaret West Frazier, Jr., of Bon Air; and a brother, Caleb D. West, of Newport News, all of whom were at his bedside at the time of his death. He is also survived by three grandchildren, Henry B. Frazier III, Junius West Frazier and William Tyler Frazier.

COLONEL JUNIUS E. WEST—NOBLE LAYMAN OF THE CONVENTION.

The passing of Colonel J. E. West is a great loss to the Southern Convention. He was a Christian gentleman and loved passionately his Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. He was a great churchman—one who gave liberally throughout his long life of his time, talents, and means. He loved his church and its enterprises, and supported all interests locally and generally. He was particularly interested in the cause of missions, becoming chairman of the Mission Board of the Convention upon its organization, and which position he held for thirty years. Upon the death of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, Colonel West redoubled his own efforts on behalf of missions, largely carrying the responsibilities of the Board on a voluntary basis.

Colonel West has inspired other laymen to support the church, and may God cause to arise in our midst men to take up the work he has so valiantly done. We who have inherited the responsibilities which Colonel West has so nobly carried have a summons to deeper consecration and a larger gift of ourselves that the cause of the church may go forward.

May God rest the soul of this great churchman. Victory and reward are the joys of his eternal life.

WM. T. SCOTT, Supt.,
The Southern Convention.

There are many persons that smile on hearing talk of building a better world and say that the world cares nothing for that. These persons have lost faith in people and God because of their own mistakes.—John S. Bonnell, D.D.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Mrs. Alberta Moring Roberts, wife of Rev. Jesse M. Roberts, and daughter of the late Hon. John M. Moring and wife, Mrs. Emma G. Moring, was born in Chatham County, North Carolina. Her parents were prominent people, her father having been Speaker of the House of Representatives of the state legislature, and her mother was from an outstanding family of the State of North Carolina. She is survived by her husband, two daughters, Mrs. Roland Wright of Windsor, Va., and Mrs. W. R. Knight of Rich Square, North Carolina, one son, Mr. J. M. Roberts, Jr., of Windsor, Va., two grandchildren and a sister, Mrs. W. H. Boone of Durham, North Carolina.

Mrs. Roberts was, before her death, the oldest living relative of the distinguished Rev. James O'Kelly, the founder of the Christian denomination in Virginia and North Carolina. She was also the last surviving member of the original faculty of Elon College, having served as a member of the faculty from the opening of the college in 1890 until 1901, and she rendered outstanding service both in music and in teaching art. She developed a very efficient and outstanding art department in the college, and was recognized as an artist of ability. Her cultural background, and her native genius for expressing her artistic taste, made her outstanding in her chosen field. It was my great privilege to be one of four students who roomed and boarded in the Moring home during my senior year in Elon College. This gave me a more intimate knowledge of her character, taste, poise, culture and ability. Her dignity combined with her gentleness, her fine traits of character, her intelligence and her broad vision—commanded the respect and the admiration of those who knew her.

When she gave up her career as a teacher—and took up the duties of domestic life in her own home—she preserved and continued her rich inheritance of sturdy Christian living, and became a devoted wife and mother.

For a number of years her failing health prevented her from taking part in the more exacting duties of public life—both in the church and in the community. But she was deeply interested in those finer things that are essential to human happiness and community development. She fully realized that her physical condition was growing worse, but the family did not discover any symptoms of apparently serious nature until Tuesday afternoon. Her husband conducted a funeral near Eure in Gates County, Tuesday afternoon, and upon his return about 6:00, found that she became ill about 3:00 P. M.—just a few hours before his return. She passed away before dawn next morning. She lived to a ripe age—and her life came to its earthly end—full of grace and loving service. She has entered into that fuller life—of fellowship with the Saviour whom she loved and served. She was a member of the Christian Church from the days of her youth—and was loyal and devoted to the work of her church. At the time of her death she held membership in the Windsor Christian Church.

She was a great soul—and she lived a life of consistent service—high ideals were the goal of her living—and she was a fine example of patience and fortitude under affliction and trial. A new life for her begins with the return of her spirit to God and the committal of her body to the earth. Her memory is a rich heritage for her family, her friends and her church. May God bless her saintly spirit and her devoted family.

ROSEMONT REPORT.

The Rosemont folks are a gracious and generous people. Not only have they made our life in their midst a succession of courtesies and contributions, but as the time for our departure comes, they are being prodigally generous and gracious. The Betty Gibson Bible Class had a special class meeting in our honor early in December and at the close of the meeting, the president presented us, on behalf of the class, with a lovely blanket.

A little later the church, as a church, gave a dinner in our honor. A delicious dinner was served to a capacity crowd that filled and overflowed the Sunday school assembly room. After an inspiring program of music, and an address by Mr. Jerry Bray of South Norfolk, came a series of surprise gifts for Mrs. Hardeastle and me. Mr. Al Colfield and Mrs. J. H. Boothe, on behalf of the church, presented to my wife and to me each a one hundred dollar savings bond; Mr. Charles Richardson, on behalf of the John Morrison Bible Class, gave me a lovely raincoat, and Thomas Liverman, Jr., on behalf of the Downing Memorial Bible Class, presented us with a huge live turkey for our Christmas dinner. Needless to say, deeply appreciated both the gifts and the spirit of friendship and generosity that prompted them.

Last week the members of the Young People's Choir and a group of Christian Endeavorers gave us another dinner party. In a room lovely with a lighted Christmas tree and lovely Christmas decorations, we sat down to attractively decorated tables and partook of a delicious and abundant feast of good things. Then after an address by Reverend P. Rowland Wagner, Henry Hodges, president of the group, presented us with more gifts, stationery and desk calendar respectively.

The Maude Hedley Bible Class also graciously remembered us at its Christmas class meeting at which we were specially invited guests with a lovely set of sheets and pillow slips.

On another night Mrs. Hardeastle attended the meeting of the Fidelis Bible Class and came home with a wonderful-to-behold fruit cake, the gift of the class. It is almost too pretty to be eaten, but before these lines are read, it probably will have been eaten.

Last, but not least, the Sally Roane Bible Class also had us as special guests at their Christmas party last week and also gave us most attractive and acceptable gifts, a set of decorative birds for Mrs. Hardeastle, and a paper weight with an excellent picture of the Rosemont Church on the under-side.

In addition to these gifts from organizations and the church itself, we have received other nice gifts from individuals. And the daily mails bring to our door great numbers of friendly Christmas greetings.

We have had two very happy years here at Rosemont and in Portlock. There is a tinge of sadness in our hearts as we think of leaving them. But our hearts will be warmed upon every remembrance of the friends we have made, the fellowship we have received.

And already the folks of the First Congregational Christian Church at Newport News have manifested their thoughtfulness and their generosity to us, and we are looking forward to our life and service among them.

CONCERNING THE IMMIGRATION OF DISPLACED PEOPLE IN THE UNITED STATES.

WHEREAS, There are over one million displaced persons in the American, British and French zones of Germany, in Austria, and in Italy; and,

WHEREAS, While many will consent to return to their countries of origin, it may be fairly estimated that there will remain six or seven hundred thousand who will refuse to be repatriated because of fear of the consequences; and,

WHEREAS, Nearly a half are now in the United States zones in Germany and Austria, and so under American protection and being maintained by the United States with aid from UNRRA; and,

WHEREAS, The United States has declared its policy of not compelling the return of displaced persons against their will; and,

WHEREAS, The United Nations Assembly has adopted the same policy by resolution of February 12, 1946; and,

WHEREAS, Germany and Austria cannot provide sufficient food, homes and work for Germans, especially since millions of the Germans have been forced from the homes in which they have lived for centuries and have settled destitute upon the weakened German economy; and,

WHEREAS, It is therefore necessary to find a place where the displaced persons can dwell and earn a living; and,

WHEREAS, About two-thirds of the displaced persons who will not be repatriated are Christians, Roman Catholic, Eastern Orthodox and Protestant; and,

WHEREAS, The United States should take a part in acting for the settlement of these distressed people and in promoting action by other countries; and,

WHEREAS, During the years 1941 to 1945, approximately 700,000 of immigrants who might have entered the United States under the quota law, did in fact not come in, now, therefore be it

RESOLVED, That to meet the present emergency President Truman be supported in asking Congress to amend the immigration laws to allow the entry of so many of the displaced persons as would constitute the fair share of the United States, a share which would not exceed half of the unrepatriables and which would not be less than half of the difference between those admissible under the quota law during the war years and those who actually entered; and be it FURTHER RESOLVED, That the Federal Council of Churches strongly support the establishment by the United Nations Assembly of the International Refugee Organization as recommended to it by the Economic and Social Council and the appropriation by the Congress of the United States of funds up to fifty per cent of necessary expenses for such organization in order that there be adequate international provision for the maintenance and resettlement of Displaced Persons when UNRRA disbands on June 30, 1947.

RESOLUTION REGARDING FOOD IN THE LIGHT OF UNRRA'S TERMINATION.

WHEREAS, it is evident from authentic reports from many countries that the need for food will be tragic in the extreme for months to come, and,

WHEREAS, we believe the conscience of the American people will insist that our nation provide a major portion of the relief as our appropriate responsibility; and,

WHEREAS, the conclusion of UNRRA operation on December 31 for relief in Europe will leave some of these peoples uncared for;

THEREFORE, the Federal Council of Churches would place on record its convictions:

1. That we urge our government to enter such arrangements with other countries in supplying their needs for food, as will help to reestablish their independence at the earliest possible moment, stimulate their economic recovery, and strengthen the ties of international friendship in such a way as to undergird world order and peace, and we support action by Congress which will enable the United States to provide its fair share of the international need;

2. That we inform our government of our deep concern that the needs for food of all countries and peoples including the UNRRA countries—India, China, and the occupied countries of Germany and Japan should be met insofar as it lies in human power to do so.

3. That we stand committed to the principle that relief of human suffering must not be used for political ends.

GIFTS FOR THE HUNGRY.

Only one dollar, given through your church can buy enough food to keep a European family of four for two days. Buying in carload lots, Church World Service, overseas relief agency for 26 Protestant denominations, purchases special dried foods, high in calorie content, which can be shipped easily to hunger-stricken areas.

For one dollar about two pounds of dried milk can be bought, enough to supply 32 glasses of whole milk in the liquid form. Six pounds of dried skim milk also costs a dollar.

A special relief cereal, made up of wheat, oats, and soy bean grits, at a cost of 6¼¢ a pound, is purchased wholesale by Church World Service. One dollar will buy 16 pounds. This cereal gives a balanced diet and has the food value pound for pound of cheese. Each pound contains 1,650 calories, more than enough for one day's food at the official calorie level now established for Germany.

However, it should be remembered that 1,650 calories is the minimum set for survival by hunger experiments carried on during the war in the United States. Even at that level, the men in the experiment were weak and tired, uninterested in anything but food. It took an increase in calories far above the normal daily requirements to restore them to proper health and weight.

With people in Europe and Asia, living for a year and in some places for years on diets under this level, it is apparent that much help is needed in increasing the diet level and give them a chance to recover health and strength.

GREETINGS FROM THE JACKSONS.

December 15, 1946.

Dear Friends All:

We have been reading your lovely letters and cards while settling down on the Lynx. Thanks so much for them.

We have already eaten one meal abroad and it reminds us a bit of Pilgrim Fellowship Camp at Camp Waters, Va.—only lots more people. We've hung lines around our bunks and hung up a few clothes to flap in our faces so we feel at home. It's a glorious company we keep and we are looking forward to our voyage and our work in His keeping. Love to you all.

MISSIONS CONFERENCE SCHEDULED.

Crucial problems involving the future of Protestant foreign missions will be debated at the annual meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, scheduled to be held at The Inn, Buck Hill Falls, Pa., January 14-17, Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, executive secretary of the Conference, declared here today (December 28).

The Foreign Missions Conference represents 123 Protestant mission boards and societies in the United States and Canada.

Uppermost among these problems, according to Dr. Fairfield, will be the question of postwar mission strategy in the foreign field. Prior to the war, he explained, almost all missionary activity was conducted on a denominational basis. During the war emergency, however, many overseas church bodies and missions greatly increased cooperative activity in order to conduct their programs more effectively in a time of crisis, he said. The Protestant foreign mission enterprise must therefore, decide whether to expand and strengthen this interdenominational cooperation or to revert to traditional denominational techniques, he declared.

Other problems certain to be discussed at the annual meeting, Dr. Fairfield asserted, will be the training of more nationals for mission service in their native lands, the lack of educational opportunities for women, advantages or disadvantages of "group evangelism" versus individual evangelism, and the need for missionaries technically trained in such fields as cooperatives, health, and agriculture.

One of the highlights of the four-day meeting will be a report from Dr. Thoburn T. Brumbaugh and Dr. Luman J. Shafer regarding the proposed establishment of a co-educational Christian university in Japan.

APPOINTEES TO WEST AFRICA.

A young New England pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. Maxwell Milard Welch of Amherst, Massachusetts, have been appointed as career Congregational missionaries by the American Board for rural work among the Ovimbundu people of Angola, West Africa. Mr. Welch is pastor of the Federated Church of Pelham and formerly served pastorates in Bristol, Maine; Princeton, Maine, and Pelham, Massachusetts, Educated at Bowdoin College, Maine, and Bangor Theological Seminary, Mr. Welch's first full pastorate was in Bristol. Always active in church work he spent the summers during his college days as a farmer, a ship's carpenter and a hospital orderly. Mrs. Welch, who was educated at Farmington Normal School with a course in elementary education at Boston University summer school, taught rural school for eight years before her marriage.

Because the Welch's will be located in a rural area in Angola, West Central Africa, their fine experience in rural parishes in New England will stand them in good stead.

FLIGHT TO TRINIDAD.

Miss Mary A. Beals, daughter of Rev. Charles E. Beals of East Bridgewater, Massachusetts, and Miss Agnes A. Wood of Traer, Iowa, Congregational educators, flew from New York to Trinidad on December 23 en route to their posts as missionaries under the American Board at Inanda Seminary, Inanda, South Africa, one of the oldest and largest schools for Bantu girls in South Africa.

Miss Beals who was born in Bangor, Maine, and educated at Wheaton College, served for four years among the Zulus and returned to the USA during the war after a gruelling 43-day voyage on an American freighter. There for two years Miss Beals served in the Millicent Library at Fairhaven, Massachusetts.

Miss Wood has been an educational missionary among the Zulus for over 15 years and was Associate Principal and head of the Industrial Department at Inanda Seminary. She is a graduate of Iowa State College where she majored in home economics and chemistry.

MISSIONS IN LATIN AMERICA.

Ultimate success of the Protestant missionary enterprise in Latin America depends on the degree to which a "well-rounded" interdenominational approach can be achieved, Dr. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, declared in an important statement.

Addressing the first annual meeting of the United Andean Mission, Dr. Mackay, who recently completed an air tour of several South American countries, voiced an urgent plea for an "integrated mission program in a Christian environment which would combine evangelism with training in agriculture, hygiene, and arts and crafts."

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK

With Emphasis on Missions

"EYE-WITNESSES."

I recently saw a picture of a boy bent industriously over a book. He had papers scattered all over the table. His hair was standing on end and he wore a deep frown. He was busily chewing on his pencil. The whole scene was one of great trouble and bewilderment. But the caption of that picture read, "They never look puzzled when you show them pictures."

That sums up part of the approach to slides or films for use in teaching. Whether it is made up of adults or children, the people in an audience become "eye-witnesses," because concretely and vividly is put before them a lasting, a living lesson.

It was my privilege to fellowship one evening with an interdenominational group of young people and adults. As they came into the church, laughing and talking, they suddenly became hushed. The church had been darkened. The only lights were from candles at the worship center and from the picture shining forth from a screen at the front. That picture created the atmosphere of reverence and quiet which met each person as he entered. It was Borthwick's The Presence, that arrestingly beautiful painting of the interior of a church, of worshippers, and of the shining figure of Christ, blending into the coloring of the painting and yet casting its radiance through the whole scene. And each person there, youth and adult, felt that abiding over all was The Presence. Their hearts and minds were ready for worship; they would be inspired to go forth to work for His Kingdom.

In these tragic days, confronted with a world such as the one in which we live, as sincere Christians we will make use of every possible means to lead the men and women back and the children toward the truth of the Master. The question is not whether one way is harder than another, whether this method is more expensive than that, whether it seems on the surface to be effort wasted. The only question is the one of how the supreme purpose of the Church can be achieved, God working through His human instruments.

The Church's great business is to teach and preach Christ and His way of life so that people may believe and in believing, seek to know and to do the will of God. The Church must inform their minds; it must quicken their emotions; it must move their wills.

For centuries the Church has informed and quickened and moved people through the spoken word, through music, through fellowship with other believers, through prayer—through whatever means God may employ to touch and use us.

For centuries, too, the Church has used what we now call "visual aids." The long history of their use is a testimony of their value—the very architectures of church buildings, religious pictures, stained glass windows, plays, pageants, illustrated Sunday school materials, picture charts, maps, and symbols. A good Sunday school teacher wants a blackboard. We use worship centers in Sunday school, in the morning and evening church services, and in our young people's groups. Many churches take trips to see other people and churches, use posters, models, graphs. All of these have their share in appealing to our emotions and our understanding, through our eyes. We have been using visual aids. However, visual aids are new in the sense that they use new scientific discoveries, and when we combine the older methods with some of the newer we are making Christian education more meaningful. All of us need windows which will let light fall on the meaning of life—visual aids are such windows.

The Women's Convention has recently created a committee for the use of Audio-Visual Aids, which, in conjunction with the same department of the Southern Convention Office, will seek to offer source materials and other helps for the better use of slides, films, and records in our church work. In time, we shall be building up a library of these aids in the office. We will be glad to lend any possible help and hope to be of assistance in all ways.

You will be hearing more of this service, through bulletins, pamphlets, and letters sent to you. Watch this space in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, too, for up-to-the-minute "news and views" on the subject. We shall all be working together, then—"eyewitnesses" helping to build the Kingdom.

"MOTHER CARY" DEAD.

Mrs. Otis Cary, veteran Congregational missionary to Japan for forty-two years, died December 26 at Bradford, Massachusetts, at the age of ninety. Mrs. Cary (Ellen Emerson) was born in Frankestown, New Hampshire, in 1856, and attended Abbot Academy, Andover, Massachusetts. She married Dr. Otis Cary in Nashua, New Hampshire, in 1877, and sailed as a bride to Japan in February, 1878, under the American Board of Foreign Missions.

Mrs. Cary leaves three sons and one daughter, Rev. George E. Cary, 6 Church Street, Bradford, Massachusetts; Dr. Walter Cary, M.D., 1296 Mount Pleasant Street, Dubuque, Iowa; Rev. Frank Cary, Kobe College, Kobe, Japan, and Miss Alice E. Cary, Secretary for Japan of the American Board, who is now in Tokyo, Japan. She also leaves seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Three of Mrs. Cary's children were born in Japan.

Following retirement from active service in Japan under the American Board in 1920, Dr. and Mrs. Cary served in the United States among the Japanese churches of California and Utah.

Mrs. Cary has been lovingly known for years as "Mother Cary." She specialized in work among Japanese women and children, but her primary interest was in her home and family which was always a center of friendship, help and hospitality for the Japanese.

NEED FOR SHOES.

Shoes are vitally needed abroad. That pair of shoes you never wear, worth nothing to you, can mean health and livelihood to a European. What shoes there are available on the continent cost about $30 a pair, an impossible price for a workman earning the equivalent of 60¢ a day. Children's and men's shoes are most desperately needed. Wider sizes of all kinds of shoes are wanted most.

VALUE OF SECOND-HAND GOODS.

Feed and flour sacks are a most treasured possession in all parts of Europe. With practically no textiles of any sort available, feed sacks, which are worth about 20¢ here are sold for $5 there. They are used for diapers, as well as for towels, bed and table linen, handkerchiefs and underwear.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

I have only a few minutes in which to write for I've a million more things to do tonight.

Yesterday, when we awoke in this town we found ice upon the ground! Ice on the wires, the twigs, the limbs, the trees! When we looked down our street it was just like a scene from a Christmas card our eyes to greet. All day the icy cases clung where tiny hedge berries hung. Last night we went to bed and slept. Lo! this morning when we awoke the ice was gone as if a joke; the freeing rain that fell at night had washed it all out of sight. Today our skies were very blue with fleecy clouds against the blue of snowy white. The wind blew very cold from some far mountain peak.

The weather reporter says that tomorrow will be clear and warmer here! We are glad for such a day. Now we may take our little children, dear, to church where they may hear the Christmas carols, sweet and clear—there they shall see again the three Wise Men, Mary bend above her child, shepherds on the hillside wild. Once more our hearts as gifts we bring, to the Babe who is our King.

May peace and joy your path attend each day as through life you wind.

BOSSY MOTHERS.

By SARA EMERALD NELSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

On returning home after a week's absence, I was positively elated to see how nice our home looked. The floors were polished, and both the kitchen range and the kettle singing upon it were models of cleanliness.

When I extended congratulations to my young daughter, who had brought about this pleasing state of affairs, my elation vanished, for she frankly explained, "Oh, I like housework when you're not here to boss me." That accusation gave me a sharp twinge. I certainly do not admire bossy individuals, and I had flattered myself that I did not belong in that category, but here was my own daughter placing me there. I decided not to give myself the benefit of the doubt until I was very, very sure that I was not a transgressor along this line.

After carefully watching myself, I discovered I was far from innocent.

I caught myself saying, "Do it like this," "Don't do it that way," "Look out now, you'll break it!" Do those phrases have a familiar ring to you, or are you one of those exemplary mothers who suggests rather than demands a certain line of procedure?

Now, there are children who like to be told exactly how they must approach a piece of work, but most of them do not. The natural, mentally-alive child likes to "try things out" for himself. Of course, in a very young child this inventiveness must not be given too loose a rein, but it seems woefully hard for that group of humans called "mothers" to wake up to the fact that their children swiftly pass from the somewhat helpless little tot stage into that of the adolescent.

Adolescents have been called more harsh names than almost any other group. "Hard-to-manage," "awkward," "know-it-all," "lazy," and "overgrown babies" are just a few of the milder terms. Being in the front row of the guilty, I have come to the conclusion that mothers of teen-age children would do well to view their own behavior critically. They see their offspring rapidly leaving childhood behind; yet they persist in treating them like pre-school toddlers. We do not err on every count, nor all the time; but we do, all too often, make our young people unwilling workers by "bossing" them—as my daughter aptly called it.

Perhaps you will remember—now that you are being reminded—that in your childhood days you longed to do certain things in certain ways, declaring you would do them that way as soon as you were grown up. I think if we adults would let youngsters try out a few of their original ideas in their childhood homes, they would be less prone to indulge in that self-pitying tendency that is another characteristic of the usual adolescent.

I had rather an amusing experience that emphasized this point. One day I tried to interest my daughter in the idea of polishing the floors—promising in exchange to finish making her new dress.

"I'll be glad to," she answered, "if you'll let me do it my own way."

Thinking in my unimaginative adult way that there was only one way to polish a floor, I agreed. How little I knew!

Her way was to apply the wax to the floors and then, to the accompaniment of lively music from the radio, prance all over the surface in her stockinged feet beneath which was a discarded suit of underwear—sliding, slipping and jitterbugging must merrily. I must confess the floors assumed an unusually fine glossy gleam, and my daughter felt that polishing in this way was sport rather than work.

I do not for one minute think she will go through life shining floors in this agile manner. Oh no, some day she will lay aside her youthful buoyancy and take on more dignified methods. But, by letting her try out her way now, she turned a tedious task into a riotous game. It also removed the idea that Mother was a poor sport always wanting to boss—at least I fondly hope it did.

In addition other materials for use on such days as Christmas and Easter are prepared from time to time by the Commission on Worship, and other departments of the Council. For example, the newest addition to the Pamphlet Library on Worship, to be published soon, is one entitled Observing Christmas. A complete catalog of all Federal Council publications may be obtained from the Literature Department.

CONCERNING MINISTERIAL SOCIETIES.

The following is a Resolution adopted by the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches, Grinnell, Iowa, June 24, 1946:

"The General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in session at Grinnell, Iowa, is conscious of the fact that official boards of Congregational Christian Churches are conscientious in facing the problems of their parishes. Therefore, their attention is respectfully called to the fact that the compensation and maintenance now provided our ministry has become a problem of serious concern in our whole fellowship, and in many instances a desperate situation exists.

"Each official board is earnestly requested to consider this question as it applies to its own church.

"The greatly increased cost of living, the relatively low salary now paid the ministry, and the expenses of parish work carried on by the minister have resulted in an alarming number of men, trained and dedicated to the work of the pastorate, being forced to leave the ministry entirely. Others are compelled to seek additional income through supplemental employment. This weakens the church's ministry to its people and the pastor's effectiveness is greatly reduced.

"In reviewing this matter official boards are urged to give immediate consideration, not only to provision for an adequate salary but also for the care of such parish expense as sharing in the minister's annuity, parish travel, church supplies and other items.

"It is recommended that each official board, following such consideration, bring before its congregation a plan of immediate action to correct the situation."

TOWARD PEACE IN THE FAR EAST.

"Armed conflict in China foreshadowed the Second World War, and creates a comparable menace today. It is an integral part of the world-wide complex of tensions which threatens the future of humanity," asserts the statement adopted by the the Biennial Meeting.

The statement listed five Guiding Principles upon which the hope for world order rests. "The Far Eastern settlement:

"1. Must reflect due regard for the moral and material welfare of the peoples directly concerned.

"2. Must safeguard the fundamental rights of the human person.

"3. Must contribute to and be an integral part of a world settlement.

"4. Must provide for that mutuality of interest and creative effort which can increase international understanding and fellowship.

"5. Must encourage the more privileged nations to share their scientific and technical resources with those less privileged."

Full text of the statement may be obtained from the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, at 5c a copy.

True religion is the life we live, not the creed we profess, and some day will be recognized by quality and quantity, and not by brand.

THE AUTHORITY OF JESUS.

LESSON II—JANUARY 12, 1947.

SCRIPTURE TEXT: John 2:1-16.

MEMORY SELECTION: Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.—John 2:5.

Jesus At a Wedding.

He was "no hermit soul that dwelt apart" from the race of men, He did not live in a house by the side of the road—He walked the road with men and went with men and went where men were. The lesson last Sunday made clear the truth that "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among men, and men beheld His glory, and saw that He was full of grace and truth. It is significant that Jesus attended a wedding. It was a gala social affair, and was not primarily a religious occasion. It was a time of merriment and festal spirit. But Jesus was there. He was a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief" but He was also a man of joy and acquainted with the homely good times of life.

And because He was there, the occasion was all the happier and more successful. Jesus always sanctifies the joyous occasions of life. He adds tone to the social gatherings. It would be well if young folks who plan to marry would see to it that the Master was there. All too many weddings are purely secular in setting and in spirit. This does not mean that folks would have to have "a big church wedding." How secular some church weddings are! But it does mean that they would take Christ into their plans and invoke His blessings and His presence at their marriage service.

Water Into Wine.

It is, of course, a sturdy and stubborn fact that Jesus turned the water into wine at the wedding feast in Cana of Galilee. John clearly states that it was the first of His signs or wonders or miracles, which manifested His glory, and helped people to believe on Him. To be sure there is mystery here. But the miracle which He performed, was easy because of the Miracle that He was. Here was the Son of God made flesh and dwelling among men. He is not only "Fairest Lord Jesus" but "He is Ruler of all nature." But here is also a symbol of Christ's transforming power in life. At His touch existence becomes life, life more abundant, life with meaning, and power, and dignity and beauty. Christ exalts everything He touches. He brings forth new creations.

"Hear Ye Him."

"Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." Thus spoke Mary, His mother, to the servants in the house. It was an expression of her confidence in her Son. But it was also a prophetic and authoritative utterance. Christ is the Word of God, the wisdom of God and the power of God. He speaks with authority. And men and nations had best listen to Him, and "do as He says unto them. Tragically always results, sooner or later, when men do not obey Christ. Alas, for the man who does not follow the light as it is in Christ Jesus.

THANK-YOU LETTERS BY THE DOZEN.

From every country into which Church World Service goods have gone, come thank-you letters by the dozen. People who have lost all their possessions, pastors, refugees, write their thanks. Recently, at Church World Service, 37 East 36th Street, New York, a merchant sailor from Holland came in to deliver his personal thanks for the things his family had received from the Protestant Churches of America. The widow of a noted ethnologist writes, "Since I lost my property and had only what I wore, I have had only the help of the gifts you sent, one skirt and blouse, one hand and shoulder warmer, one pair of black stockings, one nightgown and a green silk dress." From Bremen, a young girl writes, "A great joy was granted me because I was given a mantel, a dress and a jacket."

NOVEMBER RECEIPTS.

During the month of November a total of 45,567 pounds of relief goods was received from the State of Virginia at the Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland. It consisted of 36,495 pounds of clothing and 8,479 was food.

Our acts should be such as to bear recording, for recorded they will be. We must live as under the immediate eye of God and as in the blaze of the great all-revealing day.

MISSIONS IN LATIN AMERICA.

not enough," he declared, "unless they are accompanied by social amelioration."

Most Ecuadorian Indians, said Dr. Mackay, are held in abject slavery by a few wealthy landowners who "see to it that they remain in subjugation." They are also victims of a tradition of drunkenness, he added, which makes it socially incumbent on a man to become a braggart and a bully while under the influence of liquor.

The United Andean Indian Mission was incorporated one year ago under the sponsorship of the board of foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.; the Foreign Missionary Society of the United Brethren in Christ; the executive committee of foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S.; and the board of International Missions of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

The mission recently purchased a farm in the Northern part of Ecuador which is currently serving 16,000 Indians within a five mile radius. The project is staffed by Dr. Earl C. Merriek, director, and two full-time missionaries: the Rev. and Mrs. Paul H. Streich.

According to Dr. W. Stanley Croft, secretary of the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America of the Foreign Missions Conference, the Andean mission will help the Indians with "improved agricultural methods and in every aspect of their home, family and community life."

"The farm," he said, "will be a center for medical work, educational activities and religious work with special attention to training Indian church leaders."

Plans are already underway, he stated, to expand the work into Peru and Bolivia.

PROGRESS BY FORGETTING, PRESSING FORWARD, AND RETENTION.

By REV. C. SHANNON MORGAN.

"Brethren, I do not consider that I have made it my own; but one thing I do, forgetting what lies behind and straining forward to what lies ahead, I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus. . . . Only let us hold true to what we have attained."—Philippians 3:13, 14, 16.

With the passing of 1946 and the coming of 1947 we are forced to realize that time ushers us onward. Living as we are in a perpetually changing world we know that we are going somewhere—upward or downward, forward or backward. No one remains as he is.

Consequently, since we are ever being pushed onward in time, the better judgment is to go upward instead of downward, forward instead of backward. Time cries out, "Forward, march!" Progress is the watchword.

I propose to indicate that we can advance only as we hold to the abiding, unchanging truths which we have attained, but we must forget some things and launch out into the unknown and try something new. Paul furnishes us with a ready text: "Brethren, I do not consider that I have made it my own; but one thing I do, forgetting what lies behind and straining forward to what lies ahead, I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus. . . . Only let us hold true to what we have attained."

Paul has something to forget. He seeks to advance by forgetting what "lies behind." Here Paul employs the present participle of the verb "to forget," which signifies that his forgetting is ceaseless and continuous. Since Paul is using the metaphor of a race he is saying that as he runs, as he presses forward, he forgets. Each achievement is discarded from memory the moment it is accomplished.

When Paul had become a Christian, he had counted everything as a loss that he might gain Christ. He had forgotten his legal heritage as a Jew insofar as that heritage justified him as a Christian. In his pre-Christian experience he had much to be proud of. He had been circumcised on the eighth day after birth (Philippians 3:5). Being circumcised on the eighth day indicates that Paul was a native-born Jew (Genesis 17:12); his parents were not heathen. He belonged to the race of Israel (Philippians 3:5); that is, his parents were not proselytes, for he was of direct Israelitic descent. His ancestry was of the favored tribe of Benjamin. Benjamin was the son of Jacob's beloved wife, Rachel (Genesis 35:16-18). The name Benjamin itself means "son-of-my-right-hand." Benjamin was the only son of Jacob born in the Land of Promise. At the time of the Division of the Hebrew Commonwealth only the tribe of Benjamin remained faithful to Judah (I Kings 12:21). After the return from the Exile, the tribe of Benjamin alone with Judah composed the nucleus of the new colonization in Palestine (Ezra 4:1). The first king of the nation was Saul, who was of the tribe of Benjamin (Acts 13:21); and Paul himself had been named after this Benjaminitic king (Acts 13:9). Paul was rightly proud that he belonged to the tribe of Benjamin. Paul was a Hebrew born of Hebrews (Philippians 3:5); that is, his family continued to use Hebrew or Aramaic as their language. By choice in regards to the Law of Paul had been a Pharisee (Philippians 3:5). Could anyone have been more devoted to the Law? But Paul had become a Christian, and he counted all this a loss; he even changed his name from Saul to Paul. He forgot that he might gain Christ.

Paul was also forgetting as he ran in his Christian course. He had forgotten the five times he had received thirty-nine lashes at the hand of the Jews, the three times he had been beaten with rods by the Romans, the one time he had been stoned at Lystra, the three times he had been shipwrecked, the night and day he had been adrift at sea; he had also forgotten the other dangers he had passed through on his journeys—danger from rivers, robbers, Jews, Gentiles, cold, and danger from lack of nourishment (I Corinthians 11:24-28).

But not only was the Apostle Paul "forgetting what lies behind;" he was "straining forward to what lies ahead." In the Christian race he was stretching forward that he might attain. As Bengel said, "The eye outstrips and draws on the hand, the hand outstrips and draws on the foot." He was stretching "for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus." "The prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus" indicates that there is something to attain. Progress is made by forgetting some things, trying and attaining new goals, but Paul warns us, "Only let us hold true to what we have attained." Some things are to be thrown off, others retained, and still others tried for the first time.

Paul here gets hold of a universal truth that we would do well to heed. The concept of God the Father, the greatest achievement in our religion, was attained by Paul's method. Primitive ideas of God were being continually forgotten, new concepts were ventured, but the best in the old was retained. Listen to Dr. Fosdick's summary of that truth as it relates to the concept of God:

"Beginning with a storm god on a desert mountain, it ends with men saying, 'God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship in spirit and truth.'"

"Beginning with a tribal war god, leading his devotees to bloody triumph over their foes, it ends with men seeing that 'God is love; and he that abideth in love abideth in God, and God abideth in him.'"

"Beginning with a territorial deity who loved his clansmen and hated the remainder of mankind, it ends with a great multitude out of every tribe and tongue and people and nation, worshipping one universal Father."

"Beginning with a god who walked in a garden in the cool of the day or who showed his back to Moses as a special favor, it ends with the God whom 'no man hath seen . . . at any time' and in whom 'we live, and move, and have our being.'"

"Beginning with a god who commanded the slaughter of infants and sucklings without mercy, it ends with the God whose will it is that not 'one of these little ones should perish.'"

"Beginning with a god from whom at Sinai the people shrank in fear, saying, 'Let not God speak with us, lest we die,' it ends with the God to whom one prays in the solitary place and whose indwelling spirit is our unseen friend."

"Beginning with a god whose highest social vision was a tribal victory, it ends with the God whose worshippers pray for a world-wide kingdom of righteousness and peace."

This truth is as plain as your hand.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The children at the Christian orphanage had the happiest Christmas they have ever had. Every child was well and in good health. Every child was in a happy mood. If a single word was said, or anything done that would have marred the joy of Christmas, it has not been called to the writer's attention.

On Monday night before Christmas the Burlington Church invited all of them down to the church for a Christmas picnic and to "Santa." The people in the town of Elon College were very kind and considerate, and furnished their cars to carry them down to the church and back. All the children went. One matron from each building went to look after the little fellows. The children reported a very happy time and said the Burlington people certainly did give them a good time.

A number of our churches sent in a present for each child, besides the many presents that were sent in from individuals. Then to make their joy more complete, Mr. and Mrs. Allen Gant presented each child with a chocolate bar with a brand new one-dollar bill attached. I wish they could have been present when the writer presented the present to them and saw the beautiful smile of real joy that played on their faces. It was happiness in the fullest degree.

The toy dealers sent in toys up to 10:00 o'clock Christmas eve night. Toys of all kinds, to please little children. Our good friend, C. H. Darden, paid us a visit Sunday before Christmas and brought oranges, apples, raisins and a lot of good candy, which the children have enjoyed immensely. Candy has been hard to get for some time, and the children were overjoyed to get it.

No child at the Christian orphanage can truthfully say he, or she, did not have a good time and a happy Christmas.

All the people and friends have been exceedingly kind in every way and did all in their power to give the children a very happy Christmas for which the writer is very grateful.

CHURCH WORLD SERVICE CENTER AT NEW WINDSOR.

The Church World Service Center at New Windsor, Maryland, is one of nine centers operated in the United States for the 26 major Protestant denominations which comprise Church World Service. In the buildings of the old Blue Ridge College, here, more than one hundred people work together on the jobs necessary to process and ship relief goods, as well as keep people all over this area informed about the work being done. The cost of processing at New Windsor is about 5c a pound, a low figure made possible because about 40 per cent of those working at New Windsor are volunteers.

SUN'S PULPIT.

A little child learns that two plus two equals five; but since that is incorrect, he must forget it and reach out for the new, correct answer, for two plus two equals four. But all the time he retained his two plus two.

Sailboats crossed the Atlantic in Columbus' day, but now they are forgotten, because science pressed on and achieved the ocean liner. Nevertheless the ocean liner retains the fact that it floats on the water as did the sailboat.

In this New Year let us grasp this universal truth. Let us strive to forget our overt and secret sins of the past and enter the race to overcome them, holding fast to the idea that "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Let us forget our race hatred and launch out into inter-racial cooperation, holding fast to the fact that we are all of one blood and children of the same God. Let us forget our selfish nationalism and press on to international creative accommodation, holding fast to the idea of one world and the destructiveness of atomic energy.

But even as we are forgetting one year and are pressing into another year, let us remember that we shall be confronted with new ideas, new powers, and new possibilities. The best hopes of our personalities, of our church, of our community, of our nation, and of our world cannot be realized except as these new ideas, new powers, and new possibilities are converted, baptized, Christianized, and harnessed for the good of mankind. Let us remember that:

New occasions teach new duties;
Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still, and onward,
Who would keep abreast of Truth;
Lo, before us gleam her camp-fires!
We, ourselves, must Pilgrims be,
Launch our Mayflower, and steer boldly
Through the desperate winter sea,
Nor attempt the Future's portal
With the Past's blood-rusted key.

"Brethren, I do not consider that I have made it my own; but one thing I do, forgetting what lies behind and straining forward to what lies ahead, I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus. . . . Only let us hold true to what we have attained."

Do not attempt to do a thing unless you are sure of yourself; but do not relinquish it simply because someone else is not sure of you.

In Memoriam

CATHER.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cather, wife of E. W. Cather, died at her home in Winchester, Va., December 6, 1946, after a lingering illness. Mrs. Cather and her husband were among the charter members of the Winchester Church and have been loyal supporters through all the years of its existence.

God blessed the home with ten children—nine sons and one daughter. All except one, Lt.-Col. Leo Cather, now stationed with the Army of Occupation in Germany, were present for the funeral service. Eight sons of the deceased served as active pall bearers.

The last rites were conducted in the church Sunday afternoon, December 8, by the Rev. W. T. Walters, D.D., a former pastor and organizer and builder of the Winchester Church, and the pastor. The large congregation present for the service bore testimony to the esteem in which Mrs. Cather was held. Members of her family will miss her but all rejoice in her triumph and humbly bow to the will of our heavenly Father who doeth all things well.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

NEWMAN.

We, the members of the Deacon Board of the First Congregational Christian Church, Henderson, North Carolina, wish to pay a loving tribute to the memory of our dear friend, and co-worker, Deacon Clarence D. Newman.

Our church has lost an efficient worker, the wife a devoted husband, the children a kind father, the mother a loving son, and the community a true friend.

We are deeply grieved by his going, yet we humbly bow in submission to our Father's will, knowing that in that heavenly home, where all is bright and fair, he who loved beauty and was so devoted to his church, and so loyal to his family will continue to live.

ANDES.

On October 28, 1946, Antioch Christian Church lost one of its most faithful and devoted members in the passing of Mrs. Barbara Andes. She united with the church July 12, 1879, and had been an active soldier of the Cross since that time.

Mrs. Andes had been in declining health for a number of year, but was able to attend church after her ninety-first birthday.

One brother, a sister, three children, eight grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren survive. One son, Rev. Alfred W. Andes, died in 1936.

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God, who doeth all things well.
2. That we express our deep sense of loss and our gratitude for the fine Christian spirit she lived in our midst.
3. That we extend our heart-felt sympathy to the members of the family, and pray that God's comforting spirit will sustain them in their sorrow.

Mrs. Carry Berry passed to her reward August 2, 1946. She was a member of Antioch Christian Church since 1894, and has been a faithful member. She was a devoted wife and mother.

BE IT RESOLVED:

"The Churches in America During the Biennium"

Excerpts from an Address

By DR. F. ERNEST JOHNSON

Before the Meeting of the Federal Council at Seattle, Washington

We can demonstrate that with all the shortcomings of Protestantism, to which attention is currently called—the very awareness of which is an element of strength—it has a spiritual and institutional vitality that make it worthy of our loyalty.

A study of the membership trend between 1926, the last year for which a dependable federal census of religious bodies is available, and 1943-44, showed that the Protestant bodies which had as many as 50,000 members in either or both of those years increased by about 36.5 per cent during the period. The estimated population growth was 17.9 per cent. There is reason to think that the rate of growth has accelerated in the subsequent two years.

It has just been announced by the United Setwardship Council that 26 Protestant denominations in the United States and Canada contributed nearly $614,000,000 to local church expenses and benevolences during the past year. This is 19 per cent more than the previous high mark recorded by the Council in 1929 and a 20 per cent increase over the previous year.

One of the most significant factors is the revival of interest in corporate worship. This biennium gives evidence that the worship movement is no mere fad, but that it has struck deep into the heart of Protestantism.

In their ministry to persons our churches are capitalizing the new knowledge of the art of personal counselling. This development has been greatly stimulated by the impact of the pressing needs of returning service men. Ministers have been availing themselves of the results of frontier work in the field of religion and mental health. An authentic discipline is developing here, which is not mere pseudopsychiatry. The pastoral office is being strengthened by the work of science without losing its distinctive character.

The week-day (released-time) religious education movement is going forward at a remarkable rate. Week-day classes are reported in 2,000 communities, with all but two states represented, and an enrollment of over a million and a half.

Three significant developments in evangelism appear to be under way at the present time: (1) toward inclusiveness of the evangelistic appeal, in recognition of the unity of life; (2) toward parish-centered evangelistic endeavor, making the appeal indigenous and sustained; (3) toward lay visitation evangelism, taking the appeal of Christianity into the home and capitalizing in true Protestant fashion the initiative and resources of the layman.

If one may judge from our current literature, from conference programs, and from the agenda and pronouncements of official assemblies, there is in evidence no substantial recession in social concern. Less sureness about specific social programs there certainly is, but not, I think, any weakening of conviction that the Christian gospel is profoundly relevant to the social order. The net result seems to have been to correct superficial optimism, to create a new awareness of the Christian's involvement in social sin.

The work of rehabilitating the missionary service in foreign lands has begun with vigor. Hundreds of missionaries, irked by enforced and protracted furloughs, are now leaving for their fields.

It would be difficult to find a parallel to what has been achieved in the linking together of Christian testimony and practical statesmanship in an effort to build a new concept of world order and a new kind of political cooperation at the international level. The thinking of churchmen has contributed directly to the planning of the United Nations and to the molding of national policy in relation to it.

With 156 city and county church councils having employed executives and 440 having voluntary leadership, and with inclusive councils operating in 35 states, the new "conciliar" movement is now well established.

A Prayer

By GITANJALI ROBINDRANATH TAGORE

Where the mind is without fear and the head is held high;
Where knowledge is free;
Where the world has not been broken up into fragments by narrow domestic walls;
Where words come out from the depth of truth;
Where tireless striving stretches its arms towards perfection;
Where the clear stream of reason has not lost its way into the dreary desert sand of dead habit;
Where the mind is led forward by Thee into ever-widening thought and action—
Into that heaven of freedom, my Father, let my country awake.

This is my prayer to Thee, my Lord—strike, strike at the root of penury in my heart.
Give me the strength lightly to bear my joys and sorrows.
Give me the strength to make my love fruitful in service.
Give me the strength never to disown the poor or bend my knees before insolent might.
Give me the strength to raise my mind high above daily trifles.
And give me the strength to surrender my strength to Thy will with love.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Services from the Norfolk Christian Temple may be heard over Station WRVA, in Richmond, during January.

C. Shannon Morgan presented his resignation as pastor of Happy Home Church on Sunday, January 5—giving the church a ninety-day notice. He has accepted the call to the group of churches at Windsor, Va. The group includes Antioch, Isle of Wight, Mt. Carmel and Windsor.

Nearly $6,000,000 was spent during 1946 for social work activities by thirteen denominational boards affiliated with the Home Missions Council of North America, it was reported at the opening session of the organization at Buck Hill Falls, Pa. The Council represents twenty-three major Protestant denominations in the field of home missions.

Following is an excerpt from a personal letter from Dr. H. S. Hardcastle to the Managing Editor: "I came over for my first service today, and was greeted by a splendid congregation that warmed my heart, and we had a good service. We will move on Thursday of this week, and I am eager to start to work over here. Jesse has done a great work here, and I have entered into a good heritage. May the coming years authenticate the wisdom of our choice of each other." We wish for the church at Newport News and its pastor a goodly future.

PASTOR MARTIN NIEMOELLER.

Niemöller is more than a former U-boat commander—more than pastor of the largest Lutheran Church in Germany—more than head of the Free Churches of Germany—more than a man whom Hitler couldn't conquer.

Niemöller is a near-martyr and a full saint. His eight years' imprisonment, half of it in solitary confinement, was a most exacting test of the quality of his faith. The fact that three of his sons were killed in the war and one is still in a concentration camp in Russia, would embitter any whose faith was not deep and real.

Niemöller is a symbol of triumphant faith. He is an incarnation of the central thesis of our religion. He has proved that there is an infinite resource which through faith and works can be brought to satisfy every human need. He told me, personally, that he would not change a single thing that has happened in the last decade—that his present faith is worth all it cost in suffering. What a witness!

Niemöller is a symbol of ecumenical Christianity. He feels that the hope of the world is in a Christianity which is devoted to the gospel of Christ instead of the teachings of Robinson, Luther, Calvin, Wesley or some other denominational leader. He is a factor of importance in the World Council of Churches. With the weight of humanity's woes heavy upon his heart, he realistically evaluates the impact of a divided church upon world trends of paganism and apostasy.

Niemöller, with his wonderfully inspiring wife, is presently touring the nation, speaking to overflow audiences everywhere. Those who hear him testify that his experience is unique and its effect is lasting.

Niemöller is a practical illustration of a too-often nebulous principle. He makes real the thing we too often limit to creeds and churches. If the power of God through the revelation of Jesus Christ could sustain Niemöller through his eight years of terror and bring him out sweet-spirited and unvengeful—that power can meet the needs of any of us and Niemöller, in effect, dares us to try it.—James W. Fifield, Jr.

IN MEMORIAM.

COLONEL JUNIUS E. WEST.
July 16, 1866—January 1, 1947.

Colonel J. E. West lived and labored among us, and has now gone to his reward. It is not possible to estimate the contribution which he made to the church of which he was a member. The Associated Press, in the account of the death of Colonel West, noted the zeal and constancy with which he worked for the social and economic welfare of his state. He manifested the same loyalty and faith manifested the same loyalty and faithfulness in his labors for the Kingdom of Christ. Colonel West was interested in every phase of church work; but because of his interest and official position on the Mission Board, his contribution to missions was most evident to the casual observer.

The Executive Board of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, by vote, wishes to express its grateful appreciation for the notable life and service of Colonel West; and to express to the beeraved family the loving sympathy of the entire Church Fellowship.

W. MILLARD STEVENS,
STANLEY C. HARRELL,
For Executive Committee,
The Southern Convention.

January 7, 1947.

God, being infinite, can never be fully comprehended by our minds; whatever thought of Him be there, His real nature must still transcend: there will yet be deep after deep beyond, within that Light ineffable; and what we see, compared to what we do not see, will be as the rain-drop to the firmament.

—Martineau.

IN MEMORY OF COLONEL WEST.

Let a note of victory and triumph be sounded as we sit together in this sacred place. It was at the close of the life of our Lord Jesus Christ when He said, "Father, . . . I have glorified Thee on earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do." He looked upon His life as a divine and holy gift. He had set His heart to it. And now it was completed.

It was for mortal man—Saul of Tarsus—coming under the sway of the Christ and feeling the power of His Spirit, also to look upon life as a mission of service to others, to say when his life was done: "I am now ready . . . the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not for me only, but unto all them that love His appearing."

The newspapers, the radio, and countless friends have spoken of the going of this nobleman—as they have expressed it, "full of years—and full of honors." Already they have told of his life's work as a statesman, and as a business man. It is only fitting that here we should mention his life long devotion to his Lord, and to his beloved church. It is here best known that from the earliest years of his vigorous, talented manhood, the first love of his life, excepting only the primary love of home, was his church. For more than fifty years he was a faithful Sunday school teacher, and a regular attendant upon all the services of his church, whether it be his local church, or Conference or Convention. Long since his gifts and contributions for all enterprises of his local church and denomination were taken for granted, and his liberality was never questioned. The highest honors of his local church, as well as of his Conference and Convention were placed upon him, as well as many of its most strategic tasks and burdens. Both alike he bore with equal grace and fortitude. A special issue of his church paper was dedicated to him, as a Christian layman, several years ago. To him life seemed a daring adventure for his Lord and his church, as well as a sacred trust to serve his fellowmen, and to which trust his soul never yielded defeat. A citizen of his home community and a member of another church wrote of him while he was yet living: "His Christian character, his love for his fellow citizens, his fidelity to the causes of good, his high sense of integrity and his standards of personal honor, have made him a citizen of which his city is proud and whom his people love."

Truly, like the apostle of old, he could say: "I am now ready . . . the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

It was Whittier who wrote:

I dimly guess from blessings known,
Of greater out of sight;
And, with the chastened psalmist, own
His judgments, too, are right.
And if my heart and flesh are weak
To bear an untried pain,
The bruised reed He will not break,
But strengthen and sustain.

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.
And so beside the silent sea
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from Him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.
And Thou, O Lord, by Whom are seen
Thy creatures as they be,
Forgive me if too close I lean
My human heart on Thee.

And may God bless us all.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

". . . AND YE CLOTHED ME."

"A new and terrible catastrophe threatens millions of starving people in the war-stricken countries. They are without shelter, wretchedly clad and have little resistance to disease and epidemics. Weakened by constant privations these masses will be quite incapable of winning through the winter unless they receive substantial help and relief from abroad . . ." begins an urgent cablegram from seven relief agencies, including the World Council of Churches. It remains for the people of the United States to meet this challenge. The stopping of UNRRA operations in 1947 means that relief on an international scale is at an end. The greater part of the burden rests on the private relief agencies in this country. Church World Service, overseas relief organization of twenty-six Protestant denominations, was formed last year to help meet the emergency needs of countries crippled by war. Now, in spite of a year's hard work, in spite of tons of food and other materials shipped to dozens of lands overseas, observers abroad say that this winter will be the worst yet in many places.

It is not difficult to understand that one year's time is not enough to restore destroyed factories, rebuild bombed cities, recondition farm lands, and put national economies on a firm basis. Food and fuel shortages, absence of farm machinery or draft animals, and a critical shortage of manpower, especially in the former enemy countries have all hampered efforts toward rehabilitation and self-sufficiency. Food and clothing are strictly rationed, and soaring prices keep most people from getting even the barest necessities. Reports from Poland and Germany indicate that common laborers earn just about enough to buy bread for themselves and their families.

Since practically no textiles have been manufactured in Europe for five years, clothing is scarce and expensive, and whatever people have is well-worn if not worn out. Letters from almost every country in Europe repeat the story of need. From Norway a mother writes: "We have four boys. It has been very poor for us but we have managed to get over these dark days. Most of our clothes are worn out and it is hard to get anything as clothes are still on the ration list." An Italian school teacher tells how they live: "I am out of work, because in Italy teachers are many and schools are few. I am in a small mountain locality where much snow falls in the winter, which keeps us close to the hearth. . . . Often we remain in bed all day to keep warm as clothing is scarce."

The shortage of food is taking a costly toll in the health of all populations where rations are cut below the minimum and diets are unbalanced. Tuberculosis is spreading rapidly. In the British Zone of Germany alone between 260,000 and 400,000 cases are reported. There are thousands of cases of hunger edema, a disease caused by prolonged hunger and malnutrition, which results in painful swelling. The infant mortality rate in some districts has risen one hundred per cent. Everywhere production schedules are delayed because of illness among the workers. The coal production in the valuable Ruhr mines has dropped off to such an extent that shipments to Italy have had to be stopped and exports to France and the rest of Europe have been cut drastically. Food reserves are not expected to last the winter. The American Military Government for Austria has announced that at the present rate of 1,550 calo-

A VOICE FROM GERMANY.

"God's word has not let us down," was the testimony of Martin Niemoeller, the German pastor who is now making a tour of American cities and churches. Pastor Niemoeller spoke to a vast congregation in Richmond on Sunday. This man's faith was tested by eight years of suffering in concentration camps, four of which were in solitary confinement.

To what Scripture would a man cling in such an experience? What is faith's common-denominator in such a long period of trial and testing? Niemoeller found refuge and strength in the Sermon on the Mount, the beatitudes: "The meek shall inherit the earth." This divine promise has been vindicated in the experience of this prisoner-pastor. His testimony continues: "Hitler believed that he would inherit the earth. He proclaimed himself 'sent of God' to 'replenish the earth and subdue it.' Like all other conquerors, Hitler misunderstood. God didn't create the world to be conquered, but to be inherited by those whom he wants to have it. Hence, the mighty Hitler was outmatched and outlived by the meek of the earth. A church which remained a church couldn't avoid attacking Hitler and being attacked by him. Yes, the Nazis broke our organizations, and their war resulted in the destruction of church buildings, but they only strengthened and increased the congregations as communities of believers."

The experiences of Niemoeller remind us that "the word of God is not bound." While in prison he read the Scriptures aloud as prisoners marched by his cell. He said the seed of God's Kingdom were alive in all of the camps—the last place in which Hitler expected them to thrive. Church buildings have been destroyed, but there are thousands of active churches without church buildings as in the days of primitive Christianity.

On July 1, 1937, at the personal order of Adolf Hitler, the Gestapo arrested Niemoeller, pastor of the powerful Jesus Christ Church in Berlin-Dahlem. He was first "removed" from his pulpit for an article attacking Hitler's treatment of the Jews which he wrote for the publication, "The Young Church." Although at one time Niemoeller was misled by certain factors that he considered idealistic in the Nazi program, he was one of the first Germans to see through the paganism and brutality which Hitler introduced after obtaining power. He organized and led anti-Nazi forces which grew to national proportions. This group took the name "Confessional Church" because they based their stand on the historic creeds or confessions and refused any admixture of ideology. In November of 1945, Pastor and Mrs. Niemoeller revisited the Dachau Camp and paused to read a sign erected by the American Army: "In this crematorium 238,756 human beings were cremated since 1938." At that time the Confessional pastor renewed his pledge to preach guilt and the need of forgiveness. This past October he declared in Berlin: "When in the midst of a Christian people 6,000,000 persons are deliberately murdered only because they belong to another race, no one can maintain that guilt is not a fearful reality." Concurrent with his first trip to America, Harper and Brothers has published his Dachau Sermons which were delivered to his fellow prisoners at this notorious concentration camp, preceding his release by American forces.

THE FRUIT OF SOLITUDE.

Samuel Rogers, in his Human Life, spoke of being "Never less alone than when alone." This is one of the beautiful paradoxes of the life of the spirit. That which is foolishness to the world is wisdom to the saints. One may be an introvert without being morbid. The labyrinth of the inner world is not fully explored so long as one is preoccupied with the crowd. Advocates of "one world at a time" are strangely unaware of a vast world of reality which impinges upon our temporal world.

"Never less alone than when alone." This is the unanimous testimony of the saints. Solitude is peopled with a great cloud of witnesses. Solitude gives the opportunity to practice the communion of the saints. Solitude enables one to learn that "the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are unseen are eternal."

Alone? A child of God can never be alone, "for thou art with me!" The beautiful companionship of Him who said, "I will not leave you alone," is our surety against loneliness. For this reason communion is life's best commentary, solitude is the solution of life's ultimate problems.

R. L. H.

In all the affairs of human life, social as well as political, courtesies of a small and trivial character are the ones that strike deepest to the grateful and appreciating heart.—Henry Clay.

Christ didn't waste His time trying to change the social order. Christ spent all His time fighting sin. Therefore it behooves the witnesses of Christ to say that we do not have to abolish capitalism and establish socialism or communism, that sin can flourish under those systems as well. Christianity is not opposed to any social order, but to sin.—John H. McComb, D.D.

"Christ's vital principle of social and national development is the direct opposite of those motive impulses so insidiously interpenetrating the life of modern society. It begins at the root of things, far back of the motives upon which history is built. It is the violated principle of life—the Law of Love brought back to earth, and manifest in His person, through His sacrifice, and in His blood of the New Covenant; which is to become the life-blood of humanity."—Selected.

“The Faith That Sustains Me”

By PASTOR MARTIN NIEMOELLER

Address Made at the Biennial Meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at Seattle, Washington

I know very well that this invitation to address such a great Christian gathering means a good deal and is by no means a matter of course. Even though I am looked upon as a victim of National Socialism, the fact remains that I can't cease being a member of my German nation and that I signed the Stuttgart declaration, thereby affirming my personal share in the joint liability of my nation just now in its present state of guilt and contempt. This being so, your invitation shows that there is a bridge that overcomes the gulf by which our nation is separated from the rest of the human world. I do not need to say who is the constructor of this bridge and how He has brought it about. But I must say: in thanking you I thank Him for inviting and encouraging me to cross the bridge and to be in your midst. Thus my being here emphasizes the ecumenical vitality of the universal church in our times.

In the last twelve years God has taught us more than one lesson which may also prove instructive for the Christian Churches abroad, and so I shall try to give you an impression of what has happened and what is happening in the Evangelical Church in Germany. In doing so I am convinced that St. Paul is right in writing to the Corinthians: “Those members of the body, which seem feeble, are necessary.” The Church in Germany is a feeble member of the body. Nevertheless, the Lord, as the Head, may use it for the common benefit, in spite of and even by its deficiencies. For this we hope and pray.

It is well known that through the whole period of the Nazi regime a war raged between the totalitarian state and the Christian Churches. This “church struggle” has been understood as a political battle. And so it was. The Churches (that means for Germany the Evangelical and the Roman Catholic) were the two big organizations left that did not surrender to Hitler's claim to unrestricted control of public life. The churches took their stand for freedom of conviction and religious liberty. Moreover, the churches had to bear witness to the validity of God's commandments and of Christian moral standards both for the individual and the social life of the nation. This war could not be avoided and had to be fought to the end, until either the state renounced its totalitarian claim on the very souls of its subjects or the churches revoked the binding character of God's will for human life.

Today that is easy to see, after the history of Naziism has come to an end and the whole plan underlying its development has been revealed. But there were several factors which, as long as the Nazis were in power, made it difficult to recognize their real intentions. In the first period, there was the genuine enthusiasm of the masses; in the second, the veiled propaganda misleading public opinion; and during the last years, it was bare terror, the efficiency of which nobody can imagine who has not gone through it himself.

Therefore, it was always a small minority only who came to see the issue and who took part in the struggle. I remember how often and to what an extent we became afraid when mustering the dwindling troops of a few thousand ministers and congregations, fighting on our side. Strange to say, Hitler was never strong enough to overcome them. Thus we were given a new understanding of what the Lord said unto Gideon: “The people that are with thee are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, Mine own hand saved me.” I think that has been a lesson from God. And we are badly in need of it, all of us, and not only the Christian Church in Germany. We have become accustomed to thinking in numbers and to measuring success by figures. Of course, we may be grateful to God if it pleases Him to let us see through figures the effect of His word and work; but we must not despair when He prefers to do otherwise. Looking back upon God's guidance through those years of hardship and struggle we are bound to testify: “Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only does wondrous things,” the same Lord who said in the days of St. Paul, “My strength is made perfect in thy weakness.”

In this connection I should like to stress another point. When in 1933 the spirit of treachery spread over all the established territorial churches of German Protestantism it made no difference to which confessional denomination those churches belonged. Christians who became Nazi and took to the Nazi religion (the so-called “German Christians”) were to be found amongst Lutherans as well as Reformed and members of the Lutheran-Reformed Union. God has not honored one single denomination by making it the stronghold of Christian resistance; instead He condescended to choose a remnant in each church body to perform this. When we came to know each other we found that we came from all different sorts of creeds and churches.

Actually, we had no time to ponder the question whether we were entitled to join in a common witness according to the articles of faith, legalized by our respective denominations. We felt summoned to open our lips and proclaim what God wanted us to speak. We experienced an absolutely new communion, not planned nor made by ourselves, but a gift of God, given to us by His grace, a miracle and wonder in itself. It was to this entirely new communion that we gave the name “the Confessing Church,” because it came into existence the very moment when we thought of nothing else but confessing obediently what we were told by the word of God.

It was only many years later that we realized this new communion to be an ecumenical church, binding together members of various denominations into one brotherhood. You may have heard that this “Confessing Church” was governed by Councils of Brethren, and you may understand by now that this name was not chosen by chance, but in order to glorify God for His unspeakable gift: the new ecumenical and brotherly communion. In this way we learned our second lesson, the lesson that God is free and at liberty to bestow His spirit and life wherever He will. “The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is everyone that is born of the Spirit.”

Through centuries we have lived on in the solitary confinement of our denominational seclusion, not believing that the barriers could be cast down and not even allowing God to do so. But God does not heed our allowing or forbidding; for He Himself is the Lord and does as seems pleasing unto Him. To us, the Confessing Church, He has given a new and genuine communion of ecumenical character, and we dare hope that He will do the same all over the world, and that He by His Spirit may consummate our poor beginnings of ecumenical work and regenerate His churches into the one, living Church, the true body of Christ.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Few people realize how much it takes to minister to the comfort of a bereaved family and church in the hour of sorrow. One of the things that repays and rebuilds the pastor is the feeling that he has stood beside his dear friends in their hour of need. Few people realize how much this means to the minister. God has given him a sacred trust there, and the heart of the minister seeks faithfully to fill it.

The flowers at Col. J. E. West's funeral in his church today were beautiful. They remain before my eyes. There were so many of them, and with the rain pouring down outside, the air full of moisture, it seemed as though every flower was challenged to pour forth its freshest beauty and sweetest fragrance. They were beautiful. They had been so well arranged in such good sequence that they gave a peace and a joy beyond my words to portray. I should like to read every card that was upon them. I would find flowers from boards of deacons beyond this church. There would be flowers from the rich and the poor, city and country, Church and State, organizations and classes, and boards, and institutions—what a story of love and friendship they were there to tell! Hundreds of people looked upon them, and many of us saw beyond leaf, and fern, and flower to the wealth of affection which they represented.

But I want, too, to mention the large class of women who braved the winter rain to stand in place in honored memory of their beloved teacher. As I looked at them I could see the busy statesman in Richmond in other years hurrying back to Suffolk Sundays to teach them. How he loved them, and praised them—and how they returned in tenderness every word of his praise. There, too, was his choir—I say his choir because as chairman of the music committee for so long all the choirs were his choirs—they were there to sing as he would want them to sing. And his fellow deacons were there, and members of the board of trustees of Elon College, and his fellow Rotarians were there almost to a man, his fellow church members who knew his loyalty and love for his church, and our ministers were there for they recognized in him a truly great layman and a warm friend.

No wonder the flowers were beautiful, and his family and loved ones were comforted. He had had convictions, and along with his convictions courage to stand up and fight for them, and talent with which to fight well, and a good heart with which to fight clean. Unto the last of his long years he gave of his best to his country and to the Church.

A PRAYER FOR 1947.

By H. C. Churchman.

I pray, good God, for soul-content,
A smile to meet each day's advent,
A heart dependable and true,
A will to fight each battle through;
Each day I'd rise with thoughts serene,
To meet my task with vision keen,
And though the sun should fill the morn,
Or clouds should make the day forlorn,
I pray, good God that by Thy art
The sun may shine within my heart.
And passing shadows life shall bring
I pray may leave no lasting sting,
But merely help me better know
The meaning of my neighbor's woe.
And as I take my humble way
Along the path that Thou didst lay,
I would that I might gladness lend,
A word, a thought unto a friend.
Then when the final night shall fall,
And close my eyes upon it all,
I pray I leave no guilt nor guile, areas of America, is desperately needed if this country is to become Christian in "anything more than name," declared Prof. Charles Melvin McConnell of Boston University School of Theology, Boston, Mass., addressing the annual meeting of the Home Missions Council of North America, now in session at Buck Hill Falls, Pa. Prof. McConnell charged that Protestant churches operating as denominational units, have "side-stepped, ignored and all but scorned the marginal rural sections of this country."
And meet the future with a smile.

"Tumble-down shack churches, dog-eared song books, abandoned churches, scant religious educational literature and an almost total absence of theological seminary graduates in these under-served fields furnish proof of this neglect all along the line up to and sometimes including mission boards," he said, and added, "The harvest of this failure of denominational Protestantism to 'seek and to save that which is lost' is widespread rural paganism."

Prof. McConnell described the interdenominational education program of the Home Missions Council among share-croppers and rural Negroes as "one of the most effective and promising pieces of work in the entire rural field." The Council program brings rural ministers together in an educational center for training in community work under qualified leadership.

Pleading for a "change of mind and attitude" toward rural mission fields, Prof. McConnell pictured the low estate of the rural ministry as the "most devastating aspect of the entire rural church field." He asserted that "Graduates of seminaries who have been trained for their task, who have a missionary spirit and who have become established in rural parishes have been pressured out, appointed out, called out or sympathized out so often that it amounts to a major tragedy. This I have witnessed time and again and it is the most baffling aspect of the whole church situation to me.

"Now and then a real missionary is to be found in the marginal rural field doing business for the Kingdom of God on less than a shoe-string of support. Some far-sighted rural church executives have grouped the churches, and stood back of their men while they got a foothold.

"Interdenominational and cooperative missionary support is necessary in these areas. As good as separate and independent projects are in mission fields a new cooperative approach is proving far more effective and successful. Many years ago it was clear to denominational home mission leaders that independent, competitive approaches to a home missionary field were inadequate and often positively unchristian. As a result there are projects now underway in old mission fields supported by cooperating home mission boards. These projects are generally administered by the Home Missions Council."

I believe that the rendering of useful service is the common duty of mankind and that only in the purifying fire of sacrifice is the dross of selfishness consumed and the greatness of the human soul set free.—Edwin Markham.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

COLONEL JUNIUS E. WEST.

My good friend and brother minister, Robert Lee House, phoned me of the death of Colonel Junius E. West of Suffolk. This was a very sad message and will be for many of our people who love their church. It announces a great loss to the church and many of her institutions. I have known Colonel West since 1907 when I was a freshman in Elon College. Colonel West was a visitor on the campus and was introduced as a friend and supporter of the college. Since our first meeting I have been associated with him in the work of the church especially the missionary and educational interest of the church. In all my experience in Christian work I have not known anyone more interested, more faithful, or more sacrificing for the interest of our church than Colonel West. He has given of his means as he was able and sometimes beyond his ability. I am sure that he has given more time to his church, local, conference, and convention wide than any other layman among us. He loved his church and has a consuming passion for its growth.

In addition to official positions held in his local church, he was chairman of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention from its organization until recently when he retired on account of failing health. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of Elon College for nearly a half century and was one of the college's most ardent supporters. He was chairman of the first committee to raise an endowment fund for Elon College and succeed in meeting conditions layed down by the late Mr. Palmer of New York City and he received from Mr. Palmer a gift of $20,000. This was the beginning of a permanent fund for the support of the college which has been a stabilizing force and factor in its growth through the years.

Colonel West was an honest business man, a clean politician, a consecrated layman, a faithful church man, a Christian statesman, and a humble follower of Christ. In his death the church loses a great leader and the college a longtime friend. May the promises of God be an eternal comfort to his family and dear ones and his sustaining grace be their strength from day to day.

POINTS OF EXCELLENCE.

Elon College enters the New Year with optimism and hope. Its background is stimulating and its future is inviting. Many difficulties that blocked its progress in the past have been overcome. Opportunities for a larger service are at its door. A vision without precedent compels its best and challenges its total possible resources. Its plans are ambitious and presuppose helpful cooperation on the part of its total constituency. Mutual services have brought the college to its present favorable position.

It faces the New Year with a very fine student body—the largest in its history—and with possibilities equaling any. There is a fine scholastic atmosphere on the campus and a college spirit that is wholesome. The faculty is composed of thirty-five Christian men and women adequately trained for the requirements of their respective fields. Its curriculum is inclusive in the field of higher education with possible helpful additions during the year. Our equipment for instructional opportunities is first-class and in fair condition. Our debts are paid, current accounts are in balance and additions have been made to our endowment funds. The clientele of the college has increased; its friends have multiplied; and its influence has gone far.

There are, of course, certain deficiencies on our campus and lack of equipment that must be supplied as quickly as possible. Our endowment is comparatively small, pitifully so, and must be increased to a satisfactory standard. But the fine thing about these deficiencies is that the college, the church, the alumni, officials and friends are aware of these needs and have launched a campaign to raise funds to meet the same. As you face the New Year you are confronted with the opportunity of helping to undergird the college financially that these deficiencies may be met and adequately remedied during this fiscal year. Begin now to plan to assist the college generously.

These and other points of excellence have brought Elon College favorable consideration by educational agencies and the highest possible rating by our accrediting agency. We face the future with faith, trust, and confidence.

FIFTH SUNDAY OFFERINGS.

We are submitting three reports this week. They are not very large but they are encouraging. The college wishes to express its appreciation to all churches and Sunday schools that received fifth Sunday offerings last year and to appeal earnestly to those that did not cooperate in the Convention's plan during 1945-46 to join with other schools and lend their support to the college during 1946-47. It would be a fine resolution on the part of all our Sunday schools to resolve to receive the fifth Sunday offerings for the college and forward the same to our Convention Office. We are asked to raise a total of $12,500 for the current support of the college. We can do it if we will, and we will if we begin in time and keep the cause of the college before our people. It is stimulating for a Sunday school to see its contributions reported in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The churches that withhold their contributions until the end of the year could make a much greater contribution by sending their offerings regularly that the whole church may see what they are doing.

The college greatly appreciates your cooperation and help.

To go out unto all nations to preach the Gospel of Christ and Him crucified must ever be the paramount duty of the Church. To raise and recover the fallen, to comfort and uplift the wounded and despairing, to help our brother man and sister woman in every time of need in every way we can; these things must be done, these things cannot be neglected by any who call themselves followers of Christ.

HOME MISSIONS COUNCIL MEETS.

The Christian Church no longer can afford to function on a basis of class distinction if it is to maintain its traditional championship of human rights in the years to come, according to a statement on the future of home missions made public at the annual meeting of the Home Missions Council of North America, being held at Buck Hill Falls, Pa. The Council represents twenty-three major Protestant denominations.

Terming the problem of group relations "one of the great social and ethical issues of our day," the statement listed the following six "considerations" as imperatives for the development of the home missions enterprise in this country and Canada:

"1. The full influence of the church should be exerted to secure the eradication of racial segregation and discrimination, whether imposed by law or by social custom, and to fight against whatever implies for any group a 'ghetto pattern' of living.

"2. All religious or other mission-ary enterprises now organized on a basis of segregation should be re-ex-aminated with a view to removing as rapidly as possible all barriers to free intercourse without reference to race.

"3. The church at large should be summoned to accept the principle of ministry to all people on the basis of community, irrespective of race or social status.

"4. Wherever possible experiments in inter-racial activities and associ-ations should be promoted.

"5. Special study should be de-voted to the strengthening of the ministry of the church among any groups or types of population now inadequately reached.

"6. Home Mission forces should join with other forces, both inside and outside the church, in positive measures to relieve tensions and to promote mutual understanding and good will among all races and groups."

Warning against the impact of sec-ular forces on a divided Protestant-ism, the statement declared:

"Modern society is increasingly complex and highly organized. Broad areas of concern, once left to the ini-tiative of individuals or voluntary groups, are now functions of the state. Most forms of work have be-come highly mechanized. Many types of face-to-face relationships have been displaced by the relatively imperson-al relationships of large-scale organi-zations. The simpler motivations of a simpler day have been overlaid with an intricate fabric of institu-tionalized ethics. Many wholly secu-lar forces take very high ground on questions of social welfare of un-doubted ethical significance. Never-theless, the tendency of a secularized society is to 'play down' ethical and spiritual considerations, and to rele-

Home Again in China

By LEONARD J. AND AGNES M. CHRISTIAN,
Foochow, Fukien, China.

It was not a cruise de luxe, crowded as we were with from six to eighteen persons per cabin, sleeping in three-decker bunks; with very ordinary food served by green hands—willing, but inexpert! The leisure hours of our 320 first-class passengers were spent all crowded together in a social hall about 40 x 50 feet, since the route taken just south of the Aleutians made the decks too cold for comfort. Fogs, moreover, kept the fog-horns blowing a good share of the way. On top of all this, the fact that 30,000 mines were reported to have broken loose from their moorings and to be carried by wind and tide in every degree of longitude and latitude, did not seem to disturb our 1,600 passengers very much.

A three-day run from Yokohama found us in the muddy waters of the Yellow Sea, followed by the three mile run from Woosung light ship to Shanghai. One might write volumes on the teaming life of the Yangtse; every mile is one of changing scene and intense interest. The U. S. Navy seemed to have charge of Shanghai's water front, for from the stern of innumerable vessels—mostly of the cruiser and gun-boat type—floated the Stars and Stripes.

How shall one describe the overcrowded, postwar port of Shanghai, one of the most interesting of all China's seaboard cities—where colliers earn from ten to fifteen thousand dollars a day, while bank tellers must sleep at night on their desks because they are unable to pay the exorbitant rentals that landlords demand; where thieves are filling their pockets with sale of supplies pilfered from the merchant ships carrying goods for UNRRA and CNRRA to the desperately needy folk of the interior. Bananas were selling at $1,200 per pounds eggs at $100 a piece; a shoe-shine cost $200, and a ten-block ricksha ride called for the outlay of $500. Space forbids our dwelling on the three days we spent in customs shed, gathering together our thirty trunks and cases, unloaded and dumped unceremoniously, and apparently with no system of any sort. Nor can we tell you of the joy of meeting Agnes' sister, Louise Meebold, who was on the pier when our ocean liner made its berth on July 1.

Three weeks' delay in Shanghai before we could get passage on a coastal vessel, gave us a chance to find out from our graduates at work in many walks of life, how the Chinese morale was taking the present conflict between the Communists and the Central Government; and that morale isn't standing up too well. Pessimism and dissatisfaction are widespread, especially among the middle and upper classes. Most of the coolie class have no time to consider national issues, being too busy trying to keep their rice bowls filled.

Our three days and four nights down the coast on the cholera-infested steamer, Chusan, we'd rather forget. Two hundred more passengers than the ship's papers allowed were crowded onto this thousand ton boat. They were for the most part going "deck passage" but when the rains struck us they crammed every inch of space in the dining salon and passage ways, and even the floors of the cabins. Six deaths from cholera en route were reported.

Having arrived at Pagoda Anchorage, in the Min River, twenty miles below Foochow, the handling of our baggage started to be a "free-for-all" until Mr. Thelin, who with Miss Houston, acted as reception committee, lent a hand. Then a lift from a launch headed toward Foochow was another of the unexpected blessings provided by the Father's hand; so that by nine o'clock that night the carts that loaded our baggage (ten pieces of Laura Ward's added to our thirty) made their way through the dimly lighted streets of Foochow and landed us at the Mission Compound gates. With willing hands to help, we were soon unloading things in the house that has been our home for fourteen years. It was a joy to meet our American colleagues who had stood by and carried on through the days of Japanese occupation and to receive their warm words of welcome. Arrangements had been made for our stay in the home of Miss Armstrong because our rooms were filled with furniture of every description belong to many families.

The days following our arrival were divided between meeting our Chinese friends who came singly or in groups to welcome us back, and the setting of our house in order. It took collie-loads of water, and almost unlimited amounts of elbow grease on the part of two Chinese helpers to make us look and feel clean. Some Japanese officers had used our home for their mess hall, and for that reason it remained in fairly good repair.

Within the first week we had moved into our home and have been improving and enjoying it ever since. One of our happy surprises was to find so many of our things still here. While house-cleaning and repair were under way, the work of the treasure-ship was gradually taken over from Elmer Galt, and on August 10 he was able to get away to the work in North China. It took a bit of nerve at first to write checks for one million dollars, but now to run off five million is all in the day's work. There are so many zeros in our figures of the day that the adding machine refuses to take on the job.

Shanghai had, in a way, prepared us for the break in morale we found here in Foochow. The city itself shows the struggle against depression; streets and buildings look run-down, and business is in chaos in the midst of erratic exchange and hair-raising prices. In the face of these conditions we are surprised to find the student body of our Christian schools larger than ever before, and the Mission hospitals full to overflowing. It is in the churches that we see and feel the decided slump. Some of the causes are not far to seek—the removal of wealthy members who have not yet returned; the poverty of many of those who remained; and all the difficulties of part-war living. But there are deeper wounds of the spirit—greed, rivalry and lack of godliness in the lives of the men who should be the leaders, that give us much cause for concern. Our pastors, preachers and evangelistic workers need your prayers as never before. The Spirit is moving in the hearts of the people, and in the past two weeks of special meetings, several hundred have expressed their desire to accept Christ as Savior. We feel sure that the tide will turn, and are glad to be back, despite the difficult problems to be faced. Pray for us that we may "march breast-forward, never doubting" the love and power and final triumph of the great Captain of our Salvation.

To get something more out of life every one of us can do three things. First: Cultivate competence. Competence means reward as well as ability. Second: Cultivate understanding. I would get much more out of life if I understood the meaning of every invention, of great sculpture, paintings, poetry. The third way of getting something more out of life is in self-dedication to some altruistic purpose greater and nobler than yourself.

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

A CHEERFUL GIVER.

Mary had been saving all her pennies for a special purpose. When she had enough saved she was going to buy herself a new jumping rope. Her old rope was perfectly good yet—except that it was soiled from much use and the ends had started to fray loose.

Mary hoarded her little pile of pennies, eager for the day when she would have enough to buy the new rope. Just when she had the right amount she was reminded of Granny Martin's birthday.

"Don't forget that Monday is Granny Martin's birthday," said Kitty, her next-door neighbor and little playmate.

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Mary. "I had forgotten all about it!"

Granny Martin was a little old lady who lived on the same street as Mary did. On Monday she would be eighty years old. But you would never have guessed her to be that old, for she was as spry as a cricket. She kept house all alone and in the summer she raised beautiful flowers which she shared generously with all the boys and girls in the neighborhood. The boys and girls loved Granny Martin and each year they remembered her in some special way on her birthday.

Mary thought about her little pile of precious pennies and how she had saved them one by one to get a new jumping rope. She decided that when Kitty and Jane came by on Monday morning taking up the collection with which to buy Granny a birthday present she would give only a very few of her pennies to them and keep the rest for herself. Down deep in her heart Mary did feel a little bit uncomfortable about her decision, especially when she remembered how Granny Martin had always been so good to her, giving her cookies and letting her pick bouquets of flowers.

It was with this thought in mind that Mary trudged off to Sunday school. That noon, at the dinner table, after Father had asked the blessing and was unfolding his napkin he asked Mary the question he always asked her at the dinner table on Sundays.

"Mary, did you learn a memory gem this morning?"

"Oh, yes," replied Mary. She liked to recite her memory gem for Father each Sunday. She was always very careful to learn them well so she would not make a mistake, or forget.

"What is your memory verse this time?" he asked.

"God loveth a cheerful giver," repeated Mary.

That is a wonderful verse," said Father, thoughtfully. "God does love a cheerful giver. We find that out by experience."

No sooner had Mary repeated the words, "God loveth a cheerful giver,"

WHO IS THE LAD?

By Rev. Roy D. Coulter.

Whence came the lad—
What home did he bless
With his illustrious birth,
Giving, O heart of mirth,
Nonchalantly his one dish
Of five barley loaves and fish?

Whence came the lad—
What village was blest
Thus by noble station
A lad with one ration
Who gave all in solitude
To feed a hungry multitude?

Whence came the lad—
What nation was blest
With a lad that could stand
Head-shoulders with a man
And witness what God could do
With five loaves a fish or two?

Who is the lad?
He lives next to you.
Playing across the street,
With hardly time to eat,
At building with his two hands
Mighty temples in the sands.

er," than a sudden thought came to her which made her sit bolt upright in her chair. She was not a cheerful giver!

"I'm a selfish, begrudging giver," Mary told herself. "Just a few pennies for kind Granny Martin and keeping the most for myself to buy something I don't need. I'm so glad it isn't too late to make amends. I want to be a cheerful giver."

After dinner Mary slipped through the hedge to Kitty's house. In her hand she carried a small box with all her pennies in it.

The next morning it was a light-hearted Mary who twisted the loose ends of her jumping rope together and tied knots to hold them. The rope was good for several seasons to come.

"God does love a cheerful giver by making her happier because she has shared with others," Mary said, having found this out for herself.—Lois M. Marmon.

A LETTER FROM REV. HUNT.

Wadley, Ala.,
January 1, 1947.

Dear Brother Editor:

I would like to have space in THE CHRISTIAN SUN to say to all my friends who are readers of the paper that I thank each of them for their kindness to me during the Christmas season. I received a great number of Christmas cards which I greatly appreciate. And all of these friends have an interest in my prayers. I am thanking God for this New Year and trust that His kingdom will make more rapid progress than it did last year.

I am trusting that the labors of the past year will inspire us to a greater faith in God, and the church, and humanity.

And may we all be more deeply pious, and spiritual in our lives.

Our church in this country is handicapped for the lack of a more spiritual leadership. God said, "Is thy heart right? For out of it proceed the issues of life." I pray that every Orthodox church may unite in prayer to God for more laborers in His vineyard.

May the blessings and mercies of our Heavenly Father accompany His children throughout this good year of 1947.

I have moved from my former home and am now living on the highway between Wadley and Roanoke, on R. F. D. No. 1.

God bless all men everywhere, and may we all be submissive to the will of God.

Sincerely yours,
G. D. HUNT.

Today is your day and mine, the only day that we have, the day in which we play our part. What our part may signify in the great whole we may not understand, but we are here to play it, and now is our time. This we know: it is a part of action, not of whining. It is a part of love, not of cynicism. It is for us to express love in terms of human helpfulness. This we know, for we have learned from sad experience that any other course of life leads toward decay and waste.—David Starr Jordan.

HOME MISSIONS COUNCIL MEETS.

gate religion to the category of one among special interests.

"The Protestant Church, divided organizationally and in point of view on many vital issues and lacking adequate agencies for collective action, is at a serious disadvantage in maintaining itself against this secular trend. Secular society is not necessarily anti-religious but the impact of secular forces upon a divided Protestantism is destructive. At the same time powerful interests in the press, radio, motion picture, advertising and amusement fields are developing a type of culture in which ethical religion has little place.

"The effects of change upon the church and the home mission enterprise have been made progressively evident. Increasing mobility and secularization have combined to create prevailing attitudes less favorable to religious development. Public progress in relation to social welfare, education, recreation and culture have tended to circumscribe the general field of influence of the church. The tendency of many churches primarily to identify themselves with particular social, economic or racial groups has made more difficult their adjustment to the demands of a dynamic, changing period. The parish areas of most churches have drastically changed in their specific social characteristics. Secular movements have challenged the leadership of the church among large segments of the population and in relation to vital ethical issues, as race relations and social justice. A striking phenomenon has been the rapid growth and wide distribution of churches of various emotional sects. In general, the rate of membership growth of the older Protestant denominations has been disappointingly slow and there has been an actual decline in Sunday school enrollment."

Viewing the future function of the Home Missions Council as a "master planning board for Protestant home missions," the statement outlined the following over-all strategy:

"The total program of home missions should be brought within the scope of common planning and agreement, recognizing that the tasks of evangelization, education and service are becoming essentially corporate in nature. This common planning and agreement should have in view, negatively, the elimination or avoidance of competition and overlapping, and, positively, the development of a well-balanced coordination of program so that all aspects of the work will reinforce each other and make a unified impact upon the community and upon society in general.

"Serious thought needs to be given to the missionary message we are trying to project, to its relevance in relation to pressing problems of contemporary life, and to its impact upon particular situations and populations. Modern life offers a laboratory for fruitful experimentation in creative Christian service; this is illustrated by such questions as industrial and race relations, the place of Christian teaching in education, the concern of the church for good government, sound economy and broad social welfare and other interests which affect the Christian community in the most fundamental sense of the term.

"Recognizing the imperative need to strengthen the total impact of the churches we represent upon the total life of our nation, home mission agencies should accept a measure of responsibility in the development and strengthening of interdenominational agencies in local communities, states and areas, in the mobilization of our total resources, missionary and ecclesiastical, for our common task, and in furthering cooperative and ecumenical ideals nationally and on a world basis."

It is not enough to feed the starving people of the world. They should be helped to feed themselves. Let the church arise and declare itself on these issues, but, better still, lend its support to such programs of agricultural and industrial reconstruction as will remove the basic causes of dependency.—Mark A. Dawber.

Many people take no care of their money till they come nearly to the end of it, and others do just the same with their time.—Goethe.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS INTERVIEWED BY NICODEMUS.

LESSON III—JANUARY 19, 1947.

MEMORY VERSE: Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God.—John 3:3.

A Strange Errand.

It was rather strange that Nicodemus should have come to Jesus. He was a "ruler," i. e., a member of the Sanhedrin, the ruling body of the Jewish nation, a man of high reputation, of learning, influence, and of power. Jesus was a young, comparatively unknown, itinerant teacher, perhaps not half his age. And yet this man, Nicodemus, came to Jesus in a spirit of earnest inquiry. To be sure he was a bit timid, at least it seems that way, for he came by night, but the important fact is that he was sincere. He came by night, but he came seeking light. Here is encouragement for all who are seeking light. Here is also a rebuke to those who are self-satisfied. And here is a startling revelation of the fact that men may have everything, but if they have not that which Christ refers to as being born of the spirit, unless they have God, there is a deep dissatisfaction and hunger of heart in their lives.

A Startling Word.

Nicodemus started off by expressing his confidence that Jesus must have come from God—his signs and wonders that He had done were His credentials. It was not blarney or half-hearted praise—this older man undoubtedly felt a sense of wonder and admiration for the young teacher. But he must have been surprised and startled—in fact his words prove it—when Jesus bluntly but politely replied, "Except a man be born again," or anew, or above—the terms may be used interchangeably here—he could not see or enter into the kingdom of God. How could a man be born again? Why did he need to be born again? Well, said Jesus in so many words, the kingdom of God is spiritual in nature, and unless a man is born into it, unless the Spirit of God renews his heart, he cannot see or enter the Kingdom. "Ye must be born anew or again," said Jesus to this man, already a good and wise man. Even Nicodemus had to undergo a new spiritual birth ere he could enter or see the Kingdom. And so must every man. A new birth is the spiritual priority, the absolute essential of the new life. The Kingdom will not come by nice words, or carefully laid plans. A new world can come only through new men. To be sure there is a place for these things. But the first great need is a renewal of the heart and a divine transformation of the individual man. This is not all of it, but it is the thing without which all else is futile and finally folly. There must be repentance, confession, pardon, purification before one can enter the Kingdom, but there must be something more—there must be the renewing and transforming power of the Spirit of God. This thing comes from above. It comes down from heaven, it does not spring up from earth. Regeneration is more important than education.

A Simple Analogy.

Mysterious, to be sure it is mysterious. Even this wise old "ruler" was stumped at the very thought of being born again. And so are many moderns. But the Master, as usual with inspired spiritual insight, put it all very simply. He did not try to convince Nicodemus by stilted argument. He frankly admitted that it was mysterious. But he called attention to the fact that even the wisest man, come to think of it, is stumped by the mystery of such a common phenomenon as the blowing of the wind. Who of that day, or of our enlightened day, can tell from whence the wind comes or whither it goes. But men feel it and do not wait upon the solution of the mystery. It is after all an act of faith. So is it with the "new birth." It is as mysterious as it is miraculous. It cannot be explained. But it can be experienced. And when a man by faith, lays hold of it and enters into it, he is not concerned about the explanation of it. Let a man confess his sins, let him by faith accept Christ's cleansing and healing forgiveness, and let him by faith believe that the miracle has happened, and experience answers or minimizes many of the mysteries that formerly troubled him. If any will do, he shall know. O taste and see that the Lord is good.

The chains of habit are too weak to be felt until they are too strong to be broken.—Samuel Johnson.

Ever since we learned this our second lesson we pray with new understanding and deep concern the prayer our Lord Himself prayed for His Church, "That they may all be one . . . that the world may believe." We knew this prayer before. We have quoted it and may have preached sermons from it. But to pray it in His name, I confess has been the result of our Lord's own instruction.

Who or what has it been that gave strength and patience to the small Christian minority who waged war against Hitler's claim and power? How did it happen that the comrades of this struggle became transformed into a new spiritual union and communion? Was it just human fancy and mere illusion? Otherwise there must have been a causative power. It is of this power that I am going to speak now, for it has been the decisive lesson that we have been taught.

When we met with Hitler's claims and came to see that he wanted for himself and for his purposes the whole of our nation and each single member of it, body and soul, life and death, it meant for us a dreadful situation. Actually he was the god of the nation. Without thinking the fascinated crowds shouted, as they were told, "We are nothing, the Fuehrer is everything." "Fuehrer befehl, wir folgen!" They believed what the Fuehrer proclaimed, that his orders were supreme law, that he knew best, "knowing good and evil." No wonder that human resistance faded away. It took only a few months for the "Gleichschaltung" (absorption into Hitler's party) of political factions and parties, trade unions, scientific and professional associations, teachers, and civil servants. Only the church was left. Even there inroads had been made by Hitler's fifth column, "German Christians."

Why now did we, the small minority, not give in when we had to fight against all odds? We saw what was happening and we saw ourselves confronted by God's first commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me, for I am the Lord, thy God." We simply could not help resisting. This resistance was not very impressive, but it was stubborn and went on year by year, God having a long lesson to teach us. We were to learn through many thousand days that God has a word for us which is able to renew courage and strength every single day and which proves even more powerful than the orders and will of a tyrant. We knew this word quite well, we thought and had known it for a long time. But we came to learn it and to understand it quite anew—the word, “Jesus Christ.”

Was Hitler really the man of power, he who lacked the strength to do away with a handful of Christians? Or was He the man of power who uttered these words, “All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth”? Was Hitler really the man of courage, he who trembled for his life whenever a leaf rustled? Or was He the man of courage who once said, “No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again.” Was Hitler really the man of salvation, the longed-for saviour whom the crowds hailed, “Heil, Hitler”—he who made people die for him, thousands upon thousands, in prisons and in camps, by murder and war? Or is He the man of salvation who criticizes all ways of selfishness and sacrifices His life for others. “Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of Man is not come to destroy men’s lives, but to save them.” “I am the good shepherd, and I lay down my life for the sheep.”

That was the content of our most important and essential lesson. Indeed, we overcame all doubts and difficulties the very moment when we professed this lesson which God had taught us.

Probably you know the first and fundamental sentence of the Barmen declaration, which has become the Magna Charta of the Confessing Church and the banner of those who defied Hitler: “Jesus Christ, as Holy Scripture bears witness of Him, is the only word of God that we must hear, and who in life and in death we are to trust and obey.” Trusting in this word we had no room left in our life for the fear of man. What did it matter that we were and remained a small minority? What did it matter that many of us were persecuted and put into prison? The power which Hitler claimed for himself and his rule was but a lie and was doomed to break to pieces as soon as Christ would put an end to it.

If it were to obey this word we no longer had any authorization to separate and to go our own way, building churches according to our own plans and tastes. We found ourselves bound by His love and His command to mutual help and responsibility.

At last, listening to this word, we knew everything about the meaning and task of our life and duty. We knew what to preach and how to say it. Preaching became the most urgent and the most delightful thing in the world. Hundreds of laymen went into the pulpit after the pastors had been taken away by the Gestapo. There was no hesitating, no asking, “What shall I cry?” “What shall I preach?”

Jesus Christ, the One Word of God.

You will admit, I am sure, that this lesson is the most needed one still today, and not only for the Christian Churches in my home country. For where the power, love and salvation of the living Lord are darkened, nothing else will do. The idols will have the best of it. And that means devils and demons, believe me!

Hitler and his accomplices have gone. The “church struggle” has come to an end. The world has changed its face definitely. And we are only too glad that we may hope to forget what has happened. But the lessons which God taught to His Church must not be forgotten, and they are by no means finished.

The small minority at last has outlived its persecutors. Once again the Lord’s promise has been fulfilled, “The gates of hell shall not prevail against it.” Yet we cannot boast that the Church has won the victory by herself. The Lord rather has done it. And He did it at the very last moment, when the small remnant of His fold was nearly suffocated. He acted in this way, I am sure, that we might keep in mind His lesson that He Himself is the Master and the God of wonders. There is good reason for the Christian Church in Germany to be reminded of this fact, for we have a chance of becoming great and influential if only the Church will forego human wishes and plans. We do not fear being few and weak, for the lesson runs, “He has put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree.” Not the mighty, but the faithful and obedient Church may rely on the promises of her Lord.

“When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream.” So it has happened to us literally. The Church was freed, and not only the Church that had sustained resistance right to the end, but also the Church that had become tired and weak. The old territorial churches came back to life once more, awaking from their stupor. The small minority disappeared all at once in the midst of millions of Church members who never had taken part in God’s lessons during the by-gone years.

It looked as if the second lesson had been totally in vain. The old territorial church systems came back to life. The denominations were restored. The sheep divided from the goats—Lutherans, Reformed, and Unionists. It could not be otherwise. But we tried to hold fast to God’s second lesson of ecumenical fellowship and brotherhood across the denominational boundaries of our organized churches and creeds. And partly, at least, we have succeeded in doing so. You will have heard of the church convention in Treysa in the Fall of 1945. There the Evangelical Church in Germany was established, an interdenominational union of all the Protestant territorial churches in Germany. It is not yet to be seen what will become of it. But whatever the ultimate form and result may be, it is here that the ecumenical brotherhood of the fighting and confessing church is at home now and where we meet to continue God’s second lesson. And it is this Church that is sending its greetings to you, for we came to see that God’s plan for Christian brotherhood does not stop short at the boundaries of nations nor at the borders of continents.

We shall have to learn this lesson of ecumenical brotherhood for many years to come until we know and know by heart what has been told us again and again, “There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.” The unity of the Church is not made by human rules and regulations, but it is set up by the sovereignty of the one Lord, Jesus Christ.

But how to bring about His reign? That is and always will be the crucial problem. “How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher?”

As long as Hitler played God’s rival, preaching was not difficult at all. Certainly it required some courage and no little love for the lost and misled people. But opening your Bible you knew very soon what God wanted you to say.

Now the situation has changed. I must confess that after coming back from eight years of imprisonment I simply was at a loss to know what to preach. I knew that most of my fellow-ministers felt the same. At Barmen we had proclaimed the absolute sovereignty of Christ. But after Hitler had gone, what did this sov-

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

This report closes our work for 1946. The Sunday schools, churches, and friends have been real good to us during the year to help finance this institution while prices soared skyward. The offerings sent in have been very encouraging. Our people are beginning to realize that we cannot run the Christian orphanage on the amount allotted us in conference apportionments, namely, $12,500. It certainly is more satisfactory to work when we are assured of being able to pay our bills at the end of each month. Our good friends have come to our rescue during the year and have helped us across the rough places in our work here, financially. The churches, Sunday schools, and friends have finally pushed the income up to the sum of $21,533.14 for the year. I have been informed that some people have the idea that if the churches raise the amount allotted to the church in conference apportionments, that is all the orphanage needs, and they stop there. You are expected to raise your conference apportionments, but if you have it in your heart to send a special check to help any of the church institutions, you have a perfect right to do so.

I want to say to our church people that you have been faithful and loyal to the orphanage and me, during the year, 1946. It makes my heart rejoice to know you are standing by us in this work of love and charity.

During our thirty years here as superintendent, we have trained and sent out a large number of boys and girls that we feel very proud of. They came here when they had no place to go, helpless and dependent. The orphanage, through your contributions, gave them a chance, and they have made splendid citizens. Can you invest your money more wisely than in little children who, one day, will be leading citizens of our State and Nation? The kind of citizens they make will depend largely upon the training they receive in their young and tender years.

Again I think you for your loyalty and assistance during the year, 1946.

ries a day, food supplies will run out about the middle of February. After that perhaps 1,000 calories a day will be possible. Compare these figures to the 1,650 calories daily set by experiment in the United States as the subsistence level, the 2,400 needed to maintain health, or the 3,300 eaten daily by the average American.

Through Church World Service, Congregational Christians can contribute both material goods and money to the ragged and hungry people of the world. Cash contributions go a long way to relieve the suffering of hunger. Congregationalists should send their money marked for overseas relief to the Congregational Christian Committee for War Victims and Services, 287 4th Avenue,

New York, N. Y. Even $1.00 will provide enough food to keep a person alive for two weeks through a special relief cereal purchased *by Church World Service in carload lots for 6¼c a pound. The cereal has the food value, pound for pound, of cheese and provides a balanced diet. Thirty-two glasses of milk made from whole dried milk can also be given to some starving child for $1.00.

Nearly every home contains articles not in use which could mean immeasurable comfort to some family abroad. At this season of the year, when cold threatens life with even greater force than hunger, warm clothing is especially needed. Clothing for men, women, and children, shoes for people of all ages, particularly the wider sizes, overshoes, blankets, books, and candles are all shipped abroad through Church World Service. Search through your closets for things you are not likely to use. Make sure they are in good usable condition. Above all, make sure they are clean. Though thousands of families abroad are destitute, they are not beggars. Only desperate need has driven many to ask for help. Create sincere goodwill and gratitude in their hearts by giving attractive as well as useful goods. Send your donations prepaid to the Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland.

GETTING THE RIGHT MEN FOR THE MINISTRY.

Getting the right men for the ministry is our big problem, and each local minister can help.

There are three new books which every minister should have to place in the hands of young people who may be thinking of Christian life service. These are published by The Commission on the Ministry, the Federal Council of Churches. Undoubtedly, they can be purchased from the Pilgrim Press. Note these books: (1) "We Have This Ministry" (Church vacations for men and women), by eleven leaders; (2) "Look at the Ministry" (A message in photographs), by John Oliver Nelson; (3) "A Young Man's View of the Ministry" (Classic appeal for the ministry), by S. M. Shoemaker.

These are excellent books. Bound in paper, they cost fifty cents at the present time. I propose to place them in my own library in Elyria and use them as I can with my most promising young people. If all of us would do the same, it might mean that we would be starting some thinking which would bear results of which we would be greatly pleased.—William A. Leath in "Ohio News."

In Memoriam

McCURDY.

Mrs. Burdella Aiken McCurdy, born January 31, 1866, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Roy A. Larrick, in Winchester, Va., November 25, 1946. Burial service was conducted from the home by her pastor and the Rev. Roy D. Coulter, pastor of Timber Ridge Church. Her body was laid to rest in the family lot in Mount Hebron Cemetery, Winchester. Mrs. McCurdy was a loyal member of the Winchester Congregational Christian Church and was faithful in attendance as long as her health permitted. "There remaineth therefore a rest for the people of God." (Hebrew 4:9.)

ereignty mean? Was our Church and was our nation in need of Him? Were we, ourselves? Yes, we wanted Him badly. We wanted to be comforted by Him. We wanted to be helped by Him, the Friend of the poor and miserable. Wasn't He the divine comforter who said, "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest?" Why then could we not make up our minds to preach according to our heart's desire, as millions of people wished us to do?

It was the hour of great temptation for us as well as for the whole Church. One step only and we should have had the chance of winning the sympathy of our whole nation.

But we could not give way. "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" We had to remember that there is no comfort in the Gospel except for those who enter in at the straight gate, and that we were not authorized to alter Christ's original message, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." What people longed for was to enter into this kingdom of comfort and peace without passing through the door of repentance. A sheer impossibility. Christ says, "I am not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance."

That was the way we came to our new message. Repentance was to begin in our own life and work and only then could we hope to preach the real and full message of Christ's sovereignty in the midst of a world full of guilt, sin and misery.

We saw the misery which had originated in Germany spread itself all over the countries of Europe and then recoiling upon our own nation in hunger and death.

We saw sin proclaimed as right and lawful if only done for the profit of the "master race"—the sin which now weighs on a "mastered race" and suppresses every spiritual recovery.

We saw guilt accumulated through twelve years and culminate in the planned murder of millions of Jews—a guilt now being revenged according to the rule of human punishment, “eye for eye, tooth for tooth.”

We saw that we could not plead "not guilty" for ourselves, that on the contrary we were in duty bound to become our prosecutors first because we had not been brave enough in witnessing, not cheerful enough in believing, not persevering enough in praying, and not ardent enough in loving our fellowmen.

This confession of our own, the Church's guilt, has become the main contents of the well-known Stuttgart declaration. That declaration, made by the Evangelical Church in Germany at the time it became a member of the World Council of Churches, represents the pre-eminent event in the life of our nation and Church since the end of the war. It represents a new beginning for Christian preaching after a year's lethargy. Christ, the Saviour of sinners, is again manifested in His sovereignty.

This consciousness has been by far the hardest lesson that we have had to learn, and we have not yet come to the end of it. At the same time it means the most important lesson we have had to learn, leading to the highest aim, "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

The Church of the Stuttgart declaration has not met with great sympathy on the part of the German nation. But this Church has the greatest sympathy for the nation. This Church is guilty herself by omission and weakness, therefore shares the guilt of the rest. This Church knows the glad tidings of God's forgiveness and, therefore, preaches the gospel of God's righteousness and love, trying earnestly to become the good Samaritan for the man who "fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment and wounded him and departed, leaving him (more than) half dead."

We now know how to bring real comfort and genuine help to those who suffer from sin and shame, being ourselves the first members of the new communion which Christ brings together in our midst, the communion of pardoned sinners, the most deeply rooted brotherhood of mortal men.

TRAVELOG

By PATTIE LEE COGHILL.

As you can imagine the past year was a most interesting time to have been in India and Ceylon. Our deputation was there when the discussions and negotiations leading toward India's independence were in full swing. We were pleased again and again to discover the important place that Christians have made for themselves in this great country. There are only eight million Christians but their influence is far out of proportion to their numbers. It was good to meet and know so many Indian Christians and to see at first hand the wonderful work which our missionaries are doing and have done through the years. I am always tempted to go on and on about India.

The next three and a half months of the trip were full of excitement every minute. I flew from Karachi to Basra, Iraq, where I took a train for Bagdad—from there a big Nairn bus across the desert to Damascus and on to Palestine. Now I must tell you that I was in Palestine for Easter week; a glorious experience for any Christian. After Palestine I visited missionary work in Lebanon and Syria. In Tripoli I had an opportunity to observe a grand Presbyterian hospital from the inside as I had a bang-up case of German measles.

Next came three wonderful weeks in Turkey. In addition to our missionaries (every one of whom I should like to mention by name) it was fine to see Don Webster, Congregational minister, heading up the Department of Inter-Cultural Relations for our government, and my good friends Ezra and Jesamine Young. Ezra has headed the YMCA in Istanbul for the past five years. Both Don Webster and Ezra Young went to Turkey first to teach in one of our schools. On Memorial Day we attended a service in the European section of the cemetery in Istanbul with American Board friends, people from the American Consulate and the American tobacco companies!

Let me pause right here to say the things Ross Thomas in India, Luther Fowle in Turkey and Dr. Ernest Riggs in Greece did for me while in their respective countries will make me believe eternally in the mission business offices! The amount of red tape in travel at the present time is amazing—not only visas but permits of all kinds including registration with the police on arrival in each town in some countries and a release from the police when leaving; currency exchanges, etc.

How can one describe a week of one's life in a marvelous country like Greece. There were good friends to be visited in our colleges in Saloniki and Athens as well as observing the work of the relief workers from our Service Committee and UNRRA; and the Parthenon in Athens at sunset! For one thing I discovered that all of the interpreters working with UNRRA were graduates of one or the other of our two colleges. Then came another one of the great surprises of travel these days—a free ride in the military attache's plane to Naples, Italy.

I wish I could share with you all that I saw of relief work in Italy and France. Some of you know about the unusually fine piece of work where I had a lovely three weeks while waiting for a boat back to America. Here I should like to list friends by name, too; those English friends who shared their food with me; Miss Nichols and Mrs. Turner in our Service Committee office and the group of American young people doing a good job for us in bombed out churches. More than the clothes, food and money, English Congregationalists appreciate the people we have sent them.

I had a delightful week-end in Geneva, Switzerland, attending John Calvin's Church on Sunday and visiting the headquarters of the World Council of Churches and the World Student Christian Federation. I also realized a life-long ambition when I spent a week in Denmark visiting folk schools and cooperatives in that beautiful country.

This has been mostly a recital of the places I visited but some of you asked for it! As I have mentioned each place I have longed to stop and tell you about some of the people I met or share some experience. I rejoice over every little evidence of "peace on earth" and have faith that some really significant foundations are being laid even in these uncertain days.

A Hundred Year Test

Exactly one hundred years ago the pastor of the North Congregational Church, Hartford, Connecticut, was busy writing a book. It was a tiny volume of seventy-two small pages when in 1847 the Massachusetts Sabbath School Society published it under the title, "Discourses on Christian Nurture."

Neither the publishers nor the author could foresee the split-atom reverberations that would rock New England. In fact, the fury of criticism that arose caused the Publishing Committee of the Massachusetts Sabbath School Society to withdraw the book almost immediately. Naturally that made more people than ever want to read it! Thereupon the author re-issued it himself in that same year.

The kindly, courageous clergyman whose devotion to truth made him a pioneer in the religious development of the nineteenth century was Horace Bushnell (1802-1876). The bomb that his little book contained can be summarized in one sentence: "The child should grow up a Christian and never know himself as being otherwise."

To realize why such a doctrine should arouse bitter controversy, we must remember that most church people of that day held that the Christian life must always be entered by the same type of religious experience. Many adult Christians had begun their religious life by means of a dramatic "turning about" attended by strong emotional states. It was assumed, therefore, that children must always begin their Christian lives in such a manner. Bushnell thought otherwise. Some people, to be sure, enter the Christian life by such conversions. But other people, and perhaps most children, can be led to the same Christian life by the more gradual, less spectacular processes of Christian nurture. The test is not the manner by which once we accepted the Christian gospel but the degree to which we live it.

Instead of placing the total emphasis on conversion, Bushnell advocated Christian nurture as the method of promoting Christian living. It was essential, he said, to relate learning to experience rather than simply to inculcate dogma and rationalism. He called upon parents and ministers to concentrate on the development of Christian character in boys and girls. He advocated and practiced international interdenominational fellowship.

To Dr. Bushnell's writings and their influence on Sunday school leaders of the latter half of the nineteenth century is very largely due the launching of modern religious education. Out of such an emphasis on the need for religious instruction for children and youth adapted to their ages sprang movements and organizations that eventuated in 1922 in the International Council of Religious Education, which represents forty Protestant denominations and thirty-one state councils of churches and religious education.

Today the vision of Horace Bushnell reaches out to include Sunday church schools, weekday and vacation schools, leadership and parent education, visual and radio education. And the growing process takes in Mother and Dad as well as little Johnnie.—Philip C. Landers, "A Century Beckons."

NEWS AND VIEWS

When you get your automobile liability insurance this year, we suggest you ask the company how much of this expenditure is made necessary by drinking drivers. You'd be surprised!

There seems to be a dearth of news from our churches. Are they not doing anything, or are they just bashful? Certainly it cannot be that it is just lack of interest in passing the good news along!

Rev. Murdock Butler died Tuesday morning in Roanoke and was buried Wednesday afternoon at Johnson's Grove in Eastern Virginia. Mr. Butler was the former pastor of the Wakefield Parish.

The Eleventh Annual Pastor's Study Conference will be held at First Church, Springfield, Massachusetts, February 3 and 4. Dr. Warren W. Pickett will serve as chaplain. The speakers include Drs. Wilhelm Pauck, Samuel McCrea Cavert and George M. Gibson.

This is the "College Period" in our Convention's financial calendar. Why not raise the college apportionment during this period. It will be of inestimable value to the college, and it will clear the slate for your church finance committee to start on something else.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends sympathy to Superintendent W. T. Scott in the loss of his brother who died at his home in Greensboro on Tuesday of this week, and to Dr. Truman B. Douglass in the passing of his father, Rev. Truman D. Douglass. Mr. Douglass was for many years a Congregational minister in the mid-west, but since his retirement he lived in Claremont, California.

The Library of Congress has received the only existing set of Direct Living Descendants of the Washington Family. This was published in 1933 by the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission and consists of four folio volumes; it was prepared by Miss Ann M. Washington. It is through the generosity of Rep. Sol Bloom of New York that this "unique and authoritative tool for genealogists" has come to the Library of Congress.

CENSUS OF RELIGIOUS BODIES—1946.

The Director of the Census is authorized by Congress to take a Census of the Religious Bodies in the United States every ten years, the first census in this decennial series having been taken in 1906. The information is collected through the use of a simple schedule or questionnaire, which is mailed to the individual churches, filled out by the pastor or clerk, and returned to the Census Bureau for tabulation. This census provides the only official government figures with respect to membership in the various religious denominations or organizations.

Preparations are now being made for the 1946 Census and the schedules will be mailed to the churches early in 1947. This is a most important inquiry and for its success it is vital that the Bureau of the Census have the utmost cooperation from the pastors or clerks of the churches, as well as from all religious leaders and officials. The schedule for this census includes a question on the number of members of each local church, with a supplementary question on the number under thirteen years of age. The second question on membership will facilitate comparison among denominations having different provisions for inclusion of young children as church members. There are also questions on church expenditures, Sunday schools, etc.

If the statistics of religious organizations are to be of maximum value, it is essential that the returns be accurate and complete and cover, as nearly as possible, every church or religious organization in the United States. The census can be completed promptly only if each pastor will participate wholeheartedly in the work by filling out the schedule for his church and returning it promptly to the Bureau of the Census. It is a tremendous task to obtain returns from the more than two hundred and fifty thousand churches scattered throughout the United States, but it can be done and it is hoped that the church leaders will realize the importance of the census and will do everything in their power to help the Census Bureau secure prompt reports from all the churches.

God does not settle His accounts at the end of every month but He always settles them.

DO NOT PRAY FOR EASY LIVES.

A Radio Address

By ALBERT W. PALMER.

Many years ago, when I was assistant pastor at Redlands, I attended a dinner where the hostess used as place-cards some beautifully printed quotations done in green and gold with real artistic beauty. The quotation on my place-card was this from Phillips Brooks: "Do not pray for easy lives. Pray to be stronger men. Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks. Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle. But you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, at the richness of life which has come in you by the grace of God."

I took the card home and pinned it up on my study wall. Later, when it became dog-eared and worn, I had it framed. All the years of my ministry it has hung there as a perpetual reminder of one of the basic facts of the Christian life. It has said to me, in effect, "There are great reserves of power available for those who put their trust in God."

These courageous words came out of Phillips Brooks' life situation. Outwardly he had almost everything one could desire. He was born into a family of moderate wealth and established social position and in Boston. You know some men are born, some achieve greatness while others are born in Boston. Not only that, but he attended Boston Latin School and graduated from Harvard College. . . . Big, strong, handsome, member of a family of culture and wealth and a Harvard graduate—what a lucky young man, his contemporaries doubtless said.

But in his first life venture he failed. . . . He tried teaching school but the boys played horse with him. He just couldn't maintain discipline. So he gave up teaching in despair. Then came a period of soul searching out of which he emerged with a decision to study for the ministry. Here at last he succeeded marvelously and became one of the outstanding preachers of his own, or any other, generation.

But all was not easy here. Soon after he graduated from the theological seminary at Alexandria, Va., and while he was a young rector at Philadelphia, the Civil War broke out. Phillips Brooks carried the Civil War in his heart. He cared for wounded soldiers in the hospitals. He was the friend of the Negro, just coming out of slavery. He comforted

A "Feather Merchant" in Deep South India

By GORDON MCINTYRE

EDITOR'S NOTE—A "Feather Merchant" in Army parlance means a person serving under the Army wearing an officer's uniform and entitled to an officer's rating, but with the freedom of a civilian. He is generally called a "Tech Rep." or "Technical Representative," and comes from some American aircraft or engineering concern aiding the U. S. Military. It was in this capacity that Mr. McIntyre was in India. Mr. McIntyre is now a full-fledged civilian living in San Dimas, California, where he has written several long articles for his local paper on his experiences in India. His job right now is the one full-time paid fireman in his township. This article may be used as illustrative material in our current missionary study of India.

This is a story of how six Americans took a trip into the deep south of India to a little city, rich historically, called Madura, to visit the American Mission and had their eyes opened to the extent that all six of them are now ready to sing the praises of this small group of missionaries. Their genial host was Lloyd L. Lorbeer of Pomona, who went to Pomona College and is known to many in Pomona Valley.

An Unexpected Welcome.

One evening about 6:30, six tired dirty American Sahibs rolled into Madura. Really they had to go one more stop before detraining, so no move was made to get off, as Pasumalai is where the Mission is located. But to the surprise of all, Mr. Lorbeer came up to the car and welcomed all the boys to South India. It proved to be just a short welcome as he had promised to hold services for the boys at the American College. He did not stay long enough to meet the three new boys who had not come down for their Thanksgiving dinner the year before.

He talked about five minutes, then dashed away to keep his appointments. With instructions as to what to do when we arrived at the Mission there was no cause for panic and we soon reached Pasumalai without mishap. There were about twelve Indian boys awaiting us at the station and they took care of the handling of the baggage and soon each man had his room assigned to him and he was busy taking his bath in the nice mission home of Lloyd Lorbeer.

Cow Mountain.

Pasumalai is a nice little place, being even smaller than San Dimas, during the months of November, December and January but it can get very hot, too. Pasumalai means, in Tamil, "cow mountain," and the mission school is built on the side of Cow Mountain. The home of Mr. Lorbeer overlooks the surrounding ground and buildings.

Begin With the Kids.

One of the most interesting parts of the school is the nursery school, which by the way, was started by Mrs. Elva Lorbeer, and it is here where the real good is started. The one way to train these people is to take them away from their evil-smelling and ill-equipped huts in the village and show them the better ways of Christianity when they are very young. The nursery gives the little kiddies a daily portion of cereal that will give them their calcium. They get their daily bath and learn how to start out in life, the most important of which is to learn to play. Few children in the lower castes really learn how to play. They are put to work so early in life that they never reap the benefits of this wholesome exercise.

Get 'Em Young.

The Pasumalai schools consist of a high school, kindergarten, grammar school, a trade school, manual training, agricultural and farm work, all of which can help prepare the Indian students for the American College in Madura. So the object lesson of this training program is: get them young, train them for college, make teachers out of them and let the teachers convert them from the Hindu religion to the Christian faith. But at no time during their educational period do they try to convert these Indians from any religion to that of the Christian. True, they are shown the advantages of it, but they are not forced to accept it and for that reason they have won more to our faith than by any other way.

The next day after the boys arrived, being Monday, they were taken around the school grounds and shown a few of the ways in which the students are trained. There was a Hindu Festival in the making, at this time of year and so the schools were not in session for the three-day period, but the trade schools were still working. So Mr. Lorbeer showed the boys around in this department.

A Call On the Doctor.

At 3:00 P. M. the old Chevrolet was shoved out of the garage and down the hill to get it started and seven Americans were headed for Madura, about three miles away. The first visit was to the Willis Pierce Memorial Hospital where Dr. E. W. Wilder is in charge. Many contributions from public spirited citizens and cotton mills of Madura have helped to equip and make possible the work they carry on. The hospital is built in such a way so as to make it as cool as possible in this hot country. There is one hospital for men and the next door is the women's hospital. It was at the latter that we got to view the tiny babies, all less than two weeks old. One little fellow had a head shaped like a gourd, but then maybe it will grow into shape as he grows older. But if it doesn't he sure will make a good beggar when he grows up. The more deformed they are over here the better beggars they make.

The Temple.

From the hospitals the gang went over to the Pagoda or the Sri Meenakshi Temple. After the visit to the temple the guide, Mr. Lorbeer, hurried the boys back to Pasumalai to play their scheduled volley ball game with the Indian boys of the high school. The game would have made good material for Walt Disney—volley ball is a kid's game and old timers like these boys can get sadly out of practice in a few years. But it was great entertainment for the over two hundred boys on the side lines and when Pappy Kidd would hit the ball over the net they would send up a big cheer. He was the most awkward of the six, then came the Swede, Mr. Ahlin. However, it was looked on as one of the highlights of the trip and everyone was willing to have another game before leaving for home.

The Leper Colony.

The next day, Tuesday, was to be a special treat for three of the Americans. Dr. Wilder had offered to take three of them to the Leper Island, some three miles out of Madura and allow them to see how that part of the mission work is being carried out. So at 9:00 A. M. the doctor's car arrived and Ahlin, Dudley and McIntyre were picked up and driven to Manamadura to the leper colony. There were many things learned that day and one of them was that leprosy is not as contagious as is generally thought. The buildings were all very orderly and the patients looked clean in their white Dhoties. They kept their distances and that was the way the three boys liked it. The doctor explained that leprosy is really contagious when in the beginning, but after it had reached the stage where the fingers and toes were falling off it was not in the least contagious. It is a disease of the nerves and when they are affected that is when it has to run its course. In all it was a very instructive day.

RIGHTO, BISHOP!

Henry Knox Sherrill is the new Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church. As would be expected, the Bishop has been making some pronouncements. They do not strike one as being a bit pontifical on the one hand or prosaic on the other. Just what has the Bishop been saying? Here are his pointed remarks:

"Missions, as I understand it, is the winning of all life to obedience to the will of God. Let us face how little we do; how small is the vision of Christian people in the light of the magnitude of the task—a little and so late."

Then the Bishop got down, as we say, to brass tacks. "What ties our hands is not wickedness, as the world recognizes wickedness; but the small issues with which we occupy our time—and it is some of the most devout among us who are so occupied. It acts as does red tape in government affairs and proceedings. A great deal of our ecclesiastical argument has to do with what kind of paper we shall put on the attic, while the foundations of our world are in flames." This lamentable condition, we might add, appears to be quite ecumenical.

CONGREGATIONALISTS and CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Horace Bushnell was the father, or one of the fathers of modern Christian education. He lived in a theological age when "a child could not be saved unless he were made from birth an alien to the Kingdom of God." Bushnell sought to supplement the revival methods by calling attention to alternate roads to salvation. Dr. Gaius Glenn Atkins writes: "In mental action he was the protagonist in a liberation of Christian thought of momentous consequences." Our modern emphasis on Christian education is a logical and inevitable outgrowth of his "Christian Nurture." Congregationalists have extended a mighty influence in Christian education, not only at the college level, but throughout the program of local churches.

The International Council thought it fitting that on this one hundredth anniversary of Dr. Bushnell's book, another small book be published. Accordingly, brief statements have been secured from 192 denominational leaders and published under the title, "A Century Beckons." These writers re-echo Bushnell's plea for the need and value of Christian nurture. In the words of Dr. Landers, "The writers of these pungent paragraphs point what the coming century needs to do just as Horace Bushnell blueprinted the task of religious education in the last century." The booklet may be had from the International Council for 50c. The statements which follow indicate the scope of our task and remind us that our denominational leaders are maintaining our historic witness.

"Christian education is the force that will keep America great. Through it her ideals will control her machines, her visions will dictate her practices, and her dreams will become her ambitions"—Margaret (Mrs. Ross) Ensminger, Congregational Christian Church, Field Secretary, Southern Union College, Wadley, Ala.

"Because the small child asks, 'Where is God?' church school leaders are given the joyous and solemn task of helping him find his answer in living today. By providing suggestions and materials to help parents guide their children's experiences toward Christian growth, we work together to build a better world."—Dorothy (Mrs. H. C.) Carl, Primary Superintendent, First Plymouth Congregational Church, Lincoln, Neb.

"America's future challenges the church. Working with a few of the 17,000,000 youth untouched by religious training. I am appalled by the barrenness of their outlook but thrilled by their eager search. Church children have something I would give these others—belief in brotherliness and upstanding faith in God."—Josephine Zartman (Mrs. C. S.) Nichols, Congregational Christian Church, Chairman of the Committee of Religious Education of Children for the Greater Springfield Council of Churches, Springfield, Mass.

"A certain amount of factual knowledge is a part of all Christian education. It is vital and important to youth when it is practical and tangible. How can they live according to religious convictions unless they know what they believe? Youth seeks accurate religious teaching for everyday living."—Wanda Mae Brown, Director of Religious Education, First Church (Congregational) in Newton Centre, Mass.

"First the deadly V-2 rocket bombs, then the catastrophic atomic bomb, have sharply underscored the futility of reliance on power. Mankind's sole defense rests in spreading Christian goodwill, that is, friendship, sympathy, and understanding. Religious education alone can develop in children and adults the saving spirit of Jesus Christ."—George V. Kidder, Chairman of Men's Work, Vermont Congregational Conference.

"The need and necessity for religious education should be exemplified. Adults are too busy with a host of club and other organizational activities. As an example to children and youth, adults need to re-evaluate their interests and efforts to find time to devote to education as sponsored by their church."—H. A. Deckert, Church School Superintendent, Congregational Church, Springfield, S. D.

"Christian education needs expert guidance as well as godly devotion. Proved techniques in the art of imparting knowledge and truth are too much ignored in Sunday schools. Let us vitalize our spiritual concern for the younger generation by acquiring and applying the best psychology and pedagogy that science can supply."—John Anson Ford, Congregationalist, Supervisor, Third District, Los Angeles County (Calif.) Board of Supervisors.

The Twelfth Biennial Meeting of the National Christian Council

A Cool Introduction.—When I came through Shanghai late in September, people were still talking about what a terrifically hot summer it had been—the most uncomfortable in the memory of the oldest resident. I got back yesterday afternoon from the 12th Biennial Meeting of the National Christian Council, held in Community Church, and I am prepared to talk myself, at length, as to how uncomfortable that city now is from the cold. There may be offices in addition to those of UNRRA which are heated, but I didn't enter any. There may be homes that are warmer than that of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Edwards, where I was entertained, but I wonder. Let me hasten to say that in their home there was a moderate amount of heat during a good many hours of the day and that the temperature was undoubtedly a healthy one. But a person like myself, who has spent the last five winters either in the tropics or in the super-heated homes and offices of the USA, was at no time uncomfortably hot. (Exaggeration by understatement.)

I was glad to get back to the warmth of this house, a warmth made possible, as we are all aware, by generous provision of the ABCFM. Coal in Shanghai costs to or more than $900,000 a ton—when it can be bought—and the official rate of exchange, which means not more than 3,500, prevails among all mission organizations that do business through the Associated Mission Treasurers. Figure out for yourselves how warm we would ever be were we living in similar circumstances.

My attendance at this meeting was unexpected. When formal notices of it were received they included a request that so far as possible the churches pay the expenses of their delegates. Obviously the NCKLH was not in a position to pay the bills, or any considerable part of them, for Ch'en Ch'ang-yu, Wang Tze-chung, and myself, who with T. T. Lew, represent us. It was equally obvious to Mr. Chang, Robbins Strong and myself that of these people Mr. Wang could represent our work with complete satisfaction and also, an important consideration, would benefit greatly by a brief change of venue. Mr. Wang has been nowhere since he came back from the United States in the late summer of 1940. We, therefore informed the NCC office that he would be our representative at this meeting, and that we would carry two-thirds of his expenses. They wrote back definitely asking that I also attend, even if they had to pay all the bills. This, of course, embarrassed me, but in the face of it I could hardly refuse to go down, especially as at about the same time our resourceful Acting Treasurer recalled the fact that I had been appointed by the Board last May to be their representative at this particular meeting. The deduction he drew from this matter of record is undoubtedly clear to all of you, and on it we have acted, the NCC paying my travel one way.

Justified in the Event.—If not a great meeting it was at least a good one, and it did me good. Perhaps the best thing about it was that the meeting actually was held. The last Biennial was in 1937. It was no easy matter to bring together again, even in December, 1946, about a hundred people representing Christian work in all parts of the country—including the Northeastern Provinces. As a matter of fact that part of the country where most of the active Christian program in the years between has been carried on, West China, was the poorest in its representation. Attendance from other religions was, I think, nearly as good as would have been the case in normal times. (Just what criteria for normality shall we set up for use in the years to come, anyway?) The Council was not a young one—many of the delegates were elected as far back as 1937, or at any rate, before Pearl Harbor. Yet there were numerous new faces, younger faces, and about them all there was an air of earnestness, of determination and of faith.

Prevading the meeting right from the start was a consciousness of the desperate condition in which this country finds itself. Some features of our situation here in the North are more critical than anything found elsewhere and it seemed at times as if people from other areas were less than sufficiently aware of the seriousness of our situation and the disruption brought by it to much of our work. But the moral slump, the lack of character and integrity in so many of those in power, the absence of any adequate sense of social responsibility, weighed upon the hearts of all. This led directly, I think, to the two actions which are probably the most significant of those taken.

A Statement and a Program.—One of these was a manifesto from the Council to the nation. It was largely the work of C. T. Chao, and it might have come from a lineal descendant of Amos. It puts the Church on record as calling the nation to repentance. How much attention the nation will pay to it remains to be seen. But if the amount of publicity given to the Council's sessions in both vernacular and English language press is indicative, China is more ready to listen to the voice of the Church than it has ever been before. The local Chinese papers gave space daily to reporting the meetings, and twice the leading editorial of the Evening Post and Mercury, for example, dealt, and dealt favorably, with our sessions and things said at them.

The other action I have in mind was the decision to launch next year a three-year Forward Movement. (When asked why not a five-year movement, General Secretary W. Y. Che'en replied that five-year movements seem nowadays to be the exclusive property of groups distinctly not Christian!) If the suggested program is carried out, this will not come to its climax in North China until 1949, which will be just as well, I think, as in several respects we are least ready to push with vigor such an effort. The state of the nation calls for aggressive action by the Church; it will do much to pull the Church out of the doldrums, where such exists, to have the challenge of such an effort pushed home to its membership. Again, as in 1930, the first thing to do will be to put our own house in order. But then we should and must go forward, and go forward together.

In this latter regard, one whole day was spent discussing cooperative efforts with special emphasis on regional cooperation. All of us from North China, for example, met together under the leadership of Bishop Kaung with Mr. Merwin as secretary of the group, and I anticipate the activity of the Federation here in the North, more inclusive than the NCC in its local membership, will be considerably increased as a result.

There will be plenty of details about both the preparation and the program of this Movement in the months ahead. The committee in charge is headed by Bishop Ward of the Methodist Church and all who know him also know that nothing he undertakes is allowed to languish.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

We are in the period in which our college is to have a first place in the planning and thinking of our Convention. January and February have been set aside as college months. And as we come to this period we have much to be thankful for at Elon. It is in the first place again on the accredited list of colleges, thanks to all who helped to raise our endowment to the required amount. However, let us remember that that endowment must keep growing else again one day we shall be below the requirements.

We can be thankful also that at Elon there is a spirit of progress. I was on the campus a few days ago, and what fine looking young men and young women I saw there. And so many of them. Never had I seen anything like it. And a good spirit prevailed. As one met them in the halls, or on the campus walks, a friendly spirit of courtesy and good feeling was evident. There are some seven hundred seventy students enrolled at Elon this year. President Smith told the Executive Board of the Southern Convention that an unusually good spirit of study, and desire to advance in their courses prevailed. We can be thankful for our student body at Elon.

I was surprised at the large number of units—houses—from the Government which compose a little village just off the campus. More than seventy of these "student homes" were either occupied or being made ready for occupation. Across the street from them was a student barracks building which was all new and filled with students. A friend remarked to me that it was one of the most comfortable and desirous of the rooming houses. And also was I impressed with the number of new residences that are being built in the neighborhood of Elon. From Burlington to Elon is being scattered with new residences.

It is very fitting that Elon should now have a fulltime minister again to give pastoral care to these so many people. A true minister of God can greatly help in developing all these new homes, and living quarters, into a community, yes, "the beloved community." I had the privilege of being entertained in one of the new homes, that of my good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Jams F. Darden, and their little daughter, Brenda Faye. To provide church for such fine young people in the formative years of their homelife is the very foundation of this country of ours. We dare not let that opportunity slip there, or here, or anywhere in all our fair land.

Our Convention has a great opportunity at Elon. Our forefathers saw it, and we are entered into it. May we make good in our day as they did in theirs. I know of no better place for a man with money to invest than in our Christian College. There for all years to come it will be a good builder of the best ideals and vision in our youth. To have a share in that is to be greatly privileged. It is the call of God to Christian growth in our boys and girls. As I see it Elon is in a great section of our country, at a great stage in its development, and a large number of strong friends are rising up to call it blessed.

DO NOT PRAY FOR EASY LIVES.

parents of boys killed or wounded in battle.

It was against this background of initial life-work failure and the tragedy of war, as well as all his great-hearted pastoral parishoners, that he wrote at last: "Do not pray for easy lives. Pray to be stronger men. Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks. Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle. But you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, at the richness of life which has come in you by the grace of God."

I ask myself this morning, and I ask you, how is it that such reinforcement of strength comes to the man or woman of Christian faith amidst all of life's hardships and difficulties? How does religion help us be strong in the face of adverse conditions?

I wonder if the answer doesn't lie in two salient facts about the Christian religion?

(1) The first one is that the convinced and active Christian is inevitably some kind of an optimist. He may also be a pessimist within certain limitations. He may be a pessimist, for example, about the immediate future. Some pretty good Christians are pessimists about this stormy sin-cursed old world of ours and have little hope of our doing anything about it ourselves. So they fold their hands and wait for some miraculous second coming of Christ on the clouds when it will all be purged with fire and made over new and spotless without their having to do anything about it. I don't agree with them, but I recognize them as fellow Christians just the same, in spite of their pessimism about social reform and human efforts to bring about a better social order. The only point I am making just now is that sooner or later the most pessimistic Christian becomes an optimist. He believes that God cannot be permanently defeated, blocked or thwarted by evil men. I believe that, too. I am convinced that at the heart of the universe there is an ever-lasting and ever-present Force, which we call God, that is eternally on the side of righteousness.

Right forever on the scaffold?

Wrong forever on the throne?

Yet that scaffold sways the future;

And, behind the dark unknown,

Standeth God within the shadow—

Keeping guard above his own.

I believe that individual souls also are in the hands of God and that ultimately no one whose life is hid with Christ in God will be permanently defeated.

(2) The other fact about the Christian religion which makes it a source of renewed strength and courage in the face of all adversity is that it teaches people how to keep open the channels of communication between their souls and God. It does this through faith and prayer and meditation. Also by courageous and vigorous action parallel to our faith and prayer and meditation. In this way our lives begin to beat in harmony with God. We come in tune with the infinite. As we learn to do this, the comfort and power of God flow into our lives.

When this happens we begin to see what Phillips Brooks meant when he said, "Do not pray for easy lives. Pray to be stronger men." The tempests of the world beat upon us still. Things may go wrong and disappointments come. But we are not too greatly cast down or discouraged. We remember that Jesus said: "In the world ye shall have tribulation." But we also know, as he knew, that the eternal God is our refuge and that underneath are the everlasting arms. We remember that our lives are hid with Christ in God.

I wonder why it is that we are not all kinder to each other than we are. How much the world needs it! How easily it is done!—Henry Drummond.

News of Elon College

VETERANS HOUSING.

DIRECTIVE FROM THE GOVERNMENT: STOP ALL COSTRUCTION TODAY ON HOUSING UNITS.

Elon College is fortunate in being on the Government's list to receive housing units for G. I.'s. In the original allotment Elon College was allotted five buildings with six separate apartments each. These buildings were moved from Georgia to Elon College and re-erected. Cement slabs were laid for floors. These buildings were completed in early fall. All apartments were completely furnished with the exception of cooking utensils: pots, pans, silverware and dishes. They are very attractive and comfortable.

In the second allotment Elon College was allotted twelve additional buildings with three apartments each. These buildings were moved from Maxton, North Carolina, to the college, reconditioned and are in the process of being prepared for occupancy. Four buildings housing twelve families have been completed. The remaining twelve units of this second allotment have been completed on the outside with the exception of an underpinning for the buildings. The majority of them have been painted on the inside. Others have considerable carpentry work to be completed. All twelve buildings are to be wired and have plumbing installed. The first twelve units of the new allotment are furnished comparable to the first thirty units. The remaining twenty-four units are only partially furnished.

Yesterday the contractor, Henry C. Beek Company, of Atlanta, Ga., was notified by government authorities to halt all construction on the units, explaining that funds had been exhausted, and it was a question as to whether or not additional funds would be made available to complete the job. This is disturbing and will inconvenience seriously twenty-four G. I. families. These apartments have already been promised to G. I.'s, some of whom are now in college waiting the completion of their apartments that they may bring their families to Elon. Others are waiting, hoping to be able to move into their apartments and enter college at the beginning of the spring semester, March 10. If these housing units are not completed, it will certainly be a great disappointment to these G. I.'s and their families.

I have had a conference with the foreman in charge of our housing project. It is estimated that it will cost between $5,000 and $10,000 to complete the contract. The contractor had sufficient force on the job to complete all units ready for occupancy within three weeks. Certainly all units would have been ready for occupancy by the first of March. The question now confronting the college is: What shall be done with these unfinished buildings and apartments? Shall the college undertake to complete the job, or shall we let the buildings stand unfinished and unoccupied? The college does not have the funds for this purpose, but it does seem a great loss to everyone to permit these buildings to stand there without being completed and occupied.

The college was fortunate in having land near the campus suitable for this housing project. The houses are located on the old Huffines place that joins the campus on the north. A tract of about ten acres has been allotted for this purpose. The buildings are all newly painted and present a very attractive appearance. It is a good size village within itself. In fact, when the project is completed and all apartments are occupied, there will be nearly as many families in these apartments as now live in the town of Elon College.

Under the present arrangements the college did all necessary grading, opening up streets, preparing foundations and laying sidewalks for the entire project. The college was required to lay all water mains, the sewage lines and build a disposal plant at an expense of between $25,000 and $30,000. It is estimated that the Government has spent more than $100,000 in transporting these buildings, erecting, conditioning and furnishing them for occupancy. The college provides water for which it receives $2.50 a month from each family, which represents water rent paid by other citizens of the town. In addition, the college receives from the Government $75 a month rental for the land furnished the Government for this project. The college is required to collect all rent, deduct necessary charges, and forward the remainder to the Government. At the expiration of two years these housing units together with furniture become the property of the college in fee simple, at which time all revenue received from the buildings will come to the college.

It is hoped sincerely that some way may be worked out whereby this undertaking in behalf of the G. I.'s may be completed. It is a gracious thing on the part of our Government to make this provision and I am sure that if there is a way to complete this project, it will be done.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING—1945-46.

We have received through the Convention Office the payments of $52 from our good church in Southern Pines and $10 from Dr. John G. Truitt, personal, and to be credited to the church in Suffolk to be credited on last year's apportionments. This is certainly good of the Church of Wide Fellowship and Dr. Truitt, through the Suffolk Church. These contributions are greatly appreciated. Perhaps there are other churches due part or all of last year's apportionments for the college that would like to complete payment on their $1945-46 apportionment. This would be fine and most helpful.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Our Sunday schools and churches are beginning the new conference year in a most encouraging way for the college. To date the college has received from the Convention, not including this report, $1,046.13. The report herein submitted is a very encouraging one. More than four hundred dollars in one week is very good. If we could keep that up for the greater part of the year, we would have the apportionment in full. I am sure that it is possible, and if the churches and Sunday schools would give as they really can, this would be done. If your Sunday school has not been making monthly or quarterly contributions to the college, why not join with many of our Sunday schools and contribute this year? It would not inconvenience your Sunday school or church, and it would be of great assistance to your college.

MID-WINTER MEETING.

Around 300 national and state leaders of the Congregational Christian Churches in America, both lay and clerical, will meet in the Hotel Cleveland, Cleveland, Ohio, Monday, January 20, through Thursday, January 23, for their annual promotional and planning conference. These sessions are under the auspices of the Mission Council, the educational and promotional unit of three big national and international boards: The Board of Home Missions, the Council for Social Action, and the American Board of Foreign Missions.

Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher, Executive Secretary of the Missions Council and Mrs. William H. Medlicott, Associate Secretary, are in charge of the sessions.

Leaders of other national groups holding sessions in conjunction with the Missions Council meetings include the Executive Committee of the General Council; the National Committee of the Laymen's Fellowship; the Pilgrim Fellowship; the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women (state presidents); the Service Committee and the State Superintendent's Fellowship.

The Missions Council presiding officer will be Dr. E. Paul Sylvester, Chairman of the Missions Council and the Chaplain, Dr. Albert W. Palmer Moderator of the General Council.

Primarily a working and planning conference, the Missions Council sessions will hear a panel of prominent speakers including: Dr. Henry Smith Leiper of the World Council of Churches; Miss Mabel Head, Official Observer of the United Nations for the United Council of Church Women; Dr. Douglas Horton, minister of the General Council and Chairman of the American Section of the World Council of Churches; Dr. John A. Reuling, just back from a nine-month tour of Africa; Harold W. Hackett, ex-navy officer and ex-Japan missionary recently returned from a tour of the Micronesian Islands; Dr. Carl Heath Kopf, just back from the Philippine Islands; Rev. Nelson Dreier, Rev. John Dewey Moore, Rev. Mary McKee Chester and Joseph West Hibben, MISSION TO HAWAII.

Rev. and Mrs. Ralph R. Shrader of 31 Holden Road, West Newton, Mass., flew January 12 from California to the Hawaiian Islands on a special visit in the interests of the American Board of Foreign Missions, of which Mr. Shrader is a Secretary. The Shraders will return to the mainland about February 26 and after a series of cross country speaking appointments Mr. Shrader will resume his work from Boston headquarters about March 18.

"I am going out to the Hawaiian Islands to renew American Board contacts with friends and churches and in the interest of the work in which both the Hawaiian Board and the American Board are cooperating," said Mr. Shrader, who was himself a Congregational missionary to China and has held several successful pastorates in the United States.

There is a historical bond between New England and the Hawaiian Islands because the American Board of Boston sent the first band of missionaries to these Islands from Boston on the Brig Thaddeus in October, 1819. It was a stormy voyage lasting five months. The Congregational missionaries brought education, modern civilization and Christian ideals to these Islands and but for them the Hawaiians would never have had a written language.

On December 23, 1931, the first message from New England to the Hawaiian Islands by the radio telephone service of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company was spoken by Dr. Ashley Lay Leavitt of Brookline, Mass., the Chairman of the American Board Prudential Committee, from the Board rooms on Beacon Hill to the Hawaiian Evangelical Association in Honolulu.

TWELFTH BIENNIAL MEETING OF THE NCC.

Minor Criticisms.—There were to my mind several notable deficiencies in the meeting. Neither education nor medical work were given the amount of attention they deserve. But it was primarily a church-centered conference, and there was none too much time to talk about the matters on the agenda.

Perhaps it should be noted that the three most significant addresses were made by educationalists. Two of these were by T. C. Chao, who certainly has gained in spiritual stature by his wartime experiences. The other was by the new president of St. Johns, Dr. Y. C. Tu (T'u, not Tu, by the way). Dr. Tu is not an Episcopalian, taught physics for some twenty years at Shanghai University, recently has been giving full-time to the work of the National Committee of the "Y," and may be remembered here in the North as one of the team that visited most of the student centers of the country back in 1936, I think it was. He still gives the impression of youth and vigor, has a remarkably fine command of English, both written and spoken, and has ideas that require such a command in order to express them adequately. It is interesting that St. Johns went outside its own alumni when choosing its new president.

It also seemed to me that the meeting dodged the most serious aspect of what was recognized at the beginning as the most critical problem facing the church. Leadership, "jen ts'ai," was stressed in the first of Dean Chao's addresses and emphasized by everyone. But when the Council was divided into four groups for a day's discussion of the subject, ideas were evidently confined almost entirely to methods and varieties of training. In other words, the problem of recruiting and the allied problem of maintenance—to my mind the first won't be solved until we are nearer a satisfactory solution of the second—were conspicuous by inadequate treatment. I hope I'm wrong; I had to miss most of the discussion of leadership because of simultaneous work on a special small committee. I also hope that the little emphasis upon this particular phase of the problem was not due to what I myself would have to confess: that in my present unenlightened state, the problem is insoluble.

A Whiff of Statistics.—An effort had been made, not too successful, to get an overall picture of Christian work in China this autumn, especially as to the discernible effects of the war years. Educational work is not covered. Here are a few of the things that came to light:

First, as to the missionary force, where returns were more complete than in other fields of inquiry. In 1926 the number of missionaries was 8,325; in 1936 it was 6,059. By March, 1947, it is expected to be 1,951. The CIM and associated missions by that time will have 477, the American Methodists 178, the Northern Presbyterians 155, the Southern Baptists 103. No other mission expects to have more than a hundred. But the English Methodists count on having 95, the American Church Mission 94, and the LMS 61. I could find no basis for reporting our expectations at more than 31. Revisions upward welcomed!

In medical work apparently only about 80 mission hospitals out of the 270 prewar figure are open under former management, served by 105 foreign doctors. The rest of the hospitals are either closed or under exclusive Chinese direction. The Methodists and Northern Presbyterians each have 17 doctors on the job, and the CIM is next with 13.

Church statistics are much less complete. Those received covered only 2,031 churches in 12 different denominations. Some of the replies are of interest, however, as being probably symptomatic of conditions generally. Sixty per cent of the churches reported have less than 100 members; 23 per cent between 100 and 200; only 17 per cent more than 200. These 12 denominations have lost 7 per cent of their organized churches during the war years, and 27 per cent of their "other preaching places." Church membership, however, is 15 per cent more than prewar. (This does not apply to the KLH, where indications are that we have dropped some 23 per cent, though we may have written off more than we needed to because of inability to make contact with large parts of our field.) "Lack of pastoral care" is given as the chief cause of people leaving the church in 64 per cent of the replies. Under "Attitude of Outsiders," the replies group themselves: friendly, 52 per cent; indifferent, 30 per cent; critical, 18 per cent.

Among the replies to the question regarding the area of greatest need, 24 stressed farmers; 17 put first youth, students and intelligentsia; 6 put merchants, employees and urban people first; and another 6 gave government employees and military people. "Womenfolk" and "aborigines" brought up the rear—after several other small categories—favored by one each!

Passing over a number of other inquiries, I will close this section with mention of the problem of leadership. Under "workers required and in training," those replying give figures of 780 men and 475 women, of whom only 215 men and 87 women are actually in training. In other words, 22.94 per cent of the requirements are in prospect of being met. This is alarming, but probably no more so than many would have expected. As to self-support, 522 churches out of the 2,031 covered in the reports, or 25.70 per cent appear to be self-supporting, "though the degree and extent of self-support may vary considerably." As to sources of support generally, for all churches, 39 per cent is put down as coming from local contributions, 45 per cent from mission grants, and 16 per cent from relief funds. And under local contributions, 47 per cent are reported as being in kind rather than in cash. Sufficient unto this report are the statistics thereof.

Personalalia.—There are a number of personal items which I'm sure will interest you. I dropped off the bus from the Lunghwa Airfield as we passed Community Church, knowing that the "Y" apartment in which the Edwards live was not far away. Calling their number to get directions, I was answered by Bill Leete, and a few minutes later he and Mrs. Edwards picked me up in a taxi enroute to a Peking restaurant where Dwight Edwards was waiting and where we promptly demolished a huge plate of chiao tzu, a large sweet-sour fish, some delicious steamed rolls, and a bowl of hot soup. It was a warm welcome to a cold town. Bill was down for a conference the next day on Child Welfare, featuring Dr. Carson Ryan and Professor Osborn, the latter on leave from Columbia, dividing a year between Gingling and Yenching. Bill and I shared the Edwards' guest room that night.

Later in the week I met a person Bill had hoped to welcome to China, but missed because he had to return to Nanking before the ship arrived: his niece, Barbara Leete Stang. She was appointed as an "Oberlin Rep" to Ming Hsien in 1945, but was diverted into matrimony before starting out from America. With her husband I suppose she is now as I write somewhere between Shanghai and Chinwangtao, headed for the College of Chinese Studies. A most attractive YMCA couple. The ship on which they travel, the Hua Lien that brought Altie Galt north, is also to be diverted, I am told, after this trip, to the Australia run, and will not be available for future arrivees for travel north.

I may as well mention here as later that it is expected that our ten people on the Marine Lynx—latest announced date of arrival still being the 30th!—will probably be able to come north in a Lutheran plane. There are so many Presbyterians headed this way that one load will not be enough, and we get in to help fill up the second load! A privilege with a bit of a bitter tang to it; that our reinforcements can be so easily accommodated in the category of Presbyterian surplus, so to speak. Both Bill Cochran and Wally Merwin are staying in Shanghai until the ship arrives, and Jim Hunter has plans laid to be there, too. If all goes well we should be welcoming these reinforcements about January 7 or 8, allowing nearly a week after the arrival of the ship for locating and handling baggage.

A week ago this morning shortly after breakfast I talked on the phone with Bob Chandler and a week ago tomorrow evening with Guy Thelin, a Church of Christ delegate from the Mid-Fukien Synod, had dinner with Bob and Helen at the home of Bishop and Mrs. Roberts, where they were entertained prior to proceeding by ship to Foochow on Monday. They of course were eager for all the North China news that could be crowded into the time we had together—always allowing a minute or so at intervals for Guy and Foochow. And we would have kept the tiny cylindri-

LOUIS BRAILLE.

More than a hundred years ago in the country of France a baby boy was born. Up until the age of three he was a happy laughing baby like others around him. At three he became blind and there was no hope of his ever seeing again. He learned to talk and to listen carefully to every sound. He learned to walk, but not without getting many a hard bump. He learned the shape of things by holding them in his hands and feeling them. But he was never able to go to school and learn to read and write as the other boys did.

When Louis reached the age of ten he entered a home for blind children. There he learned to play an organ. He grew into manhood and became the organist in a large church in Paris. But still he was unable to read.

When he got to be nineteen Louis had learned to do so many things well that he was asked to become a teacher for other blind people. He taught them how to listen to the many sounds around them. He taught some of them how to play the organ. He taught them many of the things he had learned about the world in which they lived. Yet, there was no way in which he could teach them how to read.

One day he said to himself, "I must find a way for blind people to read." From that day on he spent long hours deep in thought. At long last he had an idea that he thought might work. "The words in books must be printed so that we who can't see them may be able to feel them." He set to work on the plan. Days later Louis Braille moved his hands along over some small raised dots on a piece of paper and slowly spelled the words which his fingers felt.

"I can read! I can read!" he cried out. "My plan works. Now all blind people can be taught how to read!" From that day until this the system of raised dots which he worked out has been called "Braille." Braille books are very large and are very expensive, but blind boys and girls learn to read them today, thanks to Louis Braille.

AT THE STORE.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Larry, put that peach back! And leave those tomatoes alone! It's hard enough to have to bring you with me without having to watch you every minute." With that, a tired-looking mother pulled her little son away from the counter of fresh fruit and vegetables in the Fairway Grocery Store.

"Children are a lot of trouble when you have to take them shopping," commented another mother who was tightly holding the hand of a dimpled baby girl.

The two women were standing beside me at the checking-stand, where I was awaiting my turn to be served.

"Larry's into everything," answered the first speaker. "I can't find anyone to stay at home with him. I have to take him along everywhere I go."

"So do I have to take Phyllis," sighed the second mother. "She wears me out. Oh, my goodness! Look at them now!"

While their mothers were talking, the children had broken away from their restraining hands. The boy had knocked down a rosy-cheeked peach and was at this moment rolling it across the floor to the little girl.

"Children, stop that!" the mothers exclaimed with one voice as they hastened to recapture their little one's hands.

"Whatever are we going to do with them?" I heard one mother ask the other as they hurried out of the store, each clutching a big bag of groceries with one hand and a rebellious child with the other.

"I'm sure my neighbor, Joyce Malvin, could answer that question," I thought to myself. "I've never seen her little Dean make much trouble for anyone anywhere."

Just as I started out of the store, I met Joyce, with Dean in his go-cart, coming in.

"Are you in a hurry, Lucia?" Joyce asked eagerly. "If you aren't, Dean and I will walk home with you."

"I'll be glad to wait for you," I replied. "I'm all through with my work at the library for the day."

"That's good," answered my neighbor as I turned to go back with them.

"We were just wishing for some good company, weren't we, Dean?"

The sturdy little fellow confirmed his mother's words with a welcoming smile. Joyce took him out of his cart and let him walk around the store with her.

"We need some soap, Dean," she said, handing him a small bar. "You can carry it for Mother until we're ready to pay for our things."

The boy carried the soap carefully while his mother filled her shopping basket. At the fruit and vegetable counter, Joyce talked to her son while she was making her selections. "We'll have fresh peas for dinner, Dean, and you may help to shell them. We'll buy a few of those nice peaches for our dessert. Mother will carry the peaches, because they bruise easily, but you may carry some lemons. When we get home we'll make lemonade and give some to Aunt Lucia."

Of course, I'm not my little neighbor's real aunt, but I enjoy being called his aunt.

Joyce deposited her heavy packages in the front of the go-cart, and when Dean was seated placed a small bag of lemons in the little boy's hands, picked up her peaches, and we started home.

"I hope we haven't kept you waiting too long," she said to me. "Dean slows me down a bit, but he likes to help."

"I've enjoyed every minute with you," I declared. "Before you came in I heard two mothers complaining about how hard it was for them to take their children with them to the store. They hadn't learned your good way of letting the children help with the shopping."

Joyce smiled. "I should never think of doing anything else, Lucia. Mother used to let me help her when I was a child, so I started very early letting Dean carry small packages home from the store and letting him help me with other things, within his capacity, at home. Sometimes the little fellow is awkward and slow, but the joy of doing things together makes up for that."

VITAMINS FOR VOLUNTEERS.

By FRANCES DUNLAP HERON.*

Ten thousand citizens of the United States and Canada have a date in Des Moines, Iowa, next July 23-27. They will get there by automobile, by special train, by bus and by plane. They are volunteer Sunday school workers, and they include nationally prominent business men, civic leaders, farmers, young mothers, veterans, youth with star dust in their eyes, and grandmothers and grandfathers who want to keep it there. Some there will be who can say, "My great-great-grandmother attended the first international Sunday school convention back in 1832."

For this assembly will be the twenty-first International Convention of Sunday school superintendents, teachers and officers, and other lay people concerned with Christian education. It is the direct descendant of those colorful mass meetings of 1832 to 1890 when enthusiasm for Sunday school conventions covered the country and resulted in the International Sunday School Association. Under the leadership of such laymen as Henry J. Heinz and John Wanamaker, an international convention was held every four years.

After the Association joined with the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations to become the International Council of Religious Education in 1922, the schedule continued every four years through 1938, when a convention was held in Columbus, Ohio. The war made it impossible for the Council to plan another before 1947.

Convention a United Protestant Effort.

At this moment the forty Protestant denominations and the more than one hundred seventy-three interdenominational councils of churches and religious education of the United States and Canada that cooperate in the International Council of Religious Education are working to assure their attendance goals. They want this "Twenty-First International al Sunday School Convention" to stand before the world as the united Protestant effort of the lay Christian workers in the church schools of two neighbor nations.

This will be a different kind of convention from one held in 1898 or 1906 or 1934. True, it will still be led by laymen and directed to laymen devoted to the work of the Sunday school—James L. Kraft, a Sunday school superintendent for thirty-six years, is chairman—but the tone is changed. It's a long way from the rugged Sunday school founding of the nineteenth century. It's even a good distance from the depression days of 1934. There's been a world War II, leaving behind it social, economic, racial and international tensions, low national morale, juvenile delinquency, mounting divorce and sex immorality, alcoholism, and disregard of Bible teachings. The question on lips and in hearts around the world is this: "Will we be blown to bits in four or five years or can we find a way to lead our people to Christ?"

Varied Program Planned.

In such a sobering "It's almost our last chance" atmosphere the convention program committee is arranging for four days of worship, Bible study, popular addresses and discussion on the task of Christians in the home, the church, the community and the world—all tied around the theme, "Live Christ—Teach Christ." While there will be exhibits of books, films, pictures and other aids to help the teacher or parent who must impart religious knowledge, this convention is to be no leadership training institute. It is instead to provide for volunteer church school workers of united Protestantism spiritual vitamins—new courage and optimism that will send each one home saying, "God has given me one of the biggest jobs in the world today. I'll have to get busier!"

The Thursday, Friday and Saturday sessions will open with informal prayer services in several Des Moines churches. These will be the personal, Upper Room type of intercession for God's guidance. Regular sessions each morning, held in the Des Moines Coliseum, will feature a period of study on the significance of the Bible as the foundation of Christian teaching and living. Bible leaders will include: Dr. Paul Hoh, president of Lutheran Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dr. Ernest Trice Thompson, professor of church history, Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.; and Dr. A. G. Wehrli, dean and head of the department of Old Testament, Eden Theological Seminary, Webster Groves, Mo.

Denominational Group Meetings Planned.

At 11:00 o'clock, attention will focus each day on matters that Christian education should be increasingly concerned about: Wednesday, The Sunday School and American Scene; Thursday, The Sunday School and Our Homes; Friday, The Sunday School and Our Leaders; and Saturday Sunday Schools Cooperating in Our Community.

A prominent part of the convention which will be especially helpful to the lay worker will be afternoon denominational meetings. At these sessions denominational leaders in areas being emphasized by the convention will present ways and means of strengthening the work of their denomination's Sunday schools. This will give opportunity for both denominational planning and fellowship.

Evenings, the programs will reach out to tackle the moral and spiritual problems that grip the earth today—the social, civic and political problems that must be the responsibility of the individual Christian citizen. Internationally known speakers are being scheduled. Pre-evening sessions will include films showing Christian education in the world today.

Evangelical Note To Be Stressed.

The convention is to close on Sunday afternoon with a service of commitment pledging the thousands to "Go home to work and to win others." For throughout the week the keynote will be evangelical. Behind all the addresses, the discussion and the speaking one fundamental challenge will stand out: acceptance of the gospel of Jesus Christ and allegiance to his teachings offer the only hope of saving the world for peace. Only the spirit of Christ in enough men and women and children around the globe can overcome the atom bomb.

A CORRECTION.

In the signatures under the resolutions of Clarence D. Newman by the Board of deacons of the Congregational Christian Church of Henderson, which appeared in last week's issue of "The Christian Sun," one of the names was S. H. Keelburg—that name should have been I. H. Vickery.

JESUS CROSSES RACIAL BOUNDARIES.

LESSON 4—JANUARY 26, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst.—John 4:14.

LESSON TEXT: John 4:1-12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 49:8-13.

Chance Contacts and Choice Openings.

One of the things that is going to amaze us when we see things in the light of eternity, is the fact that we have overlooked so many opportunities to do good and to speak a word for Christ in the absolutely chance contacts of life. We might all well pray that God would keep our eyes open to the unsuspected possibilities of such contacts. Dr. Bonnell of New York tells how a newspaper man came to interview him about the work which he was doing in pastoral psychiatry. After the routine questions of a reporter and some casual conversation, the reporter turned to go. But Dr. Bonnell felt the inner impulse to talk to the man about the deeper things of life, and by a simple and sincere question, opened up a conversation that eventually gave the man a new lease on life. And here was Jesus, resting on the edge of a well, famous in history and sweet of memory for it was Jacob's well, meeting a woman of the street and beginning in a friendly way a conversation that not only brought her into life-giving contact with the water of life, but which started a great revival. A young man who confessed Christ asked his minister what he could do to serve Christ. His minister wisely told him to speak to men about Christ. He used his chance contacts and won nearly a hundred men to Christ in a year. A Y. M. C. A. secretary wondered at the fruitfulness of a fellow worker in winning men to Christ and found that he simply took advantage of his contacts, many of them chance contacts, to talk about Christ. Chance contacts are often choice openings for Christian service, certainly for friendly service.

Asking for Help as a Means of Helping.

Seemingly strangely enough, Jesus asked a favor of the woman. He asked her for a drink. But it was sound psychology, the soundest of psychology. Thus He aroused her interest and got her attention, and thus He prepared the way by which He could help her. Many a minister wisely asks others to do things in order that he can help them. And many a minister's heart is made glad by the willingness of people to do things for him and the church. To be sure the minister should not seek personal favors or impose on folks. But often asking help of others, even outsiders is a means of gaining their interest and winning their friendship.

Water . . . Living Water.

"If thou knewest, thou wouldst have asked of him and he would have given thee living water." Thus did he appeal to her curiosity. He hinted, although it was more than a hint, that perhaps there was something that she did not know, something that might open the door to a richer and fuller life. One does well when he appeals to innate curiosity. There is more to religion than appears on the surface. If only we can awaken in others a desire to learn more about it, an eagerness to explore its finer and larger possibilities.

There is a fine turn of words, too, in the contrast between water and the living water. Only Christ ultimately satisfies. His spirit within wells up as a fountain of water fed from the great depths of God himself. God has made us for himself and our hearts are restless until they rest in him.

Crossing Racial Boundaries . . . and Other Boundaries.

The central theme of the lesson today is the crossing of racial boundaries. Here the word was made flesh and dwelt among us. Here we see the breakdown of man-made boundaries. The woman was a Samaritan, Jesus a Jew. The Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans, who were a mongrell people, the result of the mixture of the Jews who were left after the great "deportation" in 722 B. C., and people who came into the central section or province of Palestine. There was a difference of opinion in regard to the Scriptures and as to the place of worship. The orthodox Jew would make the long trip across the Jordan and up through Perea rather than to go through Samaria. But Jesus, naturally and un-affectedly addressed the woman. He stepped across or broke down, or rather ignored the silly racial boundaries that men had made. Furthermore he broke down or ignored other foolish boundaries. He spoke to a woman, something which a Rabbi was not supposed to do. And he reached across the barriers of class distinction. We hold our prejudices and often justify ourselves in them. But somehow we feel condemned and on the offensive when we bring them into the floodlight of the Master's truth, and try to hold them in the presence of his spirit. In Christ there is no East or West, in him no South or North. He has broken down the middle wall of partition. He has made of one all people. Because God was his Father, he looked upon the racial problem. And Christ alone has the solution.

Amazed But Acquiescing.

"And upon this came his disciples and they marvelled that he was speaking with a woman; yet, no man said what seekest thou?—or why speakest thou with her?" It all seemed so natural. It was strange, but not when Jesus did it. He did it in such a way that it seemed just the thing to do. If we could forget our prejudices and our pride it would not be at all strange.

From Hearsay to Experience.

The women first believed and then went to tell her fellow townsmen. They came on her testimony. But after they hear Jesus, they, too, believed. "Now we believe, not because of the speaking; for we have heard him for ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Saviour of the world." Faith comes by hearing. We are to bear our witness faithfully, and God will not allow his word to return unto him void. This is the ultimate goal of Christian instruction and training . . . to help folks to pass from hearsay to experience, to help folks to have a first-hand experience of Christ. And that should be the goal of every seeker . . . to stop short of nothing until he finds Christ as a personal Saviour.

Christ for All Classes and Colors and Creeds and Cultures.

Christ died for all. Christ is for all. No matter the class or color or creed or culture or condition of men, Christ is their help and their hope. His gospel is for all men and for all of man. He is universal and final.

It is easy to dodge our responsibilities, but we cannot dodge the consequences of dodging our responsibilities.—Sir Josiah Stamp.

TWELFTH BIENNIAL MEETING
OF THE NCC.

cal stove in the Roberts' living room (they were out elsewhere for dinner themselves) warm by the vigor of our conversation, even without the tiny pieces of wood drooped into it at frequent intervals. Helen had looked up such a stove to take along to Foochow, but when she discovered that at the moment, with really cold weather just descending on the town, they were priced at well over a million dollars (they cost not more than $20 in Tientsin twenty-five years ago) she decided to find what warmth she could in a $180,000 oil heater, especially as kerosene is not so difficult to get in Foochow or so expensive.

Sober Reflections.—There were a number of visitors at the meeting most of them homeside Board secretaries or other members of deputations out to look the general scene over, much as Harold Matthews will be doing a year and more from now. I won't list them but do want to refer to one thing in the address given by Dr. Ruland of the Presbyterian Board. He said that as a result of their extensive travels and observations these past three months they are going back to ask that a hundred additional Presbyterian missionaries be found and sent to China just as rapidly as possible. So critical do they feel the situation here to be. Think of being in a position even to consider a recommendation like that! Of course their work is the largest of any denominational Board in China, and by spring they expect to have just five times as many western workers on the field as we do. But what would happen if the American Board asked for 20 more China missionaries?

As a footnote to this, and recorded merely as a fact, do you all know that Hal Leiper and his bride are headed this way, with the Presbyterian compound at Paoting as their goal? And that Earle and Frances Cade Hamlin have also recently been appointed to the Presbyterian North China Mission and that another appointee of that Board, destined likewise for Paoting, is of African ancestry? You will recall some discussion, thus far, I believe, inconclusive, as to whether it would be advisable for the American Board to send missionaries of like antecedents to China. With the Presbyterians it seems to have passed out of the discussion stage, and they are that much ahead of us.

Ruland, I should add, went on to say how desperate he felt the financial situation to be in relation to all our work and how impossible it will be to meet all the opportunities calling to us. He ended with a plea that we be not satisfied merely with "cooperation" but push on to the next step of actual "union." Which was one more reminder to me that our relations with the Church of Christ must be soon and carefully reviewed again.

On Sunday afternoon I had a very profitable visit with the Bernard Reads and Miss Ruth Ingram of UNRRA, a guest in their home. Both Dr. Read and Miss Ingram expressed themselves as convinced—and Dr. Read stressed this later in his report to the Council as acting secretary of the Council on Medical Missions—that eventually the government's own health program and the standards it will insist upon will force the Church and missions to close out all but a few of our strongest hospitals and nurses training schools unless we early adopt a policy of concentration.

Work Detail.—We of the Kung Li Hui were kept reasonably busy. Having insisted that I go down they made me do my share of work by putting me on the Steering Committee, making me secretary of the Findings Committee, and the western member of the committee that drew up the manifesto. Mr. Wang led one of the devotional periods very helpfully. He also was secretary of one of the groups and presented to the plenary session the findings on "The Church and Its Leadership." And James Ch'uah who was chairman of one of the groups when it discussed that topic, is a co-opted member of the Executive Committee, and at the first business session succeeded in dodging election as the treasurer of the Council for the next biennium. He gave two reasons, one that he would be away from Shanghai too much of the time, and the other—of all things for a former comptroller of Yenching and now for many years an administrative officer of the Kin-cheng Bank—that he didn't know how to keep accounts!

The new officers, by the way, are: Mr. S. C. Leung, general secretary of the National Committee of the "Y," chairman; Bishop Kaung and Miss Margaret Frame, vice-chairmen; and Mr. Ing, a local bookstore proprietor, continues as treasurer, having already served since 1935. Secretarial matters are the responsibility of the Executive Committee and in the table of proposed arrangements Rowland Cross' name replaces that of Ronald Rees who returns to England next summer. This I know is a moot point with the Kung Li Hui but the request has my hearty personal support, though I will not extend this epistle by listing arguments therefor.

Spoken from the Heart.—Early in this rambling report I stated that I was glad that I went down for the meeting. Let me elaborate that a bit in conclusion. There has been each time with me a period of slump following soon after a return from the homeland. It has seemed as if the slump this time was more prolonged and took me to lower levels than ever before. Some reasons for this, under present conditions in China, are probably intimately known to all of the members of our Mission. Frustration, helplessness in the face of adverse circumstances, the pessimism so generally expressed by Chinese friends: these we all know.

I think there has been an added factor with me this autumn. The ten years between 1931 and 1941 when I was connected, most of the time, with the Council office, were years of depression or slow and partial recovery. A great deal of what I had to work on during that period was plans for retrenchment, withdrawal, reduction of staff and appropriations. I recall a memorandum worked out by one who was then a member of our mission—guess who!—that outlined a possible program of liquidation of the entire missionary force in the Kung Li Hui, leaving me, so I recall, as the very last leaf upon the tree. All this produced not, I trust, a defeatist psychology, but a familiarity more intimate than comfortable with "strategic withdrawals to previously prepared positions."

Someway I thought that was over! Someway I had dreamed that now we could advance; now we could do more adequately some of the things we have long wanted to do, and even do them without having to leave a good many of the older yet still desirable things undone. The sudden and rather crushing realization that for the time being we are up against the same old sort of problem, in some respects different in aspect but in other respects even more acute, has been hard to take. Many, if not most, of the people at this Biennial are undoubtedly up against as stiff propositions as any that we face. But they didn't show it. There was no squealing, no sob-stories, even by those three men from Manchuria, whose troubles only begun with the Japanese surrender and the arrival a few days later of a horde of "p'eng yu," as they euphoniously called them. There was courage, faith, and a determination to go forward.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

This is our final report for the year 1946.

The church people have been real good to us during the year. Our friends on the outside of our denomination have been good, too. They sent us offerings from California to New York.

The churches have been doing a little better for the past several years.

This year they ran the offerings up to $21,533.14. We have been trying for a number of years to get the church to contribute $20,000 per year to run the orphanage and let us raise the balance from friends outside our church.

This year that dream materialized. I am very happy over that fact. If the church will continue to do this, with what I can get from the outside, I feel that we can keep out of debt and do good work. During the year people outside our church have sent us offerings from all over the states, from California to New York, and as far west as Iowa. They have sent us the sum of $24,578.95, making a total of $56,112.09. I know out of these outside offerings, none of it would have gone to any other department of our church had it not come to the orphanage. These donors love little children and sent it here from all denominations to help us care for these little tots here.

You say that is a lot of money, and it is a lot of money. But, when you realize the prices we have to pay for things we have to buy, it is not so much money after all. Coal is twice as high as it was several years ago; lard I used to buy for six and one-half pound, now costs over forty cents; dairy feed we could buy for $32.50 per ton now costs $90, nearly three times as much. Shoes for the children now cost from three to four dollars and some, five dollars. Not so much money after all.

But the New Year is here, and we hope it is one that is filled with many rich blessings. We cannot know what it holds in store for us, whether good or bad. We will have to walk in the unknown path and meet the days as they come and the problems they bring. We want you to remember the little children here, as well as myself, in your daily prayers. I am a great believer in prayers, and if I know you are praying for God to bless me in this work, it will give me encouragement, strengthen me, and it will cause me to do my very best.

Thanksgiving Dinner.

Thursday was to be the thanksgiving dinner and everyone was getting his appetite built up for the fried chicken and all the rest of the good things these American women were preparing for that night. At about 3:00 P. M., everyone was loaded into the "Chevy" again and into town they went. The dinner was to be at one of the missionaries' homes, Rev. James M. Hess, so a tour of the American college was made to give the men some idea how the program was carried on. There are 100 girls, with over 200 on the waiting list, and over 1,000 boys attending this school. It was quite a mark of achievement to get the fair sex into the school. Women are not thought of as something to waste education on, and one year when one lone girl had the courage to apply for entrance into the college she was immediately allowed to enter. The following year five more applied and were allowed a place on the enrollment. Each year more applied, until today there is a waiting list of 200 or more. Education is taking hold in India.

TWELFTH BIENNIAL MEETING OF THE NCC.

Our noon meals eaten together in our overcoats and mufflers with no fear that the soup would stay hot long enough to burn our tongues, were times of delightful fellowship. And even if I should be right in suspecting that minds don't work quite as well in a room where one's breath is slightly visible and one sits with hands pushed deep up the sleeves of one's overcoat, it was yet a time of earnest and fruitful deliberation as to how the Church of Christ can meet what is probably the greatest spiritual opportunity it has ever faced in this land.

Faithfully yours,
/s/ EARLE H. BALLOU.

IN MEMORIAM.
In Memory of Mr. James Sidney Glenn who died September 17, 1943 for many years a faithful member of Durham Christian Church.

It has been just one year ago today Since our dear old Daddy went away He is still with us in our thoughts But with him now, we cannot talk.
Dad meant so much to us Just little things in his daily touch But now we must realize his work on earth is through So we must carry on, and try his will to do.

So remember us in your prayer We need it daily everywhere That we might stronger daily grow And deeds of kindness we may show.
That is what he would have us do; Then when our work on earth is through We will see him face to face Through God's love and unchanging grace.

The Temple of Devotion

Psalm No. 1

A Suggestive Exposition in Verse
By REV. JAMES R. CLINTON, D.D.

The artist insists in this beautiful poem,
That happiness deep may be found as you roam
Over highways and byways of Earth.
In spite of the ungodly counsel and scorn;
Indeed, spite of everything shattered and torn,
Religion is genuine mirth.

Have a look at this man on this threshold of praise!

The first thing we note, is—he shuns foolish ways:

He will not accommodate wrong.
Negations are not the whole story of life—
But whoever neglects them is weak in the strife.

The man who says “NO” will be strong.

Gradations in evil should now be resolved—
The walk and the talk, and all life involved
In contumely, sorrow and pain.
The Psalmist is wise! Be admonished my soul!
If you linger, you’ll play a most dangerous role.
Saying “NO” will be infinite gain.

Rejections are vital—now turn to delight.
In God’s law he meditates, both “day and night”—

The whole revelation of God!
Not only the five little books Moses penned—
But conscience and all that the ages commend,
To bless and illumine the road.

Jesus learned about God from the flowers and the birds.

Remember—ye careworn! the strength of His words . . .

“Are ye not more value than they?”
There are laws of the body you must understand;

There are laws of the soul—there are laws of the land!

You must study them all “night and day.”

Now look at the marks of this man of the skies!

The picture will live, long as Truth conquers lies,

Or morning glow covers the Earth.
The tree and the river—the leaf and the fruit—
The strength, the resources, the depth of the root.

New beauty and growth springing forth.

Stability, freshness, resourcefulness, rest
All issuing, flourishing—life at its best Sustained and established by Grace.
He will never be caught unprepared in a trap
The tree by the river has adequate sap.
Oh! its good to behold this man’s face!

I once saw a landslide—all trees swept away—
Save one massive oak in the ruins of clay:

It was splendid in crisis and storm!
The man of our Psalm “like a tree” in distress,
Reveals subtle rootage the world cannot guess.
Such triumph of faith is the norm!

He is conquer’r and more, every inch of the way,

And yet he is humble—no wish for display:

He grows “like a tree”—the Psalm says.

And then as unfailing as seasons rotate,

He bears every manner of fruit up to date,

In a life of obedience and praise.

To analyze trees! What a hopeless attempt!
At best this is rhyme, incomplete and unkempt.

We can only just look and adore!

“A flower” said Lord Tennyson “though here in my hand,

On Earth or in Heaven I may not understand.”

I cannot, I will not say more!

Yet faith may accept what it cannot define.

A “like precious faith” may it ever be mine.

The “way of the righteous He knows”

The Psalm rests its case on this wonderful word,

And bases our life on “the law of the Lord”

Doth Victory’s crown at the close.

The chaff of the harvests—the surge of the sea,
Are drifting and worthless—contrasting the tree.

Such living, the wise have abhorred.

I have no wish to linger with Cynic and sneer.

I shall stay with this man who has found a career,

And delight “in the law of the Lord.”

Christianity and Youth

By General Douglas MacArthur

I know of no cause more worthy of support than that which lends direction and encouragement to the orientation of youth to the principles underlying our Christian faith. That faith has formed the sturdy cornerstone upon which has rested our national strength, standing unshaken and unshakable through the repetitious crises of war and peace.

There was the great moral force which steeled the arm and steadied the aim as our invincible armies stormed their way from Australia to the heart of the Japanese Empire. Thereafter, as we rested on our arms in midst of our defeated enemy, it became those same high principles of human relationship—tolerance and justice, basic dogma of our Christian faith—that formed the very key arch to the philosophy underlying all policy governing the treatment of our vanquished foe in the occupation of Japan. History will record that so long as that philosophy prevails, reform here injected will survive and a people will emerge firmly dedicated as are we to man's dignity upon the earth and to the moral, spiritual and material advance of the whole human race.

As the youth of today will assume responsibilities for tomorrow, youth must understand, learn to live by, and defend that great moral force.

NOTE—This message came from the office of the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in Tokyo, Japan, to the International Council of Religious Education for use in National Youth Week, January 26 to February 2.—Editor.

SIMEON'S CHRISTMAS AND OURS.*

By ROCKWELL HARMON POTTER.

TEXT: Now Lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace.—Luke 2:29.

Simeon, you see, had had a good Christmas. He was leaving it with a quiet mind and with an eager heart. There was a psalm of thanksgiving on his lips, as he went down from the temple courts. His new year was not beginning according to the almanac of his people, but we may be sure that in the calendar of his soul there was a new year opening for him and he was ready for it. He was an old man but the light of hope was in his eyes. He was tired and worn with many duties which he had fulfilled many times and which remained to be repeated many times in the future. But there was good strength in his feet as he turned to the old paths and there was a song in his heart, whose sweetness he could scarce express with his lips, but whose blessing he could show forth by the deeds of his hands and the words that he spoke and the very smile upon his face.

How was it that Simeon had so good a Christmas? It was his first Christmas and he had had no experience with the festival so it was not because of practice in its observance, that he came down from the Feast with this great joy. Let us look at his preparation for it, his participation in and his remembrance of it, and perhaps being thus instructed by his experience, we may go from our Christmas out into our new year with a more clear and sure sense of the blessing of the one and of hope for the other.

At once we are challenged and given pause. He was a righteous man. This was a prime reason why he had so good a Christmas, and, God forgive us, this is a prime reason why we have failed in our Christmas. Simeon had been just and gentle and kind. He had had to deal with many people many times. Those Jerusalem folks were cunning and crafty, they were showy and specious, they were proud and vain, they were opinionated and unreasonable, they were self-righteous and hypocritical, and year after year good old Simeon had been so just and so gentle and so kind that he had won from them the title "a righteous man." We have the notion somehow that Simeon was attached to the temple service as a priest. If that were so it would not lessen the difficulties he had faced during his long life in Jerusalem. People don't always show their best side to the minister, though that is a common impression. But the record doesn't say that he was a priest. It simply says that he was a man of Jerusalem. He may have been in the real estate business for all that we know. But he was a righteous man and he had brought up to

DR. ROCKWELL HARMON POTTER.

Christmas, his first Christmas, the first Christmas, the preparation of a just and generous soul.

Well, so far as Christmas, 1946, is concerned, it's too late for us now to get this kind of preparation. But Christmas is a message of the everlasting mercy and as we go forth from its blessed precincts let us pray that our failures, injustice and unkindness may be forgiven by the mercy of Christmas and so of no avail to prevent our hearing hence the Christmas blessing which all our hearts desire, with an exceeding great desire.

Remember how the nephew of Scrooge put it in his reply to his Uncle in Dickens' Christmas Carol?

Said the Uncle: "Keep Christmas in your own way, and let me keep it in mine. Much good may it do you—has it ever done you!"

Replied the Nephew: "But I am sure I have always thought of Christmastime, when it has come around—apart from the veneration due to its sacred name and origin, if anything belonging to it can be apart from that—as a good time; a kind, forgiving, charitable, pleasant time, the only time I know of, in the long calendar of the year, when men and women seem by one consent to open their shut hearts freely, and to think of people below them as if they were really fellow passengers to the grave, and not another race of creatures bound on other journeys. And therefore, uncle, though it has never put a scrap of gold or silver in my pocket, I believe it has done me good, and will do me good; and I say, God bless it!"

Scrooge said he would see him in Yes, indeed he did. He went the whole length of that expression and said that he would see him in that extremity first.

And then again, this man was devout. That's the reason he was righteous. He had cultivated his spirit and a true piety with the prayer and praise of the temple courts through many years. This discipline had not failed in its issue in his life. It had borne good fruitage as did the daily business of his day's work. It had kept him honest and thoughtful, kind and gracious, in his dealing with the thoughtless and wilful, the envious and the wayward, the proud and the haughty on those old streets. He had begun each day with a prayer that he might fulfil the prophetic word and that day do justly and love mercy. And each night, despite the day's losses and its hurts and insults, a psalm of thanksgiving had been on his lips, "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

Again it's too late for us now to get this preparation for the Christmas from which we now go forth but yet again Christmas is a festival of mercy. God forgive us that we have been too busy to pray and too proud to give thanks. Perhaps that's the reason we did not have as good Christmas as we hoped. Now is the time to get ready for the Christmas of 1947. Let us highly resolve to make use of the disciplines of devotion, praying that they may bear fruit, the good fruit of the righteous life in us, and remembering that they who in sincerity and truth receive this discipline do not fail to find in their own hearts and to make manifest in the places where they live these good signs of the prepared soul.

Simeon was a hopeful man. All his years had not clouded the light of that star or quenched the fire of that flame. It had become the habit of his life to look for the consolation of Israel and the Spirit of God had sealed that hope with the witness of the divine presence in the devotion of EVANGELISM EVALUATED.

Approximately fifty ministers gathered last week at the United Church in Raleigh for a two-day Conference on Evangelism. A visiting team of speakers delved into the ramifications of the theme. There was a concerted effort to overcome our narrow and foggy thinking concerning evangelism. Granting that there should be a Christian decision, a stimulating and heart-warming experience, the importance of the proper equipment following the decision was emphasized and elaborated. Ministers were charged with the responsibility of teaching converts the larger implications of Christian discipleship. Challenged by the secular movements of our day, the churches were called upon to formulate a definite and comprehensive program of evangelism. Through our united efforts we seek to reproduce Christ and multiply noble, Christian decisions in the various walk of life.

This area conference was held under the National Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life. Secretary Wofford C. Timmons assembled the following speakers: Dr. Vernon W. Cook of Pawtucket, Rhode Island; Dr. Harold G. Jones of Worcester, Mass.; Dr. William E. McCormack of Springfield, Mass.; and Dr. William W. Anderson of Portland, Me.

The Commission has designed a program of evangelism for our Congregational Christian Churches during the biennium, 1946-1948. Its avowed purpose is to "meet the present-day need of an intensive and extensive evangelism, deepening on the one hand the spiritual life of our present fellowship, and reaching out on the other hand to the multitudes outside the church." The goal is 240,000 new members for the biennium, which represents a total gain of ten per cent or a net gain of three per cent. It is proposed that this be accomplished by a variety and combination of means: Area conferences for ministers and key workers, community surveys, visitation evangelism, preaching missions or evangelistic services, adequate publicity, the preparation and distribution of literature, the pastor's class, the establishment of new churches and the enrollment of 100,000 Sunday school members during the biennium.

The Southern Convention has a great evangelistic heritage and opportunity. Blessed by the new insights and facilities for present-day evangelism, the churches of this area should enlarge the scope of their efforts and establish appreciable gains in membership during the biennium. Our thanks go to Dr. Timmons and his associates for their capable and generous leadership.

MURDOCK WELLONS BUTLER

The removal by death of the Rev. Murdock W. Butler from our ministerial ranks will be widely felt. He had served over a half century, principally at Newport News and Wakefield, Va., and at Gulph Mills, near Philadelphia, Pa. His churches enjoyed solid preaching and faithful pastoral care. He was a genial host, a delightful conversationalist, a true friend, and a Christian gentleman. His serene and unflinching faith carried him through many difficult periods. He served his church long and well. Earth and heaven are the richer for his ministry.

THE REGULATION AND REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS.

Christian people have reason to rejoice in the adoption by the General Assembly of the United Nations of the resolution on disarmament. For many years the Christian leadership of the United States and other lands has contended for the regulation of armaments on a global scale. The influence of the Federal Council of Churches has registered in its reiterated insistence that the General Assembly should promptly initiate steps to accelerate the reduction of armaments, the universal abolition of military conscription and the outlawing of the use of atomic and other weapons of mass destruction.

The General Assembly convened on October 23 and adjourned on December 16, 1946. One of the seventy-three items acted upon was that pertaining to armament control. Embodied in the resolution on disarmament are the following recommendations which shall be submitted to the signatory states for ratification:

(1) That the Security Council give prompt consideration to formulating the practical measures according to their priority which are essential to provide for the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces and to assure that such regulation and reduction will be generally observed by all participants, and not unilaterally by only some of the participants.

(2) That the Security Council expedite consideration of the reports which the Atomic Energy Commission (established by the General Assembly in London in January, 1946) will make to the Security Council and that it facilitates the work of that Commission, and also that the Security Council expedite consideration of a draft convention or conventions for the creation of an international system of control and inspection, these conventions to include the prohibition of atomic and all other weapons adaptable now or in the future to mass destruction, and the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to insure its use only for peaceful purposes.

(3) That the Security Council give prompt consideration to the working out of proposals to provide such practical and effective safeguards in connection with the control of atomic energy and the general regulation and reduction of armaments.

(4) That the Security Council accelerate as much as possible the placing at its disposal of the armed forces mentioned in Article 43 of the Charter; that members (of the United Nations) undertake the progressive and balanced withdrawal, taking account of the needs of occupation, of their forces stationed in ex-enemy territories, and the withdrawal without delay of armed forces stationed in the territories of members without their consent freely and publicly expressed in treaties or agreements consistent with the Charter and not contradicting international agreements.

(5) That members of the United Nations render every possible assistance to the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission in order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and collective security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources.

“Starting from Scratch”

By REV. MARY MCKEE CHESTER.
Sacramento, California

A Message Delivered on January 20 in the Hotel Cleveland at the Church Extension Luncheon of Congregational Christian Churches

In the section of Sacramento where we are at work there are also many shades of Real Estate Companies at work, too. One day I noticed a Real Estate Ad. It read like this: “Build your new home in the beautiful Vienna Woods.” This ad immediately captured my attention as I was just fresh from the land of green trees, clear waters and lofty mountains, so I hurried to see the Vienna Woods of Sacramento, located on the banks of American River. I arrived and gazed up and down the American River in search of the forest I had read about. Now the forests are not too difficult to see, but this one I could not find, so I went to the Real Estate office and asked, “Where are the lots that are for sale in the Vienna Woods?” The salesman took me out to a bare flat stretch of land which had two sapplings on it and said with great confidence and enthusiasm, “There it is.”

The Tools With Which to Work.

First, I would like to say that my last parish was in Seattle. On October 4, 1945, I left this growing parish with a church membership of nearly 400, a church school of 380 and a community program that was caring for 1,000 people a week as we were running a seven-day week program with two other people on the staff besides myself.

I arrived in Sacramento bag and baggage, finding a parsonage and 395 survey cards for my use. I shall never forget the shock of seeing what I had to work with reduced to a pack of cards, and one card not meaning any more than the other until called upon, investigated and cultivated.

One year and four months have passed and the stack of cards now read: 57 Catholics, 63 Church of God, Seven Day Advents, Bahas, in-town Congregationalists, down-town Methodists and up-town Presbyterians and so on. This leaves us 275 cards plus 100 new cards for there are now 100 new homes under construction in the project, also 200 lots sold where construction is to begin as soon as possible. I must state in true California style that Wright and Kimbrough, the Real Estate Co. of Sacramento, have 1,600 acres under development in our area and expect to complete this project in ten years.

We accepted the survey cards and in the words of Mr. Churchill, with sweat, blood and tears, turned them into the following: Church School of 150 members, with 19 teachers, and only one of these teachers having ever taught before. Three Pilgrim Fellowships of Youth with an enrollment of 72, a Women's Council organized with an enrollment of 40 women, a church membership of 57 and the charter membership still open, the organization of a Development Committee composed of the citizens of the community, some 28 people working on this committee. This committee has already started work on the grounds, called an architect and have plans now under study for the new church building. Over this period of time the community has given $2,000 to the work now under way.

Hunt for a Building.

I could write a book on the ups and downs of this past year's work. First, after we were settled in the parsonage we started a hunt for a place to meet. This was a real surprise for there was not a building in the community, no store buildings, no theatre building, not even a barn. The only building was the Arden Grade School and on this we landed with determination and hope. We found in a very short time that the California State law refuses to allow the school building to be used for any kind of religious meetings. In our case it was even worse than this as the principle of the school was Catholic and the Catholic Priest has for the past four years been keeping the Catholic children after school for religious training and the school bus waiting until his class was over. This did not stop us, we went to each member of the school board and the final blow came when the school attorney said, “No, unless we wanted to take the state law in our hands.” At this point I had too much to think about to get tangled up in the State law of any State. So our hopes dropped to the bottom and we were again blessed with the joy of making a fresh start.

The Use of Homes.

The only thing left to use as a meeting place was the parsonage and any other homes that would open their doors. In February the Chesters and the Ellis' opened their homes for the starting of a church school. This fall we went to the beautiful McBroom home and asked for the use of their basement, and only last week with tears in our eyes did we go to the Baker family for their glassed in patio as the Beginner's department that started with 8 and now has an enrollment of 31.

There are 1,000 people a month going through the Sierra-Arden Church parsonage. If you are in quest of a new experience try living in the Grand Central Station for a year or two. My one and only walnut chair, one of those things a woman takes pride in has had to be recovered and is now ready for a second covering. The Duncan Phife coffee table has all but gone the way of all flesh as one of the high school boys used it for a chair one night. The davenport is ready for an upholstering job any time. We have moved in and out of the living room this last year at least 4,000 folding chairs, in fact, everything in the parsonage has been moved so many times I am sure I could fully qualify for any moving van in the United States.

We were encouraged by the Board of Home Missions to entertain and that we have done. I can make a loaf of nut bread with my eyes closed and it does not phase me to brew up a gallon of black tea to add to any punch bowl and if that does not serve the crowd a little water added is not too objectionable. We have entertained in our home this last year over 1,000 people by actual count.

The parsonage, the Board of Home Missions and the California State Conference purchased an acre of ground—most of this is lawn. We are in no position to hire a gardner, so we water by day and mow the grass by night. I heartily recommend this type of work to any Congregational minister if he is in need of keeping fit.

I would like to say, the use of homes for the starting of a church is acceptable for only so long a time.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The meeting of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship with the Cypress Chapel Church on January 12 was a good success. There were more than one hundred fifty young people present, and several pastors and other leaders of young people. The program had been well prepared in advance, notices sent to pastors, and the press, as well as a copy of the program printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Two beautiful worship services were conducted by the young people, for the afternoon by the young people of Union (Southampton) Church, and for the evening session by the young people of the Norfolk Temple. How well they did.

Two leaders and lovers of youth—themselves young people—gave especially good counsel and guidance to all that went on, namely, Mrs. James C. Lynch (Emily Harrell, a former president of this organization), and Miss Betty Chicoine, field worker from our Southern Convention headquarters. And both of them served well on the program in the messages they brought. Mrs. Lynch will present the cause of the young people's organization before the Eastern Virginia Ministers' Association at their regular January meeting.

Several young people of our churches made good speeches, which showed preparation, goodness of spirit, and vision for the future. Those of us pastors who were present felt that tomorrow's future was well in the making with these fine young people. Mrs. H. H. Monroe, a returned missionary from Japan, and with a special aptitude for interesting young people, made a very telling and inspiring address. I had to return to Suffolk for my evening services just before the supper which was served by the young people of the host church and their adult friends, and I did not get to hear the address which came after supper. However, I was told they were A-1, and that Dr. I. W. Johnson's service of the Lord's Supper was a good moment of consecration, divine fellowship, and renewal of spiritual life.

The head of the music department at Elon, Mr. Fletcher Moore, and the executive secretary of the Alumni Association, Mr. James F. Darden, have brought five students down from Elon to assist us this morning in the worship service at Suffolk Church. They will do the same for the Liberty Spring Church this afternoon, and the Holland Church tonight. The women of the Suffolk Church gave them a supper at the Elliot Hotel where the church is entertaining them for lodging and breakfast. They are a fine deputation, indeed. One of them, a senior at Elon, the Rev. Fred Register, will preach and the others—Miss Dorothy Shepherd (Durham), Miss Dorothy Jones (Danville), Mr. Wilbur Waaser (New York), and Mr. Jack McFagden (Greensboro)—will sing two numbers: "The King of Love My Shepherd Is" (Shelly), and "O Divine Redeemer" (Gounod). The Rev. Mr. Register is going to speak on: "Consider Your Possessions." Mr. Darden is to be congratulated on the idea, and the goodly results of such an effort.

SIMEON'S CHRISTMAS.

Simeon's piety and in the gracious righteousness of Simeon's life. I suppose it was true in Jerusalem, as it is in Hartford, that almost everybody was hopeful in youth, that a few were hopeful in middle life and that only those who were righteous and devout were able to carry the light of hope in their hearts even unto evening time. Simeon was one of these. He had been disappointed as often as anybody, he had been deceived as everybody else had been, but he kept on hoping. He knew the story of his people's tragic afflictions and the times of their woeful adversity. He knew also the story of their self-satisfied and proud prosperities. But he kept looking for better things. He came up to the first Christmas with a heart of hope and that Christmas was good to his wistful soul.

Perhaps that's the reason we did not have a good Christmas. We did not expect to. We had been through it before—most of us a good many times. We had been disillusioned about Santa Claus. We had seen the Christmas greens fade a good many times and the berries drop off and the ash cans get filled and so we said within ourselves, "Well, we are not Children that we should have any great hope about this thing." But Christmas is a festival of hope. That's the meaning of the star. Back of the story of Santa Claus there is something that is real and does not fail. It is the reality of a mother's love and a father's care. And back of the story of the star there is a light that does not fade. It is the light that never was on land or sea, the eternal light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. The candles in the windows are soon quenched. The colored lights on the Christmas trees will soon be taken down and packed away for another year. But God help us to keep the eye of the spirit upon the eternal light that shone in the first Christmas, that had been shining in the face of every little child before the first Christmas, that has shone there, with a new meaning ever since, and that shines for all who have eyes to see on Christmas and on the eve of every day of the new year that follows Christmas. The love of which Christmas is the festival is the love that hopes for all things. Let's carry it out through the gates of the New Year. God knows we shall need it.

So far Simeon's preparation for the first Christmas. Consider now his participation in it.

He received the child Jesus into his arms and blessed God. This was the heart of the good man's Christmas. Into his arms, close to his life, he received the Babe. His heart was warm, his sight was clear, his soul was uplifted. The sign was not lost on Simeon, the sign that was promised to the shepherds and which the shepherds saw. One wonders if the shepherds understood. This sign Simeon saw, and Simeon understood. It was the sign of the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes was the sign of the divine life and love revealed in a human life, finding its realization and fulfillment in a human life, born in weakness to be nourished with patience and care, to be realized in struggle and toil, to be manifest in grace and truth, to be sealed in service and sacrifice, to be crowned with victory and the promise of the eternal kingdom. This was what Simeon received in his heart as into his arms he took the child Jesus. It was indeed the heart of his good Christmas as it has been the heart of every good Christmas for every Christian ever since, as it is the heart of those who in this year of grace have had a good Christmas and will be as often as the sun turns back in its course to touch the world with a promise of its strength, as often as the Christmas stars shall shine, as often as little children shall greet it with joy while youths and maidens sing its carols and its songs.

Thank God, it's not too late for this. Were we too busy to make an

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE CHURCH AND ITS YOUTH.

Our Church has a very definite responsibility for its young people. It is too frequently the case that the Church feels or assumes little or no responsibility for the children of its membership, other than at sometime in their 'teens to make an effort to bring them to a decision for Christ and to membership in the local church. This is good. It is essential. A church that does not feel this responsibility is certainly missing its opportunity and is glaringly negligent in the line of duty. There are other responsibilities, however, that the Church has for its youth—responsibilities that cannot easily be ignored or shifted to other shoulders.

The children of our churches should be schooled in the matters of religion and in the ways of the Church. They should have adequate information concerning the fundamentals of our Christian faith as revealed in the scriptures and the customary procedures of worship through the Church. The practice of memorizing significant verses and longer passages of the Bible has been too completely discarded. There isn't anything that will take the place of the enrichment and stability of a child's mental and spiritual life resulting from a fund of Biblical knowledge acquired at the proper time. It is the privilege and responsibility of the Church to see that such information is provided. This it does to a limited degree through the Sunday school and other agencies that reach out into the homes of the Church and community.

The Church's responsibility for the training of its youth does not stop with the Sunday school and our public schools. The Church must train its leadership. The training of leadership goes beyond the Church and the public school levels. Potential leaders for the Church for today and tomorrow must have a breadth of information and a quality of training equal to professional and practical demands. More than a half century ago the Christian Church in the Southern Convention provided such opportunities for its young people in the founding of Elon College. The Church is endeavoring to give its financial support to the College. This is good, but not enough. The Church needs to use its influence to see that its own young people are enrolled in their college. On the church's college campus not only are its young people trained for church and state under moral and religious influences but a solidarity of understanding, of friendship and interest are created that will last beyond the campus and carry over into the fellowship of the Church in after years.

Our young people who are seniors in high school are selecting their colleges earlier than usual. The colleges are crowded and will be another year. Now is the time for parents to counsel with their sons and daughters about college. Don't leave this important decision in your child's life to the public school teachers and classmates. This is your responsibility. Don't shirk it. Assume it. And thereby render your child and your church a beneficial and lasting service.

CHURCH APPORTIONMENTS.

Only two of our churches and one Sunday school in the entire Convention remembered the college last week—that is, with an offering. I am sure that others did not forget us. Our expenses are daily and it is necessary that the college receive constant and continuous support from its constituency. This is the College Period and naturally we look to our churches at this particular time for financial assistance. We are grateful for the ones that did remember us and hereby issue an earnest appeal to others not to forget. Your contribution now will mean much to the college.

NOTED CHURCH LEADERS EXPRESS ENTHUSIASM FOR NEW BIBLE RADIO SERIES.

THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD—Set for 6:30 P. M. (EST), Sundays, Over ABC Stations.

Enthusiastic endorsement by religious leaders of many faiths has resulted from the previewing of a new public service radio program, "The Greatest Story Ever Told," which will be heard at 6:30 P. M. (EST) each Sunday, starting January 26, over the coast-to-coast network of the American Broadcasting Company. The opening program will be a dramatization of the story of the Good Samaritan.

Conceived and written under the supervision of Fulton Oursler, internationally known writer, Bible student and a senior editor of the Reader's Digest, prominent Protestant, Catholic and Jewish churchmen have been invited during the past several weeks to listen to and comment on advance recordings of the program.

"I think it is perhaps the most dramatic presentation of a Bible story I have ever listened to," Dr. Samuel Shoemaker, Rector of Calvary Episcopal Church in Gramercy Park, New York City, said after previewing the program. "I think that story, just as I have heard it, could perhaps do more to bring about genuine understanding—which I like better than tolerance—between races, than any other thing I have heard on the air."

Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, recently retired, said, "The possibilities of the new radio play, 'The Greatest Story Ever Told,' seem to me to be exciting, and if the high level of the program I have heard can be maintained the series will make a notable contribution to radio."

While the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company is underwriting the necessary costs of making the program available to the American public, no product references or commercial announcements, other than a simple mention of the sponsor's name, will be made, according to Mark Woods, president of the American Broadcasting Company.

"'The Greatest Story Ever Told,' therefore, represents a public service radio program in the truest sense of the term," Woods pointed out.

"Aside from its entertainment value, radio in America has been a potent influence for the inspiration, education, and enlightenment of people in all walks of life," he said. "'The Greatest Story Ever Told' scores high in each of these classifications. Presented in gripping dramatic fashion and with specially written music for a large orchestra and chorus of mixed voices, it is a program that we believe will be welcomed at this time by millions of people."

CHINESE INDUSTRY.

The Chinese today believe industry is the solution to all their national ills, according to Sam M. Dean, professor of engineering at Yenching University, Peiping, one of the thirteen Christian Colleges in China, toward whose support American churches and United Service to China contribute. According to Professor Dean, who is now in this country on furlough, this feeling grew during the war years when the Chinese saw successive countries defeated by more powerful industrial nations.

Declaring that "good or bad, industry is on the way into China," Professor Dean asserts that it is up to the Christians of the world to see that it is good. Otherwise, he warns, pagan leaders "might weld Chinese industry into a terrible force for evil."

"China today is sending hundreds of non-Christian Chinese to America to learn about industry," he asserts. "We can readily imagine the impact upon China and the world of a huge industry built up on pagan ideals without Christian principles. Missions must keep abreast of the times and furnish Chinese industry with a Christian leadership.

"Missions have long understood the need for engineering and industrial educational programs in their schools, and more has been done along this line, in many parts of the world, than most Americans are aware of. However, the comparative cost of equipment to carry on such work has limited its expansion in mission institutions. The work done by the missions in the Peiping area might well show something of what has similarly been done elsewhere as well.

More than twenty years ago the Presbyterian, Methodist, American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions for Congregational and Christian Churches, and London Mission combined their institutions of college rank under the presidency and leadership of Dr. J. Leighton Stuart, now American Ambassador to China, to form Yenching University. They were unable to carry an Engineering College but in their Science College built up a strong course in industrial chemistry which greatly affected the ceramic and leather tanning industries of the university.

Japan's entrance into active warfare against China, Mr. Dean states, intensified the drive and urge on the part of Chinese Christians for adequate engineering courses in Yenching University. To satisfy this demand he explains, the course in industrial chemistry was further strengthened and another course called pre-engineering was added to the university's curriculum. "In reality," he explains, "this was a general engineering course which ably fitted graduates for work in North China industries."

Mr. Dean points out that America's entry into the war with Japan, and the consequent seizure of all allied sponsored institutions in China, put an end to these various pieces of work. British, American and Chinese staffs were imprisoned, the buildings denuded of their equipment, and Chinese industries of any size taken over directly or indirectly by the Japanese.

The end of the war, he says, brought the return to the Chinese of their industries. "They had great plans but needed Chinese engineers of experience to help carry them out. The Chinese industrialists went to Dr. Stuart and the Chinese professors of Yenching University and urged that they start a new type of institution in which students went to class in engineering courses for six months of each year and worked in the Chinese industries for the remaining six. They provided committees of their leading Chinese engineers to work out the curriculum and agreed to assist substantially in financing the school.

"Meanwhile most of the various Mission Boards which had been running the thirteen strategically located Christian Colleges in China had decided to amalgamate their efforts under one union board of directors. Their plans called for one engineering college to be based in Shanghai. Not only Yenching University but also Hangechow Christian College, and Yanking, St. John's and Lingnan Universities had had, previous to the war, engineering colleges, for China was more interested in engineering education than in most other types of courses.

"The war damage to the thirteen Christian Colleges has been enormous, and at least $15,000,000 will be required to restore them. As much as it is desirable to meet the Chinese anxiety for technical education, it is first necessary to restore what has been ruined. However, by judicious planning, much can still be done, within the limits of available resources.

"Although the details of combining some of the engineering colleges in one university still remain to be worked out and replacement equipment has not yet been sent to China, it is interesting to note that already in most of the mission institutions there are beginning classes in engineering."

CRUSADE LAUNCHED.

A worldwide Crusade to revive the spiritual life of all peoples has been launched by the Salvation Army under the banner, "Fighting Faith Crusade," as its main effort for 1947.

On January 21, "F. F. Day," this Crusade was started in ninety-seven countries and colonies all over the globe where the International Salvation Army operates. Participating were all of the 28,000 full-time officers and millions of lay officers and soldiers of the world's greatest army of peace.

Christian groups everywhere are expected to endorse the program heartily as a means of fostering the ideals and methods of world understanding and peace.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

NATIONAL FELLOWSHIP PRESIDENT.

Mrs. Clarence Lewis Murdey of 7717 33rd Avenue, Northwest, Seattle, Washington, was elected President of the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women in America at its annual meeting in Cleveland, Ohio. In this post Mrs. Murdey becomes the leader of some 700,000 Congregational women across the United States. The National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women is meeting with the Mid-Winter Conference of the Missions Council of Congregational Christian Churches from January 20 to 24 in the Hotel Cleveland, Cleveland, Ohio.

Mrs. Murdey was born in Winnipeg, Manitoba, and reared and educated in the Pacific Northwest. She is a graduate of the University of Washington and is the wife of Clarence Lewis Murdey of the Seattle School District. Mrs. Murdey succeeds Mrs. Howard Stone Anderson of Washington, D. C.

As a young matron Mrs. Murdey has been closely associated with civic and cultural groups as well as a leader in church circles.

"The church woman of today must have initiative without aggressiveness; stirred emotions without sentimentality; vision without being visionary. No longer is it possible for her to remain cloistered within her home or within her church. World affairs press in upon her and she must be prepared to take her Christianity out into the community and put it into active practice. Thousands of such communities, in time, will act as a very potent leaven," says Mrs. Murdey.

THE WORLD DAY OF PRAYER.

February 21 represents to us a day when we, along with women all over the world, will stop whatever we are doing and offer a prayer to God. What infinite possibilities are contained in such a procedure! Using the materials supplied to us by the United Council of Church Women, here are some of the things we might do:

1. Observe the World Day of Prayer with all the other churches in your town or community, and give women from those churches parts in putting the observance across. Using the program as prepared, you may have several soloists, organist, four readers for the four sections, and five youth readers for the last section. In case you wish to "pad" the program, you might use other music, such as "Prepare Ye the Way of the Lord," or "A Voice Crying in the Wilderness." "The Lord's Prayer" might also be sung. Also, you might wish to have the church open all day with a background of organ music for the worshippers. This could be 9:00-12:00 and 2:00-6:00, with your service coming 12:00-2:00 P. M.

2. Publicity—of course, this comes before time for the service. The poster available this year is quite lovely, containing the picture, "Praying Hands," by Durer, and you should use it. Put it in store windows downtown, in grocery stores, schools, churches, places of business. "The Call to Prayer," a small sheet (free) containing the prayer on the regular program and some devotional material, along with an announcement of the local observance, may be used on hospital trays, in restaurants, offices, circle meetings, business places and others. Also, be sure to use the newspaper and radio for announcements. Church bulletins should carry an announcement on Sunday, February 16.

3. There is a lovely service for children, "Join Hands Around the Rolling World" (3c), which may be used in schools and youth groups. If you don't have a Youth Council, you may contact the Parent-Teacher Association, or the school principals.

4. If you would like to have a Nursery Director to take care of young children while their mothers attend the meeting, you may send for an India Village Cut-Out Sheet (25c), so that while the mother is using a program prepared in India, her child is cutting out and coloring an Indian village scene; or perhaps being dressed up in a draped sari and told stories of the children of India.

5. You may want to ask the Mayor for a Proclamation. Also, theaters and movie houses may display posters in lobbies.

6. One of the most appealing suggestions this year is to have all-day or half-day retreat some time in January, where all chairmen, committee members, readers, speakers, singers, ushers, etc., could catch the underlying spirit of the day and dedicate hands and hearts and minds and voices to establish this beauty in "our town." We might remind ourselves that our Lord said to His disciples (Mark 6:31): "Come ye apart into a desert place, and rest awhile;" for there are many coming and going! Here, we might complete our plans, check on each person's duties, and receive inspiration for our participation in the World Day of Prayer. The letter to the Chairman of the local group observing the day is available for planning this retreat, at 2c each. I have to tell you that we are planning such a retreat in Winston-Salem, to be held at Sunny Acres, about twelve miles away. It thrills me to think that our women would think it important enough to take time out for a retreat to receive inspiration for the World Day of Prayer!

7. You may like to distribute programs to shut-ins or the aged. A broadcast of your program would also reach them.

8. Follow-up work comes after the World Day of Prayer. Did we reach as many people as we wanted to? Did we make all the church women in our town or community feel part of the whole family of the whole church in the whole world? Have we more to do in nurturing and enriching the prayer life in our town? Maybe we could interest the librarian in making a permanent bookshelf on prayer, worship, the devotional life.

Prices of the materials, to be ordered from the United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y., are:

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

HELEN KELLER.

When just a little baby Helen Keller had a sickness that left her both blind and deaf. Because she could not hear her own voice, she couldn't talk but only made queer sounds which no one could understand. Imagine what it would be like never to see your mother's face or hear her voice, never to see the mountain rearing its peaks high, never to see the sunshine or blue sky, nor ever hear the birds sing? It was in this type of dark and lonely world that the little girl, Helen Keller, lived.

One day a teacher came into Helen's life who was to become her lifelong friend. This teacher was Miss Anne Sullivan. Miss Sullivan tried to find ways of helping the little girl, who since she could neither hear nor see, could only learn through her fingers or the sense of touch.

Deaf and blind people have a way of talking with their hands. Someone touches a blind and deaf person's hand in such a way as to make letters spell out words. At first Helen did not know about this way of talking. How could her teacher make her understand? One day she dropped water on one of Helen's hands and at the same time spelled out the word for water on her other hand. Suddenly it came to Helen what her teacher was trying to do. Afterward with a great deal of patience Miss Sullivan taught Helen the finger words for everything. She also learned to read the Braille books which I told you about in last week's story.

How long it must have taken to teach her. There must have been many most discouraging and dark days for Helen Keller. Perhaps she would have given up had it not been for the love and encouragement of her devoted and interested teacher. But with Miss Sullivan's help, bit by bit, life came to have more and more meaning for her. She began to make her hands do the work of eyes and ears.

Gradually she discovered more and more things that brought pleasure to her. One day she said, "I cannot see the stars . . . but there are other stars just as bright that shine in my soul. Every day is full of meaning for me. There is much work for me to do. I have my friends, I enjoy my dogs. I spend many happy moments in my flower garden. It is small, but everything I love is in it—flowers, sunshine, wind."

Though she had no eyes and ears to help her, Helen Keller became better acquainted with God, daily she discovered the wonders of His world, and learned to use His laws to make life more beautiful and worth while. She felt that God was working with her and this gave her courage. She felt that He was helping her to bring more happiness into her own life and into the lives of others. Living thus she grew into a very useful and happy woman, who has made and is making the world a happier place for many by her personal triumph over handicaps. She knows what it means to be blind and is spending her life helping blind people. For many years she has been president of the John Milton Society which furnishes Sunday school literature and a monthly magazine free to all blind boys and girls.

ANSWER TO LAST WORD PUZZLE.

JANUARY.

IF I WERE A MOTHER.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I have a friend, Mary Finley, who has a talent for understanding those she meets; she likes people and enjoys studying them. One day she and some other friends and I sat chatting over our knitting.

"It has been the regret of my life," Mary remarked, "that my husband and I have not had children. I often think of the many worthwhile things I would do if I were a mother." Her eyes lit up with happiness at the mere thought of being a mother.

"And what are some of those things?" I asked.

She answered thoughtfully. "I would teach my child to say good morning in a tone befitting the words. I'd want him to know, through repeated experiences, how nice it is to have the day begin joyfully and how pleasant it is to share this morning gladness. I would stress small courtesies—beginning when my child was very young. They then would become spontaneous."

"Name a few you would stress," black-eyed Donavee suggested.

"Of course, the thank you's and you're welcome's are important. How few of us unfailingly reply to words of appreciation with, 'you're welcome.' I have always had a warm recollection of the city of Baltimore because of its welcome signs. I would also teach my child to shake hands firmly, as if he meant it."

"I approve of all this, especially your last suggestion," the mother of twins responded. "I know a young woman with great charm of manner who almost ruins her otherwise unusually pleasing first impression by handing the newcomer a limp, lifeless hand."

"And I," another neighbor, who had never been blessed with children, spoke up, "should teach my children to permit their friends to have little idiosyncrasies; at an early age I would help them to realize that there being many types of personalities makes an interesting world. I have never forgotten an experience I had when I was collecting money for a recent drive. An important-feeling rich neighbor in our family hotel returned to the city when the fund-raising was practically over. She gave me a large check, and I expressed much enthusiasm. Finally, she said coldly, 'I gave that check for charity!' I felt 'taken down,' as, of course, she intended I should. But why was it necessary to tell me that I was a too exuberant person?"

"That's only a matter of opinion," my next-door neighbor comforted. "I recently read that great minds are the most cordial and friendly. This incident reminds me that I am going to start teaching Betty Jo to be nice to everyone."

"Ah, thoughtfulness! That's what I shall teach my children, first and foremost." The new bride's face lighted up and her eyes shone with a soft light. "My uncle, who is a psychologist, told the story of a patient coming to his office crying as if her heart would break. She said her husband had forgotten on their anniversary to send her the dozen red roses he had always sent. She admitted he had given her several thousand dollars worth of stock in his company; but his failure to give her

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

WHAT'S GOING ON?

What's going on in your Pilgrim Fellowship Society now? For some weeks your editor has received no news as to what the Pilgrim Fellowship-shippers of the Southern Convention are doing. No doubt many groups have set up their program for some months ahead and that program is off to a "bang." If this is true with your young people, let others hear about it through this page. "What's Going On" in your Pilgrim Fellowship group?

THE QUESTION.

How can we "find God?"

How can we be "converted" from mortal men into immortal men?

How can we be "born again?"

How can we be "saved?"

Is there anything we can do about it? Is there any condition with which we can comply?

This is what thousands of young people want to know.

HOW?—There is only one answer though it can be stated in many ways.

THE ANSWER.

When we give ourselves to God, we "find Him—"meet" Him—"know" Him. "He that believeth (trusts and obeys) the Son of God hath the witness in Himself."—(I John 5.)

We find God when we say the Lord's Prayer and mean it: "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done" in me. When we are willing to turn over the control of ourselves to God "something happens," the Spirit of God becomes "nearer than breathing, closer than hands and feet."

We find God when we are ready to say "No" to evil and "Yes" to the pleadings of "the still small voice" to follow Me.—Selected from "God's Reach for Man," by A. B. and A. L. Kramer.

YOUTH WEEK.

January 26 to February 2 is Youth Week. Young people can have parties with fun and fellowship. Youth groups can study how they can make a greater contribution to more Christian living. Adult groups in churches can give the young people a supper. There are many ways whereby this Week can be observed. At Bay View, the Woman's Fellowship is giving the young people a supper and fellowship program. They are looking forward to it with great anticipation.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WEEK— YOUTH WEEK, 1947.

"Youth Share

The Christian Faith;

The Christian Fellowship."

The fourth united observance of Christian Endeavor Week—Youth Week will take place January 26 to February 2, 1947. Beginning more than thirty years ago, the eight-day period starting on the last Sunday in January has been observed as Christian Endeavor week. It grew out of the celebration of the birthday of Christian Endeavor on February 2 which has been observed by Protestant churches around the world for more than fifty years. Major Objectives of Christian Endeavor Week:

1. To reach young people "for Christ and the Church," and to bring them into the life and work of the society and the church.
2. To challenge young people to commitment to Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour and to effective Christ-like living.
3. To dramatize the place of young people in the fellowship and work of the church and to prepare them for more adequate churchmanship and Christian leadership.
4. To present to the whole church and to the general public in every community the purpose, the methods, the achievements, the program, and the needs of Christian young people.
5. To bring the united action of Christian young people to bear upon the issues and problems of contemporary life.
6. To emphasize the place of Christian Endeavor in the total youth program of the church, with particular attention to the contribution it can make in the present hour.

The emphasis for the Week centers in the words, "Youth Share," and the theme for denominational day, Sunday, January 26, is "Youth Share the Christian Faith" and for Christian Endeavor Day, February 2, "Youth Share the Christian Fellowship." This is the 66th birthday of the founding of Christian Endeavor by Dr. Francis E. Clark.

The International Society is preparing extensive materials for the Week, with a worship service for the first Sunday, special commemorative birthday service for Christian Endeavor Day, and a large number of suggestions for activity in the days between. This packet (25c each) is now available. Orders may be sent to the International Society of Christian Endeavor, P. O. Box 1110, Columbus 16, Ohio.

All Societies, City and District Unions are asked to appoint committees early so this will be the best "Christian Endeavor Week" ever!

Program for Adults and Young People—3c ($3 for 100).

Program for Children—3c ($2.75 for 100).

Letter to Chairman—2c.

With beautiful desert imagery, Mrs. Isabel Caleb, an Indian teacher at Ewing Christian College, Allahabad, leads us into this service to "Make Level in the Desert a Highway for Our God." The four sections of the program: "Deserts," "Mirages," "Oases and Caravans," and "Jesus—The Head of the Caravan," lead us with the author into a concern for all men. When we turn to "Jesus—The Head of the Caravan," this is ecumenicity—the whole family of the whole church in the whole world with a common concern. We become a part of the body of all true believers who turn to our Lord echoing the same tenderness, the same desires. If the members of Christ's body cannot accept one another's differing ways just for one day out of 365, then how can we ever hope to have a United Nations Organization?

May we really feel on this day "That Thou mayest own us at one with Him and Thee, to the Glory of Thy Great Name."

the roses caused grief, because she considered them a symbol of his continued love for her. I shall teach my sons and daughters not to forget the 'roses' of life."

"Yes, they should be taught not to forget the 'roses,'" responded Mary. Then she added very gently, "Nevertheless, I'd want my children to be so understanding—especially concerning those they loved—that the absence of the 'roses' could never mean the absence of happy confidence."

JESUS THE GIVER OF LIFE.

LESSON V—FEBRUARY 2, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTON: I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.—Jn. 11:25.

LESSON TEXT: John 4:46-51; John 5:2-9; John 11:11-13.

Aids to Faith.

"So Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee where he made the water wine." Word of this miracle had undoubtedly been passed around the community. Thus it was that when Jesus came back there, and the nobleman whose son was sick heard about it, he went unto Jesus for help. Thus it was then that what Jesus had done was an aid to faith. Thus it is today. If any man wants his faith in Christ quickened, let him look around on what Christ has done and is doing. In every church and community there are those whom Christ has made into new creatures, those whom His spirit has transformed. This was the reply which Jesus sent to John the Baptist when he made inquiry as to whether He was the Christ or not—"look around and see what is happening, and draw your own conclusions." God hath not left himself without witnesses until this present day.

A Venture in Faith.

This nobleman made a venture of faith. There is a difference between turning water into wine and healing a boy who is critically ill. But the man thought that perhaps if the Master could do the one, He could do the other. It was a venture of faith. He believed and he acted on the faith he had. There is, too, here the truth that trouble is no respecter of persons—it comes alike to rich and to poor, to the folks on both sides of the tracks. The fact that a man is a nobleman or has wealth is no guaranty that his son will not become ill, or death invade his family circle. Every man has a date with trouble sooner or later.

Faith Is the Victory.

God sometimes puts faith to the test. In this case Jesus told the man that unless he saw signs and wonders, he would not believe. But the man's faith was made of sterner stuff. In quiet confidence and utter simplicity he said, "Sir, come down ere my child die." He believed Jesus could do what needed to be done. It was not credulity. It was not a denial of reason. It was above all not something which he held in his head but something which he felt in his heart. This is the essence of faith, this is the victory that overcomes the world, even our faith.

According to Your Faith.

"And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way." There was no external evidence, no sign, no voucher—not then or yet. But this man had faith in the simple word of Christ, and he went his way. Alas, that so many of us do not have his faith. We do not take Jesus at His Word. We do not believe He means what He says. We do not claim the blessing by faith. But that is the only way the blessing can come. If we believe on the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved—Jesus himself says so. It is in a way unbelievable, it looks as if we ought to do something, we ought to do something to earn it, but we have the word of Jesus that we are saved through faith.

A Seemingly Hopeless Case.

"And there was a certain man there which had an infirmity thirty and eight years." It looked like a hopeless case—the man could not walk or even drag himself about and he had been that way for thirty-eight years. His folks and friends thought he was about hopeless, the man himself thought it was about hopeless. He is a symbol, and a tragic symbol of a great host of people who are looked upon as hopeless. And they are hopeless from the human standpoint. But no case is hopeless in the sight of Christ. He is not only the help of the helpless but the hope of the hopeless.

Wilt Thou Be Made Whole?

Jesus said unto him, "Wilt thou be made whole?" Desire must precede determination and decision. Even Christ cannot do much for a man who does not want to be helped. "Alcohol Anonymous"—make this the absolute starting place for helping others. The alcoholic must have a real and deep desire to be helped, to be set free from the tyranny of his vicious habit. The same thing is true of being saved from sin, of salvation in Christ. The world salvation really means wholeness. Do you really want to be whole, do you want to be saved. Unless one can answer, "Yes," to this question, he cannot go much further.

Passing the Buck.

"Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled to put me into the pool; but while I am coming another steppeth down." There is a tragic note in it all—there was no man to help him. And a still more tragic note was the fact that he did not have it within himself to help himself. He made excuses, he passed the buck. But after all, after thirty-eight years of failure, we can understand why he had lost heart and had lost faith in himself. The act of Jesus appears the all more glorious in the light of this fact.

A Trumpet Call To Action.

"Jesus said unto him, Rise, take up thy bed, and walk." It was a summons to the will. Desire must be translated into action. Desire must become decision. There is a place for thought and meditation in religion. The head and the heart have their place. But the will also must be called into action. And many a man whose will has become flabby and flacid, has been galvanized into action by the word and work of Christ.

Obedience Brings the Blessing.

"And immediately the man was made whole and took up his bed, and walked." When he acted upon the divine command he received the blessing. No ifs, buts, or what-have-you—it is the law of the Kingdom. Wishing does not bring the blessing; only obedience does that. And to those who will to do his will, there comes the rich rewards of righteousness.

He that cannot forgive others breaks the bridge over which he must pass himself; for every man has need to be forgiven.—Lord Herbert.

SERMONS FOR TODAY. Edited by Frederick H. Thompson for the Alumni Association of Hartford Theological Seminary. Pilgrim Press. $2.

This volume of sermons was assembled in honor of Dean Emeritus Rockwell Harmon Potter of the Hartford Theological Seminary. Dr. Robbins W. Barstow, president of the Hartford Seminary Foundation 1934-1945, wrote the introductory chapter on Dean Potter as "Christian, Preacher, Teacher, Friend." He gives many intimate glimpses into the life of the versatile Dean who for twenty-eight years was pastor of the First Church of Hartford and for fifteen years was Dean of the Hartford Seminary and Professor of Practical Theology. Dr. Potter has served as Moderator of the General Council and President of the American Board. The volume gives deserved honor to a great personality and a distinguished churchman.

It is unfortunate that the reading public has not been given a better lead into this study of contemporary Congregational preaching. The vague title, "Sermons for Today," is not likely to spur the attention of many who should read the book. The typical Congregational aversion to revealing its identity is reflected in the unfortunate, nondescript title. It is quite likely that many who would be attracted by a volume of "Hartford Seminary Sermons" or "The Contemporary Congregational Pulpit" will skip over that which appears to be another ordinary book of "Sermons (of which there are so many) for Today."

The collection in honor of Dean Potter includes sermons by former students, fellow teachers, church leaders and ministers of the gospel. Some of these "Sermons for Today" grew out of the conditions of yesterday; namely, the war. Examples of this type of crisis-preaching are found in the following sermons: "The Supply Line" by Warren S. Archibald, "America's Part in the Present World Revolution" by Fred F. Goodsell, "The Religion for Today" by George H. C. MacGregor, and "O German, the Rod of Mine Anger" by Douglas Horton. It should be added, however, that the application to war conditions does not exhaust the significance of these sermons.

What is the tenor of contemporary Congregational preaching? If we may judge by this excellent cross-section of Hartford homiletics, it is Biblically - centered, psychologically, as well as theologically, tempered, and sensitive to the currents of modern thought. In this seminary series fine examples of textual analysis are given by Gaius Glenn Atkins, Willis Butler, Herbert H. Farmer, James H. Potter, Russell J. H. Stafford, and Raymond A. Wasser. The sermons by Russell J. Clinchy, Fred F. Goodsell and Hugh Elmer Brown are without texts. Three texts are from the Prophets, one from the Psalms, seven from the Gospels, and four from the writings of St. Paul. Expository treatments of Biblical passages are given by Oscar E. Maurer, Theodore A. Green, Douglas Horton, G. H. C. MacGregor, and James H. Potter. The sheer artistry of language and thought of Hugh Elmer Brown and Gaius Glenn Atkins are unexcelled in sermon literature. The beautiful interpretation of "Religion as Music" by Raymond Calkins should have a wide appeal. Withal, these sermons do justice to the great teacher in whose honor they were assembled, if not prepared. A brief biography of the contributors would have added color and interest to this valuable anthology of preaching.

REVELATION AND REASON. Emil Brunner. Translated by Olive Wyon. Westminster Press. Philadelphia. 1946. 440 pages. $4.50.

The author opens with the new, historical fact of a secular religion that has arisen and come to dominance over vast areas of the world; that modern man is anti-God, determined to make the world over into his own image. And that the alliance of Church and State, a fact in Christian history since Constantine, for direct or indirect enforcement of orthodoxy, has broken down. Of course, "little man" has made the vastest hell that the world has ever experienced; and the fear of pagan pre-Christianity, when Great Pan had died, is settling over the world again, precisely at the time when, at last, the dream of Aristotle had been fulfilled, that there would be available machines and power to absolve man from the slavery of labor. Yet, the United Nations Organization accepted slavery as right and practicable. And when a minister protested the a-morality of the new world government, a Church leader answered: "What else have you to suggest?" Something is tremendously wrong in the world where man has supplanted God with ego-latry. Might unashamedly rules as right. The Greek ethic and the Christian principles have been abolished in this world that is driven to an understanding of the realism of the Goetterdaemmerung of our racial ancestors and the Apocalypse of our spiritual forebears.

Against this mad-house of the present world Brunner posits God as revealed in Jesus Christ. He has nothing new. But he makes the old so alive that the book should be a "must" to every pastor, every teacher of religion. Revelation is not a doctrine. It is God Himself revealed in Christ; it is the communication of life itself. The history of revelation is the history of civilization. Brunner here gives a "Mahnruf" to the world trembling on the abyss of its own destruction. The Bible does not "prove" Jesus; it becomes Scripture because of the Christ. Of course this is now, as then, foolishness to the Greeks and a stumbling-block to the Jews. But it remains the revelation of God.

The erudition of the author is amazing; the book is cyclopedic. His religion is sound, and his thinking magnificent. However, dialectic theologians ought to learn to write more simply. After all, Jesus was the fountain-head of Christian theology, yet the common man can understand Him. As it is, the mine-run of ministers will give up in the maze of this remarkable volume. Nevertheless, "Revelation and Reason" should be a "must" to every Christian pastor and teacher.

In urging everyone to join this effort, the Salvation Army says:

"Do not be afraid to show your own faith in God and show others that you have a Fighting Faith yourself. Resolve to go to church—the church of your choice—more frequently and help bring others into the fold so that peace and love can unite the hearts of mankind.

"What you do to bring brotherly love and peace on earth to mankind—even though it seems a small matter to you—may be the most important thing in someone else's life—and it may be your greatest contribution of 1947 to the world at large."

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

It has been our custom for many years to set a goal to reach, in the beginning of each new year. We have never set a goal and failed to reach it. Thirty years ago the income was $5,000. I well remember, I took charge of the finances in September, 1916, and I came here and took charge the first of December of that year. Up to September 1, the churches had sent in $2,700 to run the orphanage and care for forty children. I had a hard time getting the income up to $5,000 by December 31. The children were poorly clothed and fed. We made up our minds that the Christian churches could do better toward its orphanage, and could furnish the children better clothes and food.

At the beginning of 1917, we humbly asked the churches to raise $8,000, and they did it. The next year we asked for $10,000 and reached it, and so on from year to year as we took in more children, we asked for more money. The church people have always helped us reach our goal. Last year we asked for $30,000 and reached it. Of that amount, the churches gave $21,533.14. At the beginning of this new year, I am going to set the goal at $31,000. If the churches will raise $22,000, I will obligate myself to raise the balance to reach that goal from other sources other than the churches. In other words, from friends who are not members of our denomination. Dr. "Hardy" Harcastle said to me sometime ago that if I remained superintendent for fifty years, he would raise me $50,000 for my fiftieth anniversary. I was a little surprised that he made that proposition to a man as young as I. He may have to make his promise good.

Now let us begin now to reach our goal. Let us all cooperate, all pull together, and you can all rejoice on December 31, 1947, with me.

I received a letter from one of our boys who went out some years ago. He had a hard struggle, but he made good and now holds a splendid position and is a very popular man in his home-town. He also has a job of responsibility with a good salary. He said he met one of his good Baptist friends on the street the other day, and this friend said to him: "I want to give you a check for $30 for the Christian Orphanage to show my appreciation for what the orphanage did for you." The young man added another ten dollars to make the sum forty dollars. It gives us encouragement to have a good Baptist friend take notice of this fine outstanding man, who is glad the orphanage gave him a chance when he had no home. We feel proud of him.

"STARTING FROM SCRATCH."

One must be wise and extremely careful or the morale of the people can be broken. I am already having to deal with a Church School faculty that are asking, "How long do you think we will continue working in homes?"

Gaining the Confidence of the People.

Gaining the confidence of the people is a story all by itself. Our Northern California State Superintendent, Dr. Harley Gill, wrote a letter of introduction which was mailed to every family in the community telling the people who we were.

We are hopeful for an introduction to the community through the Arden P. T. A. In fact the introduction was arranged. It was to be on Hallowe'en night. We arrived in good time and waited and waited for the introduction but the P. T. A. president was none to sure of the situation and dropped the matter.

The first work we started was a High School Pilgrim Fellowship. The high school group of our community attends four different high schools. This, of course, was no help to us for we had to comb through these four high schools to secure names for the calling of a youth committee.

The committee was finally located and called. Each youth that entered the door was filled with suspicion. After an hour one youth said, "Could I use the telephone?" My answer was "Yes," and with that I listened to his call. I heard him say: "They're O. K., come on over." And in blew another committee.

One Sunday a boy about 15 rushed up to me after the Pilgrim Fellowship meeting and said: "Gee, O gee, I like this, please tell my mother you believe in the virgin birth so I can come every Sunday night. All in all we have been graciously received except the very poor talked to us through a locked screen door and the very rich greeted us through the modern peep hole on the front door. This type of Home Mission work on the part of the Home Board and our State Conference is to be highly recommended. Well do we know that the Pacific Coast tells a story all of its own, one new community after another springing up and these communities are without churches and as in our case no meeting place at all. One boy in our Junior Sunday School department said, "What is the story about Jesus being born in a manger?" I asked, "Have you never heard the story?" The child in utter embarrassment said, "O, yes, in a way but what is the end of the story."

It seems to me the end of the story has not as yet been told. We are in the business of telling and it is our business in this day to tell it well.

In my closing remarks, I want to say that in my 17 years of church work the business of starting from scratch to build a church is the hardest work I have ever done. This kind of work demands that every bit of one's creative power be used. One never knows from day to day what will be his next move. I once studied dress-making under a French dress designer. Her technique was to give you a piece of material and it was up to you to dream up any kind of a dress you desired to create. Thrown out on your own with not much of a pattern to go by forces one to dig into those inner reservoirs of strength and to keep one established and going.

I find myself wishing that our old well established churches would be more helpful in these adventures we are making in these new communities. The day of individualism is over. The leadership on these Congregational frontiers not only need the backing of the National Home Board and the State Conference but the warmth and love of the local and neighboring Congregational churches. We plead for Protestant union. I would like to plead for a United Congregational Front. We were the people who laid the foundation of American government and that country for which we did so much in earlier days needs us as never before, for we are at the cross road in our American civilization, with new frontiers rising on every side.

SIMEON'S CHRISTMAS.

adequate preparation for the coming of Christmas? Well, here is Sunday with its precious hours coming the fourth day after, before the lights have faded out or the songs have died away, and its not too late to discern in that sign—the Babe in swaddling clothes—that which God's purpose designed we should find in it, His life and love revealed in human life, made known in the weakness of childhood, to be nourished with patience and care and discipline with the line and the precept of a faithful instruction, to be realized in the bearing of burdens, in the using of the joys, in wrestling with the struggles of manhood and womanhood, to be manifest in the sign of service and sacrifice and to be crowned with the victory of that inner joy and peace, that ever attend upon life that is thus lived.

No, it's not too late for us to have our share in Christmas, to receive the sign and learn its meaning. A new year is coming. There are yet two days to its birth. A fit day this, the Lord's Day, the day of the Christmas child, and the day of the soul's Master—a fit day this to meditate and form purposes, a fit day this to open the life wide to the gracious coming of this Christmas guest who seeks to be the Christian's friend. A fit day this and these days that lead to the year's threshold highly to resolve that this sign and token of the divine life and love shall not be lost for us, that though it be weak and feeble within us, these desires and hopes and dreams and purposes of the new life, we receiving them will nourish them as a little child within our hearts. We will pray and hope that they will gather the strength of youth, the power of manhood, that in us the divine love received so, this Christmas time, shall be patient and brave, shall be strong and willing, shall draw back from no service and refuse no sacrifice, shall press on in the Master's way, even to the cross, with good confidence and hope that beyond that cross is a broken tomb of victory won. It's not too late to share with Simeon his part in Christmas, to receive the Child and to pledge the life to follow the Child along the path that grows brighter unto the perfect day.

Consider also how Simeon remembered Christmas. "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation prepared for all peoples, set for the falling and rising of many, yea, and the sword shall pierce—and the thoughts of many hearts shall be revealed." Simeon had eyes to see, that's the reason the good Christmas he had stayed with him after the child had come and gone. That's the reason his remembrance of it was blessed and the song he sang, the devout are still singing. He had eyes to see and he saw. He had a mind to think and he thought. He had a reason to understand and he understood. He knew that it is by no breath, turn of eye, wave of hand that salvation joins issue with death. He knew that in the sign of Christmas was the sign given to men of the eternal battle of divine love with the sin and hatred of the world's old woe. He knew that nothing less than the sword could be a fitting symbol of this agelong conflict; that the hearts of those who received the Christ Child with its true gifts will be pierced through the generations. He knew that the ways of men, their very secret thoughts would be searched out by the white light of this unveiling of God's truth, that the evil things of human life would be disclosed, fearsome and horrible, dire and deadly, venomous and bitter and cruel. He knew that in the first Christmas the agelong war of the world entered upon a great, new, last campaign; that the message of peace was a declaration of war, war upon the things that destroy peace, a war not of the flesh but of the spirit. You see Simeon was a prophet as well as a priest, if he were a priest. Whatever else he was, Simeon was a seer; he saw into the heart of things, saw what Christmas meant then, what Christmas must forever mean in a world such as our world is.

Battle, I know, so long as earth remaineth,
Battle for all, but these have overcome.

And Simeon saw the reach of it and the far ranges of it. "It shall be for all peoples." Jerusalem Jew that he was, his prepared soul was purged of all taint of petty provincialism. Proud son of Israel that he was, his pride was not in a petty race, prejudicing judgment, perverting and making bitter the emotions of his heart; his pride was in the race of mankind, his hopes reached out to the dispersed nations and the despised peoples—"shall be a light to lighten the nations" and Israel's glory will be Israel's service of mankind.

It's not too late to enlarge our minds and hearts to take in the range and the reach of Christmas. In the presence of that star which guided the kings of the East, before it fades away, let the bitter and perverted and petty pride of our western world be purged away from the minds and hearts of all those who would carry into the new year a Christian's Christmas. Before that song has faded on the air let our notions of American supremacy and Anglo-Saxon superiority and western power and privilege be humbled and enlarged. Let us get a larger and a better and a truer Christmas hope and take it with us into the new year—God knows we have need of it, we American Christians!—the hope of a kingdom that shall be for all peoples—a kingdom lightened with the radiance that shines from Bethlehem's Child. Let us rejoice that the glory of our Christian America will be what Simeon saw the glory of ancient Israel would be, the glory of serving that kingdom of God in which all peoples and races and kindreds and tongues shall have their place and in which He shall reign whose right it is to be King of kings and Lord of lords. Leader of the peoples, Teacher and Savior of mankind.

FOLLIES OF 1946

By RAYMOND B. WALKER, D.D.

Portland, Oregon

The great folly of 1946? The attempt to build a new world out of men and women of the old mind and mood. New years are made by men and women who have new ideals and who work in a new spirit! There is no hope for humanity apart from new men. Years are meaningless until there are men of new purpose to shape them. "Ye must be born again," declared Jesus. His insight was profound. There is the solution of our problems, the answer to our questions, the secret of a new world! A new, fresh, clean spirit! The transformation of desires and motives! There must be a spiritual revolution before any other kind will be effective! There must be a moral renaissance before a new world order appears! Sings a modern poet:

I see my fellows form a grim parade
From robotizing factory, mine and slum.
They play the bitter farce that greed has made
But through their eyes I glimpse millennium.

Here while the wings of brooding cover all
In unity through this vast, unfolding plan,
I glimpse exultingly beyond this pall
And hail the brave awakening of man.

That awakening of man is the paramount thing! All higher progress depends upon it. Without it, trust in new social machinery will be folly. We need new social framework, of course, but we need more—new motive and purpose!

Once man's major problem was his struggle with nature; now it is the struggle with himself. We have conquered nature, even to unlocking the secret of the ages and releasing the elemental force of the universe, the energy within the atom. We have, in our generation, achieved a technic involving illimitable possibilities for the mastery and control of material powers. But the paramount question of 1946 has been, "can we master and control human nature?" And no men have been asking it more earnestly than the scientists. They, more than others, know that henceforth everything crucial which happens on this planet will depend upon the answer to that most fundamental of all questions: "Can we master and control human nature; can we trust ourselves?" Well, that, in turn, depends upon the kind of incentives which can be engendered within men's souls. Given the re-created spirit, the Christ-mind, the brotherhood-motive, the human race can dwell in peace upon this planet, developing its limitless resources for the good of all, dedicating technology to the enlargement and enrichment of personality.

Many of us have had anxieties and difficulties during 1946; some have carried heavy burdens of sorrow. It's been a sad year; disappointment, disillusionment, unrest, fear and tragedy. Has any home escaped! We had all hoped for some sort of a personal new deal this year. We hailed its coming with eager hearts. It is folly to think that any shift in the circumstances of our lives could fulfil our friends' greetings twelve months ago, "a Happy New Year!" Happiness can come only as we change, not as the calendar changes. Circumstances have little to do with happiness. Happiness belongs to a realm where circumstances cannot enter. There have been many happy people in 1946, but they have achieved in the face of heavy odds, they have fought their way onward against difficulty. They have mastered hardship. Valiant in spirit, they have triumphed over environment.

It will be the same in 1947. It will always be true that great living is the mastery of life within its inevitable limitations; not freedom from struggle but triumph in struggle! The Valiant soul can sing:

The roar of the world is in my ears,
Thank God for the roar of the world.
Thank God for the mighty tide of fears
Thank God for the bitter and ceaseless strife, Against me always hurled!
And the sting of His chastening rod!
Thank God for the stress and pain of life,
And Oh, thank God—for God!

Those who can sing that have found something within their souls that makes them impervious to adverse circumstances. Let the year bring what it may, with God, life can be rich and thrilling, creative and triumphant!

A Layman's Call to Prayer

By Wallace C. Speers

Everyone wants a better world. None of us is satisfied with the turbulent, chaotic conditions at present prevailing—the selfishness, suspicion, fear, suffering, hunger—all the host of things that makes a man a caricature of himself instead of the splendid free soul the good Lord meant him to be. “We have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts.”

Man has reached a critical point in history, where he must turn to God in order to avoid the consequences of his own faulty thinking—in order to build a world of peace, opportunity and hope for all.

We must pray, not a few of us but all of us. It is an awe-inspiring obligation and a glorious opportunity for all of us who believe in God. We must pray simply, fervently, sincerely, and with increasing power as our faith grows.

We must condition the world's leaders by asking for God's spirit of workability to descend upon their hearts and minds. We must condition ourselves, each and every one, by asking God's help in undertaking the responsibilities of living so that peace may be possible. We must pray in church, at home, on the train, on the job, and keep at it. Each one of us is important now. The ability of every individual to seek Divine help is a necessary link in the gold chain that can bind the world about the feet of God in peace and harmony. The prayers of sincere men and women can be overwhelmingly powerful.

You do not have to be an expert in prayer. You just have to be you, making your own personal pleas in your own personal way to the great God whom you love and reverence.

Won't you join the host of sincere folks who by their prayers are attempting to build the greatest mass outreach in human history of the soul of man in search of God's help in building a better world.—“The Meeting House.”

NATIONAL SERVICE COMMITTEE ESTABLISHED.

The organization of a new service arm of the Congregational Christian Churches was announced during the Missions Council sessions at Cleveland, Ohio. This is the Congregational Christian Service Committee and will be under the directorship of Reverend Edgar H. S. Chandler, ex-U. S. Navy chaplain in World War II, with headquarters in New York City.

This new Service Committee will function under a Council composed of eighteen members appointed by the three national Congregational Christian boards, namely: the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, Mass.; the Board of Home Missions, New York City; and the Council for Social Action, New York City.

The Congregational Christian Service Committee will work in areas of critical need, regardless of race, class, creed, or nationality, toward alleviating human distress through a mobile short-term emergency service, coordinating all its work with the three big national boards.

The director, Edgar H. S. Chandler, entered the Navy chaplaincy immediately after Pearl Harbor, spent fourteen months in the grim Aleutins during the early critical days of the war, and later served for a period as chaplain of the U. S. Naval Training School at Ft. Schuyler. The latter part of his Navy career included extensive service in the Atlantic theater, where Commander Chandler was head of the Christian Service for that whole area.

Recently, Great Britain gave him honorary appointment as a member of the Military Division of the British Empire "for distinguished services to the Allied cause." This honor was bestowed by the King of England on the advice of the First Lord of Admiralty.

Before going into the Navy service, Mr. Chandler was a pastor in Jamaica Plain, Mass., and served for three years as an exchange pastor in England. Before America's entry into World War II, he went to Great Britain as a fraternal representative of a large group of American churches, being the first U. S. clergyman to make such a trip. This was during the period of the early intensive bombing of England.

Mr. Chandler is a graduate of Boston University and New College Divinity School, University of London.

SHADOW AND RAINBOW OVER PHILIPPINES.

Extracts from Address Before Missions Council.

By DR. CARL HEATH KOPF.

The great chance today in the Philippines is to send peace-time help which will begin to match the war-time help we sent to drive out the Japanese. Let our American churches—not one of which was bombed—help rebuild the Filipino churches, of which half were destroyed in a war which shattered their economy and their moral stability, as well as their buildings. President Roxas of the Philippine Islands asked me to beg of you that America help put the churches, schools and hospitals back into Christian service. My trip to the Philippines was the most convincing spiritual experience of my life, proving to me that Christ has one mission in Asia, America and Europe—the reconciliation of men to God and to teach others through Christ.

I found the twisted ruins of Manila where nine out of ten buildings, homes and churches are still either hollow shells or a heap of ashes. I found the same sad picture in Cebu, Davao, Legaspi and every large town. I was impressed by the real poverty of most of the 17,000,000 Filipinos who, though their land is so rich in resources, have been exploited by landowners and crowded into congested areas where a mere subsistence income is almost an impossibility.

The potential importance of the Protestant Church in the Philippine Islands was borne in upon me and I saw the key role being played by the 450 groups of our United Evangelical Church for in many communities these churches are the center of living in the town where there are no papers, movies, radios and other distractions. The church is the center of loyalty for these towns—religious, social, educational, cultural.

I saw the high respect in which our Protestant missionaries are held because of their consecration in establishing churches, training Christian leaders, funding hospitals, schools, student centers and serving the Islands at their points of crucial need.

Lawless banditry held sway in the heart of Manila and far into the remotest provinces when I was there. Gunfire was heard almost every night and highway robbery was common. The new Republic is too poor to provide police protection as yet or adequate schools or other social agencies. President Roxas asked us to establish schools and strengthen our CHRISTIAN LAYMEN.

We rejoice in the many evidences of a revitalized laity. The achievements of laymen in denominational and interdenominational circles and the widespread recognition given by the secular and religious press should have a wholesome influence throughout our Church.

Charles P. Taft, Cincinnati lawyer and prominent civic leader, has become the fourteenth president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The election of Mr. Taft is seen as having special significance because it is the first time the Federal Council has chosen a president from the ranks of laymen instead of one from the professional religious leadership. This is interpreted as a desire to magnify further the role of laymen in directing the program of the Council. In accepting the new office, Mr. Taft said: "I can welcome this important and significant departure from precedent, in electing a layman president of the Federal Council, as a recognition is no sense personal, of the obvious fact that the men and women of the congregation, the blessed company of all faithful people, make the Christian Church. Its weakness is their weakness and its strength is their strength. . . . The world cries for the effective and universal Christian ministry of all believers." In concluding, President Taft said: "We laymen need desperately a Christian evangel, expressed in modern terms, adapted to modern methods."

Exactly, Mr. Taft! The church needs desperately this type of leadership; a type which is versed in the rich historical traditions of the church universal, but emancipated from outmoded forms of thought and activity, a type of leadership which is fitted for the new day.

Chosen by 1,247 laymen and lay women of the United States and Canada, Thomas J. Watson of New York City, president, International Business Machines Corporation, has been named 1947 winner of the Russell Colgate Distinguished Service Citation, according to Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education.

Awarded for "his outstanding contributions to the advancement of Christian education through leadership and influence," the citation will be presented to Mr. Watson in the form of a hand-illuminated testimonial, as well as a watch-chain emblem, at an all-Council luncheon at Grand Rapids, Michigan, February 12, during the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the International Council, Dr. Ross stated. Speaker at the luncheon will be Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam on the subject, "Protestantism in the Next Quarter Century."

"A prominent layman of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., Mr. Watson's educational, religious and cultural interests are world-wide in scope," Dr. Ross stated. "He has been presented with more than a score of honorary degrees by colleges and universities throughout the nation."

"Mr. Watson is a trustee of Columbia University, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and the Religious Education Foundation, as well as director of the Protestant Council of the City of New York and the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools," Dr. Ross reported. "He is a sponsor of the Post War Program of the World's Sunday School Association and the American Mission to Lepers, and is a member of the advisory board of the Salvation Army, the World Religious Education Association, and the national committee of the Layman's Crusade for Christian Education. He is also international commissioner and chairman of the foreign relations committee for the Boy Scouts of America."

All laymen, to be sure, cannot attain national prominence. Much, yea, the majority of the solid achievements of our churches must be accomplished by the rank and file of our members who never make the headlines and never win a medal. A few leaders of of national prominence will not suffice. The entire level of lay leadership must be raised. Only those who learn to be "faithful over a few things" are in line for promotion and prominence. Our rich harvest of Christian education should manifest itself in a new crop of adult leadership. In this age of unprecedented educational and technical advancement, vast improvements should be noted in the calibre of our lay leadership.

It is obvious that ministers alone cannot carry the heavy load of leadership required in the modern church. Let the lay and ministerial viewpoints meet and supplement each other.

Eleven months of 1947 lie ahead. A rejuvenated laity may transform the life of our churches during this year. Let the movement begin now rather than at the eleventh hour or the eleventh month! More power and prominence to the laity!

NATIONAL COMMITTEE OF LAYMEN.

A new National Committee of Laymen has been announced by the Laymen's Fellowship as follows: Raymond F. Elliott, Chairman, Greene, N. Y.; Leonard McChesney, 1448 Lincoln Ave., Lakewood, Ohio; Clarence C. Beasley, 316 Huntington Ave., Boston, Mass.; Ronald Bridges, 1798 Scenic Ave., Berkeley, Calif.; Egbert E. Briggs, 1808 West 16th St., Sioux City, Iowa; James H. Compton, Wichita, Kan.; Truman B. Douglass, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City; Howard T. Easton, Exeter, N. H.; Ray B. Johnston, 707 Michigan Bank Bldg., Detroit, Mich.; Clarence F. Lamb, 97 Verdale Ave., Providence, R. I.; Clemens Mortenson, P. F. Corbin Co., New Britain, Conn.; John A. Reuling, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.; Clarence W. Schroeder, Peoria, Ill.; Harvey E. Simms, 803 North Downing St., Piqua, Ohio; Arthur B. Stillman, University of Oregon, Eugene, Ore.; Harold E. Wahlberg, 1104 West 8th St., Santa Anna, Calif.; Robert G. Williams, Lake Worth, Ky.

The National Committee formulated the first draft of a constitution and the final draft will be presented for adoption at the next General Council meeting two years hence. The purpose of this organization as stated by the Laymen, is as follows:

To promote Christian Fellowship among the men of the church.

To encourage widespread practice of Christian principles in all daily relationship.

To rally all men to the support of the total program of the church.

To develop an awareness of the universal need for Christian brotherhood.

To cultivate the love of God in the hearts and minds of men everywhere. To create Christian statesmanship.

To sponsor a national program that will effectuate these purposes.

limited scope of activities. It offered little to the community, but on the other hand, the vision of a community service church embracing a large part of the population with varied activities serving people of all ages and offering them an opportunity for self expression and development, attracted surprising support.

The statistics before us in our pamphlet show that since 1920 there has been a net loss of over 1,100 church. These churches have died because they were not equipped to service their communities, but I believe it has been proven and will be proven again that a modern church which is sensitive to today's needs of the human beings making up the community in which it is located, and large enough to maintain the variety of activities appealing to all ages, will grow and the community will not let it die.

In these days of easy transportation, there is every reason to believe that the church should develop fewer but stronger units. Perhaps we should take a cue from large organizations serving the public in other ways, such as the A. & P. Company, which is replacing a large number of small units with a smaller number of large super markets offering a wider variety of goods and services in a more efficient way.

We all recognize that the strength of the Central Church is the summation of the influence and standing of the individual churches. The small local church offering little beyond a Sunday service to the community in which it exists also contributes but little to the work of the Central organization. In our own case, the Glenview Church was a drain upon the financial resources of the Central Body and contributed nothing. Today, however, even in the midst of our building campaign we contributed last year through denominational channels some $4,000. In the 1947 budget we set up no specific amount to be distributed through denominational channels nor have we requested any specific amount in our annual pledges but $6,000 has been pledged toward the work of the Central organization this year. This is equivalent to a three per cent return on a $200,000 endowment and is a handsome dividend on the investment that has been promised but not yet paid to our building fund.

Conditions being as they are, these larger, stronger churches embracing and influencing all worthwhile activities in the communities in which they reside can not be developed and financed without outside assistance. It

A Layman's View of Church Extension

By JOSEPH W. HIBBEN.

What has happened in Glenview, Illinois, is of interest only because it could happen any place in America. Our job is to make it happen more often. In 1940 the little one-room Congregational Church had forty members and no permanent minister. Some current bills were overdue and the church nearly joined the ranks of those lost to the fellowship. Although the town was growing, the church was not. However, Dr. Hanson of the Chicago Congregational Union saw the possibilities and when he found the right man, he sent him into the community to reorganize and develop the church. A large part of the population was not attending church at all. A few were attending scattered churches six to ten miles away.

The new minister, Robert Edgar, was astute in recognizing the needs of the community and he organized us for community service. People became conscious of the need for child guidance and a wholesome young people's program. Adults became interested in working together on civic problems in a way that brought a new harmony to the whole town. The church through its service to all individuals grew strong and became recognized by members and non-members alike as a tremendous factor for good in the town. Many people have been brought into its fellowship and religious life who never felt the need for church. Today, over 700 members of some nineteen different denominational backgrounds are working together. If you feel that this approach is superficial, we can give you proof of deep conviction and real sacrifice on the part of some to whom church life is a new thing.

In our case, I feel that it was not the pressure of new population that caused our growth though it presented an opportunity. While the town has doubled, our active members have increased over ten times, and the members individually have grown in their interest and understanding.

Our building fund campaign illustrates what I mean. In 1944 carefully laid plans were made to raise a building fund. The organization was complete to the last detail. Enthusiasm was at a high level. After several weeks of work, the results were tabulated—a miserable $16,000 cash value of war bonds. The average subscription was $67. As a result many people felt that the resources to build a representative church building were simply not there.

At this point, the Chicago Congregational Union and the Church Building Society came to our aid with counsel. During conferences on plans and procedures our course was more clearly plotted. A contingent offer of financial aid inspired us as to the possibilities. Our plans became more ambitious rather than smaller. Now that we knew where we were going, we were on our way.

Just eighteen months after our first campaign we again organized for a building fund drive. It was the same church, the same town and the same individuals. The results were vastly different. Our goal of $100,000 was over subscribed and subscriptions have now passed $200,000. More than $150,000 has been collected in cash. The average subscription is around $750 per family. People who could not find $100 to support our modest original plans gave $5,000 to help realize the idea of a strong church serving all ages seven days a week.

You must not think us wealthy. Many of our members are young people. Their homes are not yet paid for. Every indication is that these subscriptions are unusually large in relation to income, and they can't be soon duplicated, but they are being paid and enthusiastically. . . .

In our case, it was apparent that our community was not interested in supporting a small church with its

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Helping others. Long we have said heaven helps him who helps himself, but let us thank heaven for the person who helps others help themselves. And then let us go one step farther, and be grateful for the fellow who helps others help others. I have just been thinking that the man who helps his church to be a real church in a community is doing a most worthy work indeed. There is no worthy enterprise in any community that is not aided by the church. When a man helps his church he is adding strength to the very fountain head of blessing in his community.

I want to say just a word of praise here for so many men, women, young people, and children, who give help to their church. I know some of the finest folk in our land. They take time to give volunteer service to their church service for which business organizations and companies pay goodly sums. They do not stop to consider how much of their time it takes, nor how much mental or physical energy is expended. They love their community and all that would make it stronger, cleaner, better, finer, and they jump in and serve it by serving the church. If I am grateful how much more must their heavenly Father see and appreciate their humble but valuable service.

For instance, there are many business angles to a church, and especially one with a large membership, and valuable property, situated in a highly complexed community life. It takes time to be on boards and committees and attend to all the affairs pertaining thereto. Some of the problems are difficult and call for far-reaching decisions, but I happen to know fine men and women who are ready to serve their church with the most unselfish and best they have to offer. And let me add, that whether the church be large or small the situations are much the same, and people who give of their time and thought to a small church in any community deserve the gratitude of the community.

Whoever joins in and helps plan and serve a fellowship dinner, or make beautiful a place of worship with flowers, or teach a Sunday school class, or superintend a Sunday school department, or write an order for church supplies, or serve on any committee, board, or church deputation serves their church, their Lord, and their community. Those who loyally attend church, by their very presence make a real contribution to the church. Church jobs for all? Yes, attending church, and contributing to the building of a Christian world by offerings of money, personal witness and worship, are some of the biggest jobs a church has to offer. Each individual member can make such a service a real sacrament, and in so doing help his church, and his community. My heart is cheered by the many I know and honor who are such helpers in God's Kingdom.

CHURCH EXTENSION IN CALIFORNIA.

One of the greatest migrations in all history has resulted in a new population in Southern California and Southwest of over one and one-half millions of people since the census of 1940. The State of California in this same period had gained two and one-fourth millions, or thirty-four per cent, in population according to the Census Bureau.

During the last eight months the City of Los Angeles has gained population at the rate of 15,000 a month net. Building permits issued are always an indication of growing population. This same city issued 170½ millions of dollars worth of building permits in the first eight months of 1946 and by the month of December had exceeded New York City in the value of such permits issued—this does not include Los Angeles County but the city itself.

Our Conference has increased its youth camps and conference from a few that served 400-500 youth in the summer time to a year round program that now provides leadership for almost 4,000 in the course of the year. The new populations in our universities and colleges, multiplied by three or four times normal enrollments are being ministered to more adequately by a system of shared responsibility between conference staff and ministers and leaders in local churches adjacent to campus situations. Sixty per cent of our churches must build new or expand present facilities to carry their new responsibilities. I am grateful that in almost every case they are planning carefully in order not to repeat the excessive debts of the depression period.

We can face our Church Extension Opportunity and with the other denominations start our fair share of new churches. Let me emphasize that both in the already established and the new projects this is our basic Christian evangelistic imperative. We must use all of the technique for evangelism at its best—pastoral, visitation and mass evangelism of the preaching mission type.

It is expected to start new churches in communities that have just come into being, for the people have little community consciousness, and are so busy with their new homes and jobs and the accompanying financial responsibilities, that they are apt to overlook their spiritual needs and those of their families and neighbors.

There are 200 communities of sufficient size and strength to support a church and in many cases churches, that do not have them. Picture communities without a church in so called Christian America. It will be hard for many of you to believe that such conditions exist, but I would welcome the opportunity to prove my statement.

EVANGELISM.

Our Protestant fellowship, which is the Church as we know it, is thoroughly aroused to the need for evangelism. Pronouncements and programs are coming from everywhere, as if simultaneously the whole Christian world were being rudely awakened to the utter futility of any secular means. Can we not see and say that the Christian Fellowship has come to a new day? At least there is a new confrontation of opportunity which lifts the church out of mere routine into the saving role our Christ meant it to be. The awakening by the world's cry is of such serious intent and urgency as to make complacency impossible and draw out the faith and compassion of the Christian community into dimensions as deep as human need as wide as the mercy of God.

A renewed, strengthened church is the only kind God can use or men will follow: a church that is confident of its Gospel, deeply rooted in both its eternal, divine truth and its spirit of universal, human fellowship. This is the genesis and outreach of the new evangelism for this our day; a call, first of all, to the Christian fellowship to send its roots deeper into the soil of Christian truth and

THE CHURCH-RELATED AND STATE COLLEGES.

In North Carolina we have our North Carolina College Conference. All the white colleges in the state belong to this conference. Church and state schools work together in perfect accord. Their problems and purposes are similar and they face them together. They exist for the purpose of training the young people in the field of higher education.

In North Carolina we also have the Church-Related College Conference. All the church-related and independent colleges within the state, with but few exceptions, belong to this conference. While the problems and purposes of both state and church colleges are similar, their sources of support are vastly different. The state schools are tax supported. Every taxpayer in the state helps to support our state colleges. Church-related colleges are supported by their denominations, alumni and friends. The support that each institution receives varies according to the disposition and generosity of its total constituency.

Fifty per cent of the North Carolina young people now in college are enrolled in these church-related and independent colleges. The taxpayers of the state are paying the greater part of the cost of the education of fifty per cent of its young people in college and are contributing nothing for the education of the other fifty per cent.

Some years ago the legislature of our good state by law exacted taxes of all income producing property that our church-related colleges might happen to own even though these colleges were educating half of its young people without cost to the state. These colleges are also compelled to pay three per cent sales tax on all necessary purchases. Many thoughtful people within the state are beginning to ask why, since these colleges are engaged in the same business, why these irregularities.

The Church-Related Conference is called to meet in special session Tuesday, January 28, to consider these and other questions vitally affecting the educational program for our young people.

Certain members of our state legislature are becoming concerned for these issues. The following news item has been released by the radio and the press: "A joint session of the North Carolina Senate and House Finance Committee will hear representatives of churches, schools, and colleges on February 5. Representatives will plead their case for sales tax exemptions the same as state educational institutions in North Carolina. The meeting was called at the request of Representative O. M. Mull of Cleveland County."

For the first time the church schools will be given the opportunity to be heard regarding these important issues.

WAKE CHAPEL.

A quartet of our singers, together with Mr. Fletcher Moore, head of the Music Department at the College, visited some of our churches in Eastern Virginia the week-end of January 19. They took along with them Fred Register, a student in College. The quartet and organist provided the music for the service and Mr. Register did the preaching. Jimmy Darden, alumni secretary, served as a director of the group. We are glad to have these representatives of the college visit our churches.

Fred is pastor of Wake Chapel Church. Wake Chapel is located near Varina, North Carolina, and is one of our substantial rural churches. Fred is popular with his people; they appreciate his services and give him fine cooperation in his program for the church. Since Fred was on the trip in interest of the college, I was asked to take his services at Wake Chapel. It was a very rainy day. I arrived in time for the eleven o'clock service. Considering the day a very fine congregation assembled at the hour of worship. The singing was led by Joe Stephenson with Mrs. Smith at the piano. Old gospel hymns were used for the service in which all joined heartily. It was a privilege and a joy to preach to these good people.

Wake Chapel Church has always met its apportionments in full and whenever it has been asked for definite contribution for the college, it has never failed. On the present campaign to raise $100,000 for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation Wake Chapel has given considerably more than its apportionment. This church should have Fred Register for his full time. It is amply able, financially and otherwise. There are so many things in that fine community that a pastor could do and that the church should be doing. I trust that some day it may be possible for Wake Chapel to have a full-time pastor.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is expected that during the College Period (January and February of each year) our ministers and church officials shall endeavor to acquaint their Sunday schools and church memberships with the college, its needs, and purposes. It is also expected that during this period the Sunday school and churches will receive offerings for the support of the college. Our expectations in these particulars have not been realized in recent weeks; in fact our offerings have been unusually small. It is hoped that all of our Sunday schools and churches will begin to receive offerings for the college. Should the churches elect to raise their college apportionments Sunday after Sunday this much of conference requirements would be out of the way as we approach the end of the church year. At any rate, the college is most grateful for whatever consideration and support the churches may elect to give.

A LAYMAN'S VIEW OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

simply is not possible for a community to divert enough of its savings to such a cause in a short time. But with church credit generally having a poor rating because of the mortality which we have discussed, it is necessary for some Central Body to assist in such financing. These stronger units will become contributors to the extension work and should prove to be the best investments that can be made both from a financial point of view and from the point of view of extending Christian work to reach the largest number of people, which is our ultimate goal.

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

On Board Marine Lynx,
December 27, 1946.

Dear Friends:

What a timeless thing is a ship at sea. While you folks were rushing with shopping, wrapping, and planning for Christmas services, we've just rocked with the sea and the ship. Oh, we've had meetings and parties and services, too, but we lost a whole day before Christmas without even missing it. International law requires that when crossing the date line on Sunday, the next day be dropped—not our holy day. And so it was that we kept our Sabbath and awoke on Monday morning to find that it was Tuesday, the day before Christmas.

The news we get out here seems almost unreal to us in the wind and wetness, but news of poor Japan's earthquake evoked great sympathy. One of the Christmas service offerings will go to her relief. When our ship struck the rough waters—aftermath of the quake, we were unforgettably reminded that, after all, we are still on the world. Such pitching and tossing, banging and crashing as we had. Every now and then during the dinner hour shouts of consternation went up in the emergency dining room as someone fell with his tray or grabbed for the nearest support.

But with all the confusion, there was much less sickness than we had the first day out. Very few were well on December 16. I'd always thought I was a good sailor, and so had many others, including Ed. Riggs. But waves coming at us broadside were just too much. However, few Christmas dinners were lost (except those spilled), and fortunately, for the ship's crew really fed us that day. (It was a turkey dinner with mince pie.) I couldn't help wishing that some of our Southern Convention women had cooked the meal, however.

But perhaps you're wondering just how we live on board this troop ship. I could never have imagined it, but maybe some of you service men can. We 670 missionary personnel are in emergency class. The other passengers are in cabin class. We are all travellers in an unusual class—and however great the discomforts, we are all glad to be enroute to China.

How do we Lynxers eat? (Troop mess, it says on the door.) The emergency class dining room is a great place. It is divided in half by the steamtables and food dispensers. Down each side from here through the dining room and way into the hatches, form the two lines waiting to be served. As you approach the dining room, you pick up one of those sectional trayplates, a mug and "silver" (Army style). Thus encumbered, you grab a table here or a bench there to lend you support as the line slowly nears the food.

You regretfully notice the wasted food of those who have already eaten or attempted to eat and make way for those just emerging from the dining room with a tray and often a child or two in hand. Now you're near enough to hear the cries of babies who don't like eating, and the laughter of the young (and old, too) who love it all, and the shouts of friends trying to make table talk. Occasional punctuations of crashing crockery and slamming doors add to the din. The evening meal even has the addition of some radio music through the loud speaker. (Just a minute, I'll have to move from this deck as a wave of spray just doused me and my paper.)

How do we sleep? It's amazing how much sleeping we do now that we're used to crowd and confusion and rocking. Dick is in a deluxe hatch—only thirty-six bunks—so there is more space and quiet, but you should see where the majority of women and children are. Narrow canvas bunks with mattress pads are hung by chains and pipes in groups of eight. When troops were carried there were sixteen because they piled four deep. Some of ours have three layers. Most, however, are only upper and lower.

In the upper berths you get more air and light, but you have to climb every time you want to get some of your things or want to rest a bit or just want a bit of privacy. Because everyone has stretched string or rope around his bunk on which to hang clothes and accessories, you can only be seen by six or eight people instead of the whole roomful of one hundred when in your upper berth. When your neighbors hang out their washing, you have even more privacy and you don't mind the dampness because the hatch is usually too warm and stuffy anyway. And the mere fact that folks are trying to be clean is encouraging. Dick has put out two washings himself.

The main aisles are about four feet wide with two inches separating the double rows of bunks. In these aisles are baby pens, baby buggies, baggage and occasionally a chair. So you see how precarious is the walking, especially when the rough sea makes our ship pitch and lurch so often. But there have been few accidents. Mrs. Guy Thelin has a black eye because the Lynx rocked at the wrong moment.

How do we pass the time? Just living takes a surprising amount of time, especially for those with babies or sick folks or for those single women assisting mothers with large families. The canteen is open in the morning and afternoon for those who want to wait in line for candy or soft drinks. And there are play programs in the mornings for children, even though the space is limited. There are frequently little matters to be tended to such as mailing letters at the purser's office, hunting for something you've lost, and studying the map to see where we are, or even seeing about inoculations, baggage, etc. But most often of all, you can find a baby to take care of.

The first and second days out, when we preferred sitting or lying down, we had something that really helped us forget our seasickness—your letters and telegrams and cards. We hope some day to answer them more individually, but let us tell you now how very much we appreciate them. We've just been looking over them again, grateful for all our friends back in the states. As we've talked with experienced missionaries on board, we realize how great is the task that lies ahead and how important is your interest and support.

Lucia and Walter Smith, with their Teddy and Margie, are aboard. Margie burst forth with the chicken pox the second day out. Roderick and Agnes Scott are kept busy at committee meetings and conferences. Mrs. Thelin, her boys, and the Arthur Rindens help keep things lively.

There are fifty-eight mission boards and sending groups represented in our number. Sometimes we are appalled by the wide diversity of our Protestant missions; but then we are encouraged by the spirit of friendliness and the degree of cooperation attained on this ship. There are different countries represented here, too. Tonight at supper I had a chat with Mr. Hoass who, having left China in 1941, was a member of the Underground in Norway. His three children are such sweet ones, and their mother is so sick in the hospital. But no matter what sickness or discomfort strikes, our Lynx passengers seem to keep cheerful.

We have good times and good fellowship. Christmas eve was quite a day with three parties for the different age groups of children (there are 200 aboard). The church people of San Francisco had prepared gifts for all of them. Santa came and the ship's refreshments and Christmas tree made the day complete. Christmas Day we had several worship services in order to accommodate everyone. Every meeting is held in our emergency dining room, but with these folks, the room where Santa gave his gifts to a crowd of excited children, can easily become the Lord's house for thanksgiving and prayer. Where silent grace has been said over tray plates, and rousing hymns of praise are sung.

And now good-bye! I love the sea and I don't mind the pitching and the heaving of the boat when we can lie on deck watching the waves. Dick has even enjoyed that the past few days. We've both been glad of the time to lie around and we've welcomed the opportunities for fellowship with real missionaries. But how glad, how very glad we'll all be to land on China's shore.

There is much more that I'd like to write to you but there will always be much unwritten and we don't want you to get too bored before you get letters actually from China. Let us remember that the same ocean now supporting us reaches around to your ocean bordering the Southern Convention; it's the same sun hiding behind our clouds; and though our time is different, our faith is not. To our Father the thousands of miles of distance are as nothing. May He keep you and us strong to serve.

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

DEZBA'S BLANKET.

When Dezba was seven, she said goodbye to her father and mother, to her little brother and the baby, and went to school to live from autumn till summer.

Dezba's home was in the desert. There were no street cars, nor school buses. Dezba's home hogan looked like a brown bowl turned upside down and around it a fence of tall crooked sticks where her mother kept the sheep at night. There was no school near enough for her to attend from home.

Dezba disliked leaving her home and family. Her mother had remarked, "I'm afraid the white school will spoil our little girl." The school was a pleasant one, with nice playmates and kind teachers, but Dezba wasn't happy at first.

One reason was that all of the teachers and white people talked so queerly. They spoke American and Deza spoke the language of her Navajo people. Another custom that bothered her were the straight high seats. She had been used to sitting on sheep skins on the floor, or crouching on her heels.

Dezba learned three of the queer words and used them all of the time: "I no know." When her teacher tried to teach words on printed picture cards Dezba wouldn't look. She was thinking of home; of her little brother, the baby, and her mother busy at the weaving. She had always loved to watch her mother weave the blankets, making fine patterns from the yarn that she had spun from the wool of their sheep; white from the white sheep, black from the black sheep, then weaving the two together to make gray.

While Dezba was thinking about the colors of the blanket her teacher held a box up high so that all could see it. Sticking out of the end of the box were the prettiest colored sticks, white, black, red, yellow and blue. "When you have learned your words each of you may have the crayons to draw with," said the teacher.

Never had Dezba learned so much in such a short time! Soon the teacher gave her the crayons. "If you like you may make blanket patterns," said the teacher.

Dezba thought of her mother and started a blanket pattern. She tried to put the summer sky in it, with mountains and rain-clouds and lightning. Recess came before she knew it.

Each day the learning became easier as she knew new words. Each day she drew more blanket patterns with the bright crayons. On Saturdays she usually went to visit the missionary. This Saturday she carried the blanket pattern along with her to show to the missionary.

"Good, Dezba!" said the missionary, and she took the drawing to show the Navajo grandmother whose hogan was just next door.

"How would you like to come to my hogan and weave a blanket just like this?" asked the old Navajo grandmother.

Thereafter Dezba spent her Saturday afternoons at her small loom beside the grandmother's patiently learning how to weave the lovely blankets. It wasn't easy work for her either. Many times she would have to undo what she had done and start over again. How proud and happy she was when the pattern finally began to show—sky and mountains and clouds and lightning.

When the blanket was finished her teacher hung it on the wall of the school room where all could see it. "Besides weaving this lovely blanket, Dezba has learned more American words than any other one in this room!" So she had, but she had hardly noticed that she was learning them. But she was happiest when she carried the blanket home to show her mother when summer came.

"So!" said mother. "Then the white school isn't exactly spoiling you, after all!"—Retold from "More Missionary Stories to Tell."

"IF I PASS—"

By IRMA DOVEY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"My dad's going to give me ten dollars if I pass."

"I'm going to have a bicycle if I pass."

The third grade abounded in stories of rewards offered for promotion and punishments threatened for failure. As she listened to some of them, Miss Ellingson, the teacher, felt like a judge about to sentence prisoners. Why did parents insist on offering rewards? Often they were beyond the reach of their children—and almost as bad, psychologically, were those offered for perfectly natural progress. The latter was like promising a boy five dollars for every inch he grew.

Most children want to go forward with their classes. But the whole school program is built—as it should be—with emphasis upon daily achievements. It is easier to work toward the satisfactory completion of a specific task than toward anything so vague and distant as the end-of-the-year promotion.

"How can I be sure to pass?" I don't know," wailed one child, bewildered by much pushing and prodding.

Many a parent, although he avoids late entertainments for his child to protect his health and denies him rich foods and dangerous playthings, feels that the family is disgraced if the school makes restrictions regarding promotion. Yet in some cases promotion is not advisable. When the school prescribes the repeating of a grade, it does so only after careful consideration. Its only aim is to assist the child to make maximum progress.

Parents should realize, too, that their children's failure is their failure. This is especially true when the child is in the first grade. If he does not learn to read readily, it is generally for the reason that his background of experiences is inadequate, or because he has not been encouraged to speak well, or because he has not learned the value of books. It is these deficiencies, not to mention inadequate mental equipment or physical stamina, that hold a child back.

No child should be promoted to grade two until he has mastered the work in grade one; nor should he be expected to do the work of grade one in a single year if he was unprepared at the time he entered. The preparatory class for grade one is the kindergarten, and every grade school should include this class. Where it is not provided, parents should contact a kindergarten teacher and learn how to do their utmost to supply some of the experiences of which their child is being deprived.

It is unfortunate that most of our schools are built upon a system of grades and "passing." Many systems have tried to eliminate "failures" by promoting on the basis of age, or by merely transferring from group to group without regard to accomplishment. This requires individual tutoring and can seldom be done successfully in a one-teacher classroom.

"WE HAVE A GREAT TASK!"

A Sermon

By EARL T. FARRELL,
A Graduate of Elon College and Minister at Haw River, N. C.

We are undertaking to do here the greatest work the world has ever known—the building of God's Kingdom in the lives of men and women, boys and girls. We share in spirit with the Christian Saints of all ages the task of assimilating Eternal Truth for "abundant living" in our lives and in the lives of others.

Most of us are here because we have had an experience of Christ, because we have been healed of our sins and would not forsake Him for the world.

One day as Jesus was talking to the multitude of people who thronged about Him an afflicted woman came behind Him and managed to touch His clothing. Jesus turned around and asked who did it. The people denied one after another. But the woman realizing that she was not hid from the eye of Christ, "came trembling and falling down before Him, she declared unto Him before all the people for what cause she had touched Him, and how she was healed immediately." She touched Him in faith. She could not explain it, neither can we, but she went away healed and with the benediction of Christ upon her, "Be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace."

By faith we have made our way through the multitudes to the presence of Christ, afflicted by sin we in faith touched Him and heard His quiet words of healing, of comfort, of peace. We go our way rejoicing and lifting our hearts in prayer with Christ to God, "these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves." We know that all who humbly come before Jesus that He heals them and sends them forth in peace. To that cause He gave His life and taught us to work and to pray, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven . . . for Thine is the Kingdom and the power and the glory forever." What a task! Now thrilling, now terrifying! forever the joy of our lives!

The Gospel of Jesus Christ is still "the power of God unto salvation, to everyone who believeth." Jesus speaking to His disciples, said "All power is given me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Some of us feel this heavy on our hearts realizing how little we have done and praying that God will forgive us of things left undone.

The area conference on evangelism met in the United Church at Raleigh, North Carolina, January 14 and 15. We who were there felt the presence of Christ moving among us as we discussed this problem of teaching the world of Christ.

The following are thoughts expressed at the conference or which grew out of the inspiration of those two days.

I arrived at the church a little late. The ministers had already assembled. I expected to see there my fellow ministers, but it had not crossed my mind that Negro and white were meeting there. On entering the church I listened to deep, rich voices blending together in song:

I need Thee every hour,
Most gracious Lord,
No tender voice like Thine
Can peace afford.

I need Thee, O I need Thee;
Every hour I need Thee;
O bless me now, my Saviour,
I come to Thee.

And so He did bless us! It was exalting, especially to one who had never "seen it on this fashion," men of different skin color, but one in Christ, seeking together methods of bringing God's Kingdom on earth.

At the fellowship supper one old man who has long been preaching Christ—a Negro—asked to be allowed to sing his theme song. He rose from his seat, tall, tired with years, a face marked with care and love, with eyes that looked with compassion. With his head up he sang in spirit that spoke his faith, "We are Sowing Seeds," with words about the harvest. With tears in my eyes his face seemed to fade away and I saw the Living Christ in every feature of his countenance. Surely, "They shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the Kingdom of God."

The talks given, prayers prayed, sermons preached, indeed, in the words of Mr. Stanley, "It has been a mountain-top experience. We feel like building tabernacles here, but the people are down at the base of the mountain. There is where our work is to be done. We must go back and lead them up!"

I felt like Isaiah, "Lord, send me!" that I may help to bring them all, from every tribe and nation, of every tongue and color, to the top of the mountain. Let me keep one hand on Thee and the other in the hand of my fellowman praying, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done."

All of us ought to feel that way and should be doing more toward making it become a reality. With one half of the people of our country connected with no church, with only twenty-four per cent of the church members regularly attending, with thirty-two per cent of the churches of our denomination last year gaining no new members, perhaps it means we should be "endued with power from on high." In the past fifteen years our church schools have dropped 389,000 names. If we think that we are to stay here and build tabernacles then the words of Luke used to characterize Peter are applicable to us: ". . . not knowing what he said."

We ought to get busy! If we have found Christ then let us hasten down to where the people are to be found. "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might . . . having your loins girt about with truth . . . and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace . . . taking the shield of faith . . . and the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God." (Eph. 6:10, 14-17.) If we build in that spirit the gates of hell shall never prevail against the Church of Jesus Christ! What a fearful thing to pray, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done," unless we mean it.

We ought to be disturbed by what is going on in the world. Do the enemies of Christ know yet who they are crucifying? We "wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." If we have any good news, then let us spread it abroad.

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!" (Isaiah 52:7.)

FEEDING THE FIVE THOUSAND.

LESSON VI—FEBRUARY 9, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: I am the bread of life.—John 6:48.

LESSON: John 6.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 55:1-7.

Curious Crowds.

"And a great multitude followed him, because they saw the miracles which he did on them that were diseased." These folks were moved primarily by curiosity. They had no deep sense of need, they were not concerned primarily with what Jesus had to say, but in seeing him perform miracles on those who were sick. They were representative of a great company of people today who have no deep interest in the spiritual nature of religion, but are concerned rather with anything that appeals to their curiosity.

The Hunger for Bread.

The great multitude had been with Jesus all day and they were hungry. It is significant, however, that they were so absorbed in what he was saying that they almost forgot their hunger for bread. Jesus evidently had something to say and a way of saying it, that many a modern minister does not have. For if he speaks a few minutes over the appointed time they pull out their watches and look at them, and if the thing goes on much longer they put them to their ears to see if the watches have stopped. But that is beside the point. Here was Christ before the hungry multitude. And as he looked on them he was moved with compassion on them.

There is a dire hunger in the world today. There are millions of people, many of them children who do not have enough, not nearly enough to eat. And all this touches the great heart of the Master. He looks with compassion on these hungry people. And he depends upon those of us who have enough and to spare to share with those who do not have enough, or even anything.

A Practical Business Man.

"Philip answered him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little." Philip was a practical sort of fellow, and quick on a calculation. He would have been a good fellow to have on the "banquet committee" or for that matter as a food administrator. He could look at a crowd and quickly estimate just how much food it would take to feed that crowd. He was a business man who was useful because he was practical. The church needs good business men. The Lord's business needs and deserves the best brains in the community or city. There are many business men who could not make a speech or sing a solo, but they can bring to the affairs of the church sound business sense and good judgment. Let them consecrate their business sense to the King's business.

A Man Who Saw Things.

Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, was a man of another stripe. He saw the crowd and he probably could have made a rough guess about how much it would have taken to feed the crowd. But he did not lose sight of the important thing even though it was small. He saw a boy there, a mere lad, who had five small barley loaves and two small fishes. That was a new element in the situation. But even Andrew did not suspect the possibilities of that lad and his lunch. "But what are they among so many?" he asked with a note of despair in his voice. There are those among us who see lads and lassies in our midst but they do not see the splendid and undreamed-of possibilities in those young people.

Jesus and What We Have.

Five barley loaves and two small fishes were not much among so many people, a great multitude. Some of us would have disdained such trivial things altogether. But Jesus with spiritual genius, took what was available and blessed by God used it for doing the undreamed-of. He took that lad's lunch and fed the multitude and then had twelve baskets left over. Here is the sobering and stimulating truth that when we give such as we have, and such as we are to Jesus, miracles may happen. There are so many of us who would do such wonderful things for Christ if only we had more, or could sing better, or speak more eloquently, or have more time, or something else ad infinitum. But the central and searching question is not how much we have, but whether we are using what we have for Christ, whether he has such as we do have and are, for his use. There are many people of few talents who have done and are doing great works for Christ, because he has all of them. And there are many folks of ten talents who are not counting for much because they have not given themselves to Christ.

The Giving of Thanks.

"And when he had given thanks"—here and elsewhere Jesus always gave thanks. His heart overflowed with gratitude to the Father. It was not a big thing, but he received it with thanks. A great deal of our ingratitude springs from the fact that we think too much about what we do not have, and too little about what we do have. There are many who sit down to their tables who never give God thanks, even though there are children at the table. There are many who in their prayers are always asking God for things when they never thank him for things he has already given them. "In everything giving thanks, for this is the will of God concerning you," wrote Paul to his friends.

The Middle-Men.

"And he distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down." Christ fed the multitude through the disciples. He gave to them that they might give to others. He fed others through his disciples. It is the divine plan, was then, is now, and evermore shall be. God could have fed people by a miracle direct, but he did not ordain to do it that way. Christ has no hands, no feet, no head, no heart but ours to do his will on earth. We are the mediators of bread, both physical and spiritual to others.

The Divine Conservation.

"Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." Waste is sin. Conservation is a part of the divine plan. It is wrong to waste material things. It is even worse to waste manhood. Christ came to save that which was lost and that which was being wasted.

MISSIONARY OBEDIENCE.

Development of a new "group evangelism" technique designed to accelerate the work of Christian missions overseas, has been recommended in a special report presented to the opening session of the fifty-third annual meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, held at Buck Hill Falls, Pa.

Employment of the new technique, according to mission leaders attending the four-day gathering, would mean a definite breaking away from the traditional "one-by-one" conversion methods characteristic of most Protestant mission work today.

Core of the "group evangelism" method, the report explained, lies in reaching the rulers of people, securing their adherence to the tenets of Christianity and the resultant adherence of their countrymen, and then giving this "nominal impact" depth and content by follow-up work of teaching missionaries.

Japan offers one of the most fertile fields for this type of evangelism, said the report, because in that country the cultural pattern has been severely shaken.

"In Japan," the report declared, "there is proportionately the largest group of well-trained national pastors and lay workers in the whole non-Christian world. There are hundreds of former missionaries in Japan who could be marshaled for a teaching ministry. Many of them became discouraged in the last two decades because where seemed no clear-cut need for them. Such a program would constitute a fresh call to service to the people of their first choice and utilize this available but latent source of manpower."

The report went on to suggest that former servicemen and women who received training in the Japanese language while in the armed forces might be recruited and given special training for this special service.

At the present time, it added, similar group approaches might be made in non-Moslem Africa and among other primitive peoples with a view to converting chiefs and other leaders before the "acids of modernity and secularism undermine the traditional social pattern."

Stressing the urgent need for Christian evangelism today, the report warned that men are losing faith in each other and in all religious teaching.

In countries which have escaped the actual sufferings of war, self-love and insistence upon personal gain and comfort without regard to the welfare of others seem to be the prevailing moods, it said.

"Crime and juvenile delinquency are reaching unprecedented proportions. Man has become possessed of the greatest destructive power in history and is fearful lest he use it to bring about the suicide of civilization. There are actually more men, women and children without Christ today than there have ever been before in the history of the world.

"In almost all countries where foreign mission work is carried on, although the rate of growth of the Christian community is higher than the rate of growth of the general population, the immensely greater numbers in the general population mean that there are more non-Christians today than there were half a century ago."

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

We have often hear it said, when a tree stops growing it begins to die. From my observations, I find this is true. Another thing I have noticed through life is when an active man, who has led a busy, strenuous life, grows old and retires from all activities, he seldom lives long afterwards. When any business gets to a standstill and fails to go forward, it generally begins to go back.

We are very happy to say that the Christian Orphanage has had a steady growth for the last thirty years. It has grown from one building for children to three nice brick buildings for the care of children. It has grown from two cows in the dairy to fifty head. It has grown from one hundred thirty-one acres of land to two hundred seventy-five acres. It has grown from a small barn to a large modern barn, with a cow shed that will take care of thirty milk cows. It has grown from an indebtedness of $7,000, done all the above mentioned things, to a nice balance in the bank for running capital with everything paid for and no indebtedness. During this time, it has mothered more than six hundred little children. But it is not through growing yet. There is always something to be done for the betterment of the institution. For the year 1947, we plan to put up a lot of wire fence, and we also have in mind to build another small barn to house dry cattle and make room to store feed. How has all this been accomplished?

The Christian Orphanage has always been blessed with a Board of Trustees of business men and women who have worked together. "No divisions, all pull together and pay as we went," has been their motto. The churches had confidence in their business ability and have always co-operated with them and have been loyal through the years. Cooperation and loyalty go hand-in-hand to make anything a success.

During the year, let us all put a shoulder to the wheel and push and make the year 1947 count far more than 1946. We always like to do a little better each year. Remember us in your prayers that we may accomplish even greater things in the future than we have in the past.

SUN'S PULPIT.

Hasten thou on, O man of Christ! If we work God will give us the increase.

Dr. Timmons told us a story of "Big Philip," a bell in the church where he serves as pastor. When he had a good day he felt fine, he went home in the evening, ate supper, read the paper, listened to the radio; and when he went to bed he slept soundly never hearing "Big Philip." On the other hand, if things went wrong, he worried, at night at every hour he could hear "Big Philip" striking out the hours. That illustrates to us that God is striking out the hours. "Those who have ears to hear, let them hear." All is not well with the church. We ought to be Divinely disturbed.

The place to begin is at home. "Tarry ye in Jerusalem until you be endued with power from on high." In looking over the report of our church I saw what we did last year in giving. To the command of Jesus, "Go ye therefore into all the world," we gave a little more than two cents per member per month. Will such giving enable the church to "preach the Gospel to every creature." To home missions we gave two cents, to Christian education one cent to teach, "them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Alas! there were other churches that didn't do any better and some perhaps not as well.

Most of us would like to live in a beautiful home. We would like shrubbery planted about in the yard, evergreens in the winter to show forth some life when all the flowers have died, and the leaves turned brown and decaying. People who have such homes are proud of them. They like for their friends to be pleased as well as the passersby. You know, Jesus had something to say of houses, of building them on solid foundations in order to withstand the storms. He compared life to His story. And we hear Paul speaking to the Corinthians, "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." That house we are building, too. Our days and years are told as a tale—short like the grass that grows and withers at noon. We have undertaken to do a great work, the building of God's Kingdom. God is striking out the hours. Soon will be "quitting time," perhaps sooner than we think. We will lay our tools aside, the plumbline and the square, the hammer and the saw, night is on and work is done. And still the voice of God is heard among His prophets, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"

You have an opportunity here to work. Let not your talents rust, neither lay up treasures where moths eat and where thieves break through and steal. In the Presence of God, in the silence of worship let us pray:

Holy Spirit, Truth Divine,
Dawn upon this soul of mine;
Word of God and inward Light,
Wake my spirit, clear my sight.

Have faith in God, have faith in Christ, have faith in the ultimate good of things,

Keep heart, O Comrade! God may be delayed

By evil, but He suffers no defeat.

God is striking out the hours, let us hasten down the mountain, into the valley of human need, of suffering, of sin, of darkness, where Christ is being crucified—down where the people are found. God lead us on

In paths our bravest ones have trod,
O make us brave to go;
That we may give our lives to God
By serving men below. Amen.

CHILDREN'S PAGE.

The term "failure" is in itself unfortunate. "Retention" softens the sound a little but makes no change in the time spent at a given grade level. Perhaps the day will come when changes can be made in the graded system. When all school systems include a kindergarten foundation there will be much less retardation. Until that day, in the great majority of schools promotion remains a problem.

Parents can help to eliminate much unhappiness occasioned by these annual or semi-annual hurdles if they accept the progress made from one grade to another in a cooperative spirit—if, instead of offering rewards, they say, "No matter which grade you are in, just do your best work. That is what really counts."

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

In Memoriam

DeALBA

We, the members of the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Congregational Christian Church, Newport News, Virginia, find it our sad duty to record the death on November 7, 1946, of our dear beloved member, Mrs. Lydia Eudora DeAlba.

Mrs. DeAlba, as she was affectionately known during her many years of active service in her church was loved by all that knew her. She was a charter member of the Woman's Auxiliary, her life was one of Christian beauty. The light of Jesus shone on her countenance, it can be truly said that a Godly woman has been called home. To know her was to love her, she was always ready to do some kindly deed for others.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. We feel most keenly the loss of this faithful member, her passing has left a place in our church and community vacant and our hearts are saddened.

2. That we hold in warm remembrance her beautiful character and shall try to emulate her life so that her good works may live on.

3. That we extend to her family our heartfelt sympathy and pray God's blessing on them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent the family, a copy be placed on the records of the Auxiliary, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Respectfully submitted, churches so that crime may be controlled by changed individuals as well by law.

Another thing which impressed me was the deep gratitude of the Filipinos for the relief clothing, food, books, medicines which American Christians have sent. Because the war scorched their homes and cities, they have almost nothing with which to begin again. Their physical and spiritual restoration should be the accepted privilege of our American churches.

As I look ahead I see first, the need to rebuild the churches and hospitals and schools and to send more relief clothing, books and Sunday school materials. Above all, we should send more missionaries to serve as advisers for the growing church and as cultivators of new fields among pagan tribes and immigrants.

Between 87,000 and 90,000 pieces of literature a month are distributed through the Commission on Evangelism. This means that the million mark a year has well been passed not including the "Fellowship of Prayer" which reaches a million annually.

Nine of the area conferences on evangelism have been held across the country to which 746 representatives came, 29 State Superintendents and Assistant State Superintendents, and 22 team members. This means that approximately one-fourth of our entire ministry has shared in these area conferences.

Book Reviews

JUSTICE AND THE SOCIAL ORDER. Emil Brunner. Harper and Bros. 1945. 304 pp. $3.

A full-length disquisition on justice in natural law done with the renowned German thoroughness. The author holds that all subsequent conceptions of justice have been based on the Aristotelian paradigm of simple, arithmetical justice, which is contractual, and of the justice of actual inequity, proportional, which is geometrical or distributive.

The subject is a proper thesis these days in which civilized nations have reverted to the pre-Christian law of vae victis yet dare to conduct "war-guilt" trials of the vanquished.

Yet Brunner makes it clear that the greatest exponents of natural law, including Aristotle, never abandoned the "right" of slavery; and that the founder of international law, Grotius, assumed this right in the sale of vanquished peoples by the victors of war. And—a confession for theologians—the very systems of historic theology included the "right" of God—upon the pattern of feudalistic society—to damn untold generations of peoples to everlasting punishment for their inheritance of sins in a process over which they had no control. Thus, in both fields, we behold the reflection upon the skies of man's mental universe of earthy institutions.

All which but goes to prove that Christ touched the heart of the problem of justice when he placed mercy there.

THINK ON THESE THINGS. Stuart R. Oglesby. John Knox Press. Richmond, Va. 1946. 103 pp. $1.25.

The text: Phil. 4:8-9, "Whatever things are true . . . honorable . . . just . . . pure . . . lovely . . . good report . . . think on these things."

Each word is treated in a little sermon, well balanced, with good interpretations and well selected illustrations.

Not a defense of the faith, but a life of action in faith is the burden of the message; that Paul is pleading with today's Christians as surely as he did with his beloved Philippians.

The age of Paul out-thought, out-prayed, out-lived and out-died their pagan contemporaries and so turned antiquity to Christianity. There is no other way; no modern way.

National Youth Week Observance

NOTE: The following statements were written at the request of the International Council of Religious Education, Chicago, Illinois, endorsing the continent-wide observance of Youth Week, January 26-February 2, 1947, in the United States and Canada.

PROTESTANT CHURCH AIDS AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP

By G. BROMLEY OXNAM

Bishop of The Methodist Church, New York Area, and President, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America

There is no greater contribution to American citizenship than that made by the Protestant Churches in their youth program. Activities designed to draw forth creative talent and to give that talent cooperatively, to enrich common life, lay foundations for national security. This youth program is founded in our Christian faith, and manifests itself in democratic service. National Youth Week should have the full support of thoughtful and far-seeing citizens. No finer body of young people has lived than present-day youth. The problem of juvenile delinquency is primarily a problem of the delinquent community. The community that gives to youth a wholesome youth program will have reduced delinquency to an insignificant minimum.

YOUTH NEEDS GUIDANCE TO HIGH IDEALS

By ROBERT GORDON SPROUL
President, University of California

We often speak of the idealism of youth. What we mean is that in the search for a meaning to life young people are more receptive to ideals than are older people. They have enthusiasm and a spirit of self-sacrifice which should be an inspiration to all. But they depend on others for the experience and the guidance which will enable them to distinguish high ideals from those less worthy. Through understanding and appreciation of the spirit of religion, youth may best develop a sense of discrimination which will make its choice of ideals a significant factor in the development of a world worth living in.

CHURCH MUST TRAIN FOR CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP

By DR. EUGENE BRIGGS

President, Phillips University, Enid, Oklahoma

In order for a nation to be Christian, it must have Christian leaders. In order to have Christian leaders, young people with ability, talent and courage must be discovered, dedicated and educated in the Christian culture. In order to do this, churches and communities must realize their obligation to youth, giving them the challenge to live according to the highest principles of the Christian faith. Knowing subject matter is not enough. Literacy in world affairs and illiteracy in spiritual understanding proves destructive not constructive. Right will triumph only when Christian leaders understand Christ-like principles and act upon them.

CHRISTIANITY CAN MAKE WORLD PEACE A PERMANENT REALITY

By CHASE GOING WOODHOUSE

Former Congresswoman from Connecticut

Fate has assigned to this country of ours the task of leading the nations of the world to peace. This calls for more than scientific knowledge, more than our great engineering skill which enables us to produce goods in such great volume, more than our ability for democratic self-government. What the people of this country, and especially the youth, must have is a deep spiritual drive to peace, willingness not only to share our plenty with the peoples of the world in order that they may be in a position to help themselves, but a determination to make the tenets of Christianity so strong a force that world peace will become a permanent reality.

POSITIVE AID MUST BE GIVEN YOUTH

By J. R. CUNNINGHAM

President, Davidson College, Davidson, N. C.

The youth of our generation have been dealt a terrific blow of injustice by the war and all its concomitant effects. Elemental rights of childhood have been unintentionally and, perhaps, unconsciously denied them. If the young people of our day are to find compensations for these deprivations in the field of home, moral and spiritual training, it will require our doing something positive and extraordinary for them. The observance of National Youth Week, sponsored by the United Christian Youth Movement, is an effort in this direction. If intelligently and devotedly observed by local pastors and churches, it can furnish an excellent spiritual stimulus.

A Trip to Micronesia

By MR. HAROLD W. HACKETT

Ex-Lieutenant-Commander, U. S. Navy, and former Japanese Missionary, now Assistant Treasurer of American Board of Foreign Missions

I found the American Navy officials very much concerned in the welfare of the people and most appreciative of the work of the American Board to that part of the world. One of the high officers said that he had contributed to missions all his life, but had never been so happy about it as when he viewed at first hand, the work of the missionaries in those islands.

During the war period, the native people had been prohibited to hold religious meetings, but their faith had remained strong and one of the first questions which they asked of the Marines when they landed was, "Now can we worship again?"

Because many of the islands were in the combat area, there was much destruction of their cocoanut trees and other means of livelihood, nevertheless, although many of the people had lost all their possessions, the Harshall Island people gave me a gift of $50 to be sent to the starving people of Europe and the church at Majuro (Marshall Islands) took a collection as a Christmas gift of $70 to be sent to the Christian people in the Philippines.

Wherever I visited through the Marshall Islands and at Ponope, Truk, and in the Palau Islands, the islanders sent deputations to ask me to request the American people in the Congregational Churches to send missionaries to again guide them in their education. At Guam, I met Admiral Pownall, commanding officer for the area, who evidenced his great concern for the welfare of the island people and expressed his hope that missionaries could be sent to assist in the spiritual upbuilding of the people and in their education.

Among the principle points in the American Board program for the future of the work in the Islands, is the re-establishment of the training school at Kusaie (Caroline Islands), and in the school at Truk. In these schools, both the training for religious leaders and for vocational work that will benefit the economic life of the Islanders will be carried out. One of the great needs for the future work in the Islands is transportation and it is planned to again provide missionary sailing ships which will carry the great tradition of the "Morning Star" missionary ships of which there were five in all during the past fifty years largely provided by the Sunday school children of America.

STEWARDSHIP STUDY GROUPS.

The Valley of Virginia has made a good start this year in the program of Stewardship study. We were fortunate in being able to have with us our beloved Brother Warren H. Denison, the greatest stewardship teacher the writer has yet known, and who relates the matter of being a steward to the whole business of Christian living. Doctor Denison began his work in the Valley on January 13, with Rev. R. E. Newton's Group, going from there to be with Rev. G. H. Veazey and his people. His next place was in the field of Rev. S. E. Madren. After this institute, Brother Madren was with him for an institute with the Elkton group. Rev. R. D. Coulter reported a fine group meeting at the Timber Ridge Church, Friday evening, January 17.

January 19, we began a week's training for the Every Member Canvass in the Winchester Church. Study classes for men each evening, group meetings for the women in homes throughout the city during the week and writing letters by committees and the pastor was the order of the day. Doctor Denison gave a different message at each group meeting which added greatly to the interest of the campaign. These messages all were of a high order, presenting a challenge to his hearers and will doubtless richly bless the lives of those who heard them.

On Friday, January 24, Doctor Denison addressed the ministers of the Valley Conference in a two-session institute for pastors, in the Winchester Church. This fellowship was most helpful and gave inspiration to all in attendance.

Sunday morning, January 26, the sermon by Doctor Denison was a powerful appeal to all of us to render unto God the things belonging to Him, and unto men that service which make for peace, brotherhood, good will, and Christ-like living.

Immediately following the worship service the pastor invited the men who were to make the canvass to present themselves before the altar in the church to be commissioned for their work. A photographer was present and secured a picture of the group. The ladies of the church had prepared a splendid lunch and served the men who were to go for the canvass. Final details were given these workers by Doctor Denison and at 2:00 P. M. they left two by two for their work of securing pledges (for the church). During the next four hours these men secured pledges from the membership for $4,598.40, and

THE HARDCASTLES ARE WELCOMED.

It wasn't necessary for the members of the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News to have a formal reception to welcome us and make us know that they were glad to have us—they had already shown us in many informal ways and through many courtesies, as well as by their friendly spirit, that we were welcome. But in keeping with the spirit of the church, they "went the second mile" and on Friday evening, January 24, held a public reception in our honor and officially welcomed us into their fellowship. It was a formal affair in the sense that invitations were issued, that there was a "receiving line," and that many of the ladies wore their "party dresses." But it was characterized by a spirit of friendliness and good fellowship that took away formality, and that warmed the hearts of all those who were present.

The reception was held in the Fellowship Hall, lovely in itself under ordinary circumstances with its simplicity and dignity and beauty, but all the more lovely with its special decorations for the occasion. On a long table near the stage, there were placed appropriate and attractive decorations and accessories—lovely candlesticks, punch bowls, and an enormous three-layer cake that was good to look at, and later proved to be even better to eat. It was a work of art, like the tree in the Garden of Eden, "good for food, and pleasant to the eyes."

Those who attended were received and welcomed by the receiving line, composed of the Deacons and Deaconesses and Mrs. Hardecastle and me. A large number of members of the church and friends and specially invited guests attended the reception. Several ministers of the city also were present.

The program was simple, short and satisfying. Greetings and words of welcome were spoken by Mr. W. H. Baker on behalf of the Official Board, by Mr. Richard Moberg on behalf of the Board of Deacons, and by Rev. Leland N. Edmunds on behalf of the Peninsula Minister's Association. Miss Jeanne Hook, director of music, sang two solos, and a quartette, composed of Misses Agnes Gourley, Sarah Gardner, Mary Elizabeth Wright, and Mrs. Charles Heath, rendered a special number. Mrs. George Tyree was accompanist for these musical numbers. Then the writer responded for Mrs. Hardecastle and himself. After the cake was cut by Mrs. Hardecastle who was thoughtfully given that honor, punch, cake, nuts and mints were served by members of the Woman's Auxiliary and young women of the church. A period of informal fellowship brought the reception to a close. It was such an occasion as will warm the heart upon every remembrance of it.

H. S. HARDCATLE.

THE COUNCILS ARE WARMLY RECEIVED AT ROSEMONT.

The Rev. Herbert G. Council, Jr., the new pastor of the Rosemont Congregational Christian Church began his pastorate with us on January 19, which happened to be his birthday.

It seems quite significant that as he reached this milestone upon life's highway, he should begin his journey along a new path. We trust that this path will be a very pleasant one and that we shall reach many milestones together. We have already fallen in love with him and his fine family.

The members of the evening congregation were given a surprise treat. We were asked to go to the social hall at the close of the service. There we found a lovely birthday cake on an attractively decorated table. We sang "Happy Birthday" to Mr. Council and enjoyed a bit of informal fellowship as we ate cake and drank hot coffee.

On Wednesday, the 22nd, we had our church reception for the Councils. Mrs. D. D. Johnston was chairman of arrangements and she and her committee did a splendid job. The social hall was attractively decorated in a pink and green color scheme with a large arrangement of cut flowers on the table.

There were a large number of church members and a number of invited guests representing other churches and other organizations in the community.

One feature of the program was the singing of an original song composed by Mrs. A. E. Richardson, sung to the tune of "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder":

When Hardy had to leave us we were very,
very sad,
For we loved him and his dear wife, Mary, too,
But he knew the Lord had called him,
So he surely had to go.
He is always glad his Master's will to do.

CHORUS—

We will always heed his teaching,
We will always heed his teaching,
We will always heed his teaching,
For that's the right and Christian thing to do.

-2-

So we had to have a preacher, one to take our Hardy's place.
The Committee wrote and searched both high and low.
Till at last they thought of Council,
Whom we know is very good,
And they found him way up North in ice and snow.

CHORUS—

So they brought him to the Southland,
So they brought him to the Southland,
So they brought him to the Southland,
Where the gentle summer breezes often blow.

-3-

We are very glad to have him with his wife and children three.

We will love them and stand by them all the way.

For our Rosemont is a friendly church, it stands beside the road,

And its members really do know how to pray.

CHORUS—

We will stand behind our preacher,

We will stand behind our preacher,

We will stand behind our preacher,

—Mrs. A. E. Richardson.

Our male quartette, composed of Jack Hallowell, Jennings Richardson, Ed Drinkard, and Richard Scharff, sang for us.

Mr. A. P. Cofield, chairman of the Official Board, Mr. W. H. Farrow, Superintendent of the Sunday School, and Mr. H. L. Bondurant, treasurer of the church, gave short talks of welcome and pledged the support of the church and Sunday school to Mr. Council.

Mr. H. R. Morrison gave an interesting and helpful talk on "How to Get the Most Out of Your Church."

Mrs. B. N. Poplin, president of the Parent-Teacher Association, Mr. C. L. Richardson, president of the Portlock Civic League, and Mr. W. P. Nothnagle, scout master of the Boy Scout Troop, were introduced. Heads of other civic organizations who had been invited were unable to attend. The paper carriers for the Rosemont section, Ray Morrison and Ralph Gibson, were introduced.

The Rev. and Mrs. Guy Foster of the Raleigh Heights Baptist Church, were presented, and Mr. Foster brought a few words of greetings. The Rev. and Mrs. Leroy Davis of the Portlock Methodist Church, were introduced.

Rev. and Mrs. James G. Graham of the First Congregational Christian Church, Norfolk, were introduced and Mr. Graham spoke a few words.

We were happy to have Dr. and Mrs. Hardecastle with us. Dr. Hardecastle gave a short talk.

The Rev. O. D. Poythress of the South Norfolk Congregational Christian Church, was presented. He also gave a short talk.

Mr. Council gave a fine response to the speeches of welcome and expressed his pleasure and that of his family, in being "back home" in Tidewater Virginia.

Mr. Poythress then entertained us with vocal selections until refreshments were ready. There was an abundance of home-made cakes, ice cream, hot coffee, nuts and mints.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES DETERMINE TO RAISE PASTORS' SALARIES.

The Congregational Christian Churches in the United States through the Executive Committee have just approved a national minimum scale for pastors' salaries in the churches of the denomination of $2,000 for rural and $2,400 for urban pastors, plus house, car expense, official telephone and annuity pension dues. This is a sharp lift of pastoral remuneration. A careful study just completed reveals that of the total of 3,640 pastors, 488 receive an annual cash wage under $1,000; 555 receive from $1,000 to $1,500 per year; 820 receive from $1,500 to $2,000; 798 receive from $2,000 to $2,500; and 987 have annual salaries of $2,500 or more.

The recommendation of the Department of the Ministry, approved by the Executive Committee of the General Council, states that:

We believe rural churches expecting to call fully-prepared, fulltime ministers should offer salaries of not less than $2,000 plus parsonage and transportation expense for parish work, and a reasonable increase where there are children, and that city churches calling fully-prepared fulltime ministers should not pay less than $2,400 and parsonage and parish transportation expense, and a reasonable increase where there are children."

Mr. James H. Compton of Wichita, Kansas, chairman of the Committee on Ministers' Salaries for the denomination, says in support of this nation-wide movement that: "No minister can do effective work in his parish and shepherd his people when constantly worried about financial affairs and when the ministry is being called on by boards and agencies from all quarters to sponsor this or that drive for funds almost every month of the year. He can not but feel that some person or agency might put on a drive to relieve his economic plight as he is being asked to do for others.

"The churches are under great pressure from numerous agencies for increased benevolent giving, and rightly so because never in history has the need been so great. But is not the need at home a prior one that should be considered essential to the continued well-being and growth of the church? Put first things first. A house is no better than its foundation. A minister cannot effectively serve his flock when constantly harried by the specter of economic difficulties and a poor plant and equipment.

"In their ancient covenants of church membership, our fathers used to promise that, as to their minister, if by God's grace he would give himself to the shepherding and care of his people, they on their part would conscientiously look to his material necessities. This should still be the spirit in which a church calls its minister to serve. Where such relationship exists both minister and his people enjoy the felicity of complete understanding. It is sincerely hoped by this Committee that, where they have not already done so, our churches during the next few months will re-think their responsibility in this respect."

The Vermont Congregational Conference has conducted a state-wide survey of ministerial salaries and costs of living, which indicates that a disproportionate amount of income is used to maintain the necessary but expensive automobile. The average salary received in Vermont was $1,900; and the following expenses left very little for the savings bank:

The largest item was food—even in rural Vermont.

The second cost in size was that of maintaining an automobile. Most Vermont ministers spent about 20% of their total cash salary maintaining their automobiles—a few as much as 30%. The oldest car in active service is 17 years old and it traveled over 4,000 miles last year on the Lord's business!

The third item of expense was uniformly for fuel. When questioned as to the type of fuel burned, one man replied: "Hard coal, soft coal, reconditioned coke. I tried everything except a load of gravel!"

In general, regardless of the size of the minister's family, his house, or his parish, add together what he spent for food, for operating his car, and for fuel to heat his house, and more than one-half of his annual salary has gone. And in the lower income brackets these three items often consumed as much as two-thirds of a Vermont minister's income.

On the remaining items, varying amounts were expended. Health costs were generally low with little reserve in case of an emergency. One minister on low salary spent one-fourth of his income on one illness; another with a higher salary spent 60% caring for an ailing member of the family. Recreation and vacation expenses ranged from "nothing" upwards. As for books, newspapers and magazines, men with a salary under $1,500 a year spent less than $15 a year for such items.

The survey revealed that this item was the one most likely to increase in direct proportion to an increase in salary; that men in the higher income brackets are more certain to reflect their larger salaries by buying more books and magazines than in any other way.

Most of the ministers managed to save something out of even the smallest of salaries, which went into an annuity or life insurance.

The National Committee on Ministers' Salaries, in addition to Mr. Compton of Kansas, the chairman, are: Mr. Robert Cashman, Illinois; Rev. Allan Knight Chalmers, New York; Rev. William Ernest Collins, Minnesota; Mrs. Stanley Cummings, Vermont; Mrs. Margaret Ensminger, Alabama; Mr. Daxid H. Gill, California; Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, Iowa; Mr. Manfred Klein, Massachusetts; Mr. Richard Plock, Iowa; Rev. Edward A. Thompson, Michigan; Prof. Ralph L. Woodward, Connecticut.

Evangelism as Motivation for Christian Life and Service

By DR. HAROLD G. JONES, Worcester, Massachusetts
An Address Given at the Area Conference on Evangelism at the United Church in Raleigh, N. C.

It is indeed a happy privilege to share in this conference. I am reminded of a comment of Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon of Rochester who observed, while sitting before the fireplace with his family, that, as the fire tended to die down, the stirring of the logs together would bring back the glow and flame. So it is that when we gather together around a great theme and thus stir the logs together there comes a new glow and flame for all our lives. I have already felt that in these meetings.

I am glad also to be here to state some things, both to myself and to you which I feel, and the planners of this and similar conferences feel, are basic.

Indeed, as Mrs. Jones and I were talking this over in our home before I came, we both agreed that there has been in a sense a sort of return to some basic convictions about Evangelism and its necessity in our life, and in the life of society in these last days. We are not necessarily going back to everything which men said and did in the Victorian period, or even when we were growing up, but we are going back at least to an awareness that only through changed lives can there be a reinvigorated church and a redeemed and worthy society. At times it seems as though we have traveled a long way in these recent years to mute the note of evangelism. And some of its crass forms God knows needed not only to be muted but completely smothered. Yet, the basic principle of a completely committed life can be muted or smothered only at extreme peril to the Christian experience and to the life of the world.

One of my dear friends, Rev. Walter Tong of the American Board, was a prisoner of the Japanese in the Philippines during the war and was released with his wife and family from prison in Manila by the American troops. He returned to this country and recently has gone back to his shattered station at Davao. I was talking not long ago to his wife who is still with the children at the Walker Missionary Home in Auburndale, Mass. I asked her what he said in his letter and she replied, "Well, you know Walter is the sort of person who takes things as they come, and is rarely cast down or depressed. But his first letters from the Philippines were anything but optimistic. He wrote of going back to a city where many of the buildings were shattered, where the Moderator of the church and his family had been foully murdered during the retreat of the Japanese, where people came to him constantly to pour out their grief, their anguish and their frustrations, as they told of death and separation and tragedy in their lives." But then she went on to say, "But the more recent letters are far more encouraging and perhaps the one most filled with joy included a photograph of a large group of people who had confessed their faith and joined the church"—people to whom the evangel meant everything and who stood up to be counted.

Now, it is this motivation which is central to Christian life and service, the motivation of evangelism or of the changed and committed Christian life.

I should like to make my comments under three headings:

First, that evangelism and the changed life is a necessary dynamic for the Christian enterprise and the Kingdom of God.

I hardly need to say to you that there has been and there still is a great deal of foggy and hazy thinking about our Christian religion, and that there seems to be at times an assumption that nothing much has to happen to men as they come into the church and the Christian life. One is reminded of the orator who said to an entranced and overwhelmed congregation, "And these, ladies and gentlemen, are the sentiments on which I base my facts." He was no doubt accurate, but also rather devastating. This foggyiness often prevails in what seems to be intelligent quarters concerning both the individual and society. Some hope that without religion, without spiritual resources, life and society can be changed for the better. Recent days, however, have led us to realize afresh that this just doesn't happen. Lewis Mumford, for example, in his book, The Condition of Man, says that "only in one place can an immediate renewal begin, that is, within the person. . . . Today our best plans miscarry, because they are in the hands of people who have undergone no inner growth. God must work with us." To whom is he speaking? The world. Yes, but I am afraid also to the church.

Let's look at three of these needs which can be fulfilled only by the motivation of evangelism or the committed life. Take stewardship, for example. Some of us have long enough memories to recall the so-called Interchurch World Movement, by which a united Protestantism after the last war was going to raise huge sums for missions and church extension. One of the groups to whom they expected to turn for a goodly percentage of this fund was made up of those outside the church, the friendly citizens to whom this great movement would appeal. Well, of course, that side of the ledger didn't produce results. The interested citizens were really disinterested—and their motivation, by and large, did not require that they share this world's goods with the cause of the Kingdom. The truth of it is that giving is pretty largely confined to people who traditionally or actually have a Christian motivation and the more the motivation, the more freely they give. We know that in our churches. And, without a doubt, the reason why we do not in many instances have enough giving is not because of the income of our people, but far more the disposition and the attitude which they have. When a man is possessed by the living God, when he feels that he is a steward of God's means, when he gets fun out of his giving, and counts it his greatest privilege to share what he has, then his giving is significant, and incidentally, it is quite breath-taking to others. I have known such people in every church I have served, and I know you have. I knew such a woman in a church I served on the Dakota prairies. She was a widow and ran a small grocery store. But because she tithed, her gift was one of the largest in the church and compared favorably with those of people of much larger means. I could readily name other instances. The church, the cause of charity, the way of benevolence goes forward most of all on the shoulders of those who have the motivation of a changed and a new life.

Take Christian Life Service. Sometimes we feel a little superior to the slogan of the Student Volunteer movement back in the nineties, to "win the world to Christ in one generation." We say it was naive, and probably it was. But when we think of the spiritual discipline of the men and women who not only accepted that slogan but went around the world to seek to make it work, then

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Monday morning, February 3, Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson left for a short vacation in Florida. How happy we are in Eastern Virginia to see this faithful pastor and his wife get a good rest in the land of sunshine and flowers and fruits. They earn it. The modern rural church is quite a busy place with its schedule of meetings in the week-days as well as its full program on Sunday, and when you multiply that by three—because Dr. Johnson has three churches you can realize how busy he is. There are many homes to visit, sick to comfort, and a large number of funerals both of regular members and friends—especially when one has served the same field for nearly a half century.

I had the pleasure of riding with the Rev. Carroll H. Beale to Raleigh a few weeks ago, and I was delighted with the opportunity to learn firsthand how he liked his pastorate at Wakefield. Since I learned that he is pleased with his people in the three churches of that field I shall report the same, because I feel that he has some of the best people in Eastern Virginia in his churches. The parsonage at Wakefield has been made quite comfortable, and the people in his parish have seen to it that many favors and kindnesses from their own well-filled pantries are shown him and Mrs. Beale. There is the case in which a pastorate can make a good pastor because of the spirit of the pastor and the spirit of the people. God has richly blessed the good people of that pastorate and they will render thanks unto Him for all His blessings. One church wrote me the other day that they had made a substantial increase in their payments on the pastor's salary.

Good things are being said in these parts about the coming of the Councils to our Rosemont Church. A well trained young minister has been brought back to his native conference, and his lovely wife back almost to her home town, and the joy with which they are serving, and the gracious spirit of the congregation to which they have gone bids fair for growth and progress. The joy in service that comes to any good and true pastor more than repays for the exacting hours, the hard work, and the emotional strain of serving many people in many ways. Both pastor and people in every pastorate in our land should humbly thank God for the opportunity to serve in a time like this. Only by consecration to the Christ, and obedience to His holy will, may the forces of the church lead the way in our complex society as in these history-making days it should.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

DO YOU OWN A CHURCH?

You can rate a man's power in this world and with his fellowman by his church habits. With systematic study it might even be possible to gauge a man's mental breadth and depth by examining his attitude toward the church; whether he likes to attend church, where he attends, and how and why.

Is it possible to attend church without some stimulus to thought? I doubt it. The very act of preparation seems to stir the mind into action. The jolt of a casual notion to attend will at once loosen ideas, give them a chance to rub against one another and mingle and find new vistas of proportion and arrangement. Physiologists may say it is an idea emotionalized to an attitude; and an attitude practiced over a period of time becomes a trait. If this be true ideals cannot be taught directly, and the church fails to accomplish one of its purposes. I doubt the sufficiency of that statement.

Fellowship is a by-product of evangelism. And half the satisfaction of church attendance comes from the pure joy of fellowship. It may be only the same faces one sees throughout the week in a different scene and setting, or it may be new faces, visitors from a distant city, but it is fellowship, and it is stimulating. Even if you see the same faces Sunday after Sunday in the same church, there is change in these familiar faces you look upon. People are never twice the same. There is change, too, in these people we know—their clothes, their handclasps, their smiles; some have experienced joy since you last met, some deep sorrow has come to others.

Church people acquire a special ownership of pews and song books and windows and carpets in the church they attend. They feel they own parts of a dozen things of a particular class or kind, and they recall each distinct detail; a new friend they met becomes familiar with the sights and sounds of the organ and the smell of the flowers before the altar. And though you met these people and they welcomed you here, your ownership is in no way changed. You have made your own discoveries.

At church we have time for discovery and appraisal. We see things whole. We have an intimate look at all the world around us. We see individuals as well as crowds. When the mood is right—and church attendance provokes such a mood when we are most in need of it—we can see ourselves with particular clarity in our relationship to God and man. We get our feet on solid ground.

There is leisure in attending church, no matter under what conditions you go, that relieves the tension of toil and care, because it is your own decision. If you have decided the attend because there was nothing else to do, it's your own mind, you go minus an objective. The decision is yours, and so is the church for a little while.

Some prefer to attend church with their wives, husbands, children, even their company who have dropped in for a visit. Others prefer to attend alone, aloof with their thoughts. Perhaps those who go alone have had the experience of a companion who did not understand economy of words, and kept up a continuous rattle of conversation. Such a person is afraid to let the immensity of the church shrink him to his proper size.

Attending church gives us that sense of proportion we need in this life. At our work or at a social club we lose our sense of time and distance. But at church we learn how short the path we tread and how important we are in God's eternity of purpose. And when we have attended church through all seasons, we know how certain is change and how gradual.

You can know all things through the church, if your eyes are open and your mind is willing to reach. But first, you must attend! Breadth of knowledge calls for depth of understanding. He knows most about the church who knows best that church which is within reach of his presence. Not all churches are alike, but unless a man knows his own church he is not likely to understand those miles away. He does not even understand himself.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

HOUSING FOR VETERANS.

Practically every day the newspapers carry stories about the scarcity of housing for discharged veterans. Many of these veterans want to enter college. They were either in college or ready for college when they entered the service. Naturally they want to complete their education. Our Government wants them to complete their education and is offering generously to assist them not only with financial help but in providing living quarters as well.

The rooming capacity of practically every college is taxed to the limit. Many of our veterans are married. The average college does not have apartments for families. The Government has stepped in to help provide such accommodations. At Elon College the Government allotted and moved to our campus sixty-six housing units for married veterans and their families. These units consist of kitchen, living room and dining room combined, one, two or three bedrooms and bath. These apartments are completely furnished with the exception of pots, pans, and dishes.

In early fall construction of these housing units at Elon College seemed to slow down. About the middle of January all work on the apartments was discontinued. Funds for this purpose were exhausted. Thirty-six units of the project on our campus were completed and occupied. The remaining thirty units were near completion but not ready for occupancy. After much correspondence, much telephoning and telegraphing, and finally a visit to headquarters in Atlanta, Ga., all difficulties have been ironed out and construction is to begin Monday, February 3. The Government expects to complete this project within three or four weeks, certainly by the beginning of our spring quarter, March 10.

The officials of the Government have certainly been most cooperative and helpful in making these conveniences available for our veterans. Elon College wishes to express publicly its appreciation and gratitude.

In addition to these allotments, Elon College has been allotted a building to be used as a cafeteria until we can build a permanent dining room. It has also been allotted a recreational building for intramural sports and physical education classes until we can build our new gymnasium. Our Aviation Department is expanding so rapidly that we do not have room for the very fine equipment secured from the Government for instructional purposes. Accordingly, the Government has awarded the College a building suitable for airplane hangars, laboratory and classroom work. These buildings are to be placed on our campus and erected without cost to the college other than providing the site on which to build, preparing the same, and seeing that the necessary pipes and service lines are extended to all building sites. Most of the furnishings for these buildings will be secured from the Government at a ninety-five percent discount of appraised value.

I am sure that Elon College's total constituency will be most appreciative of our Government's assistance in these important undertakings.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

More than a half century ago the then existing churches in our section united in founding and building Elon College. The church has counted it a privilege to support her college through the years. Under the leadership and cooperative efforts of our church in the South, Elon College has grown to its present strength and is in a position today to render its very finest service to the total constituency of our denomination. With increased services expenses also multiplied. The college is encouraged today to feel that there are nearly 200 churches to which it may look for continued assistance as it faces its new day with added obligations. A contribution to your college means a contribution to a trained and more efficient leadership for our church. A contribution to the college is an investment that will bear dividends in Christian character as our young people go from the college out into life for service.

Our offerings are much better this week and we greatly appreciate the same.

MRS. V. C. PRITCHETT.

The following statement appeared in the Maplewood, N. J., News, on Thursday, January 23, 1947:

"Mrs. Beatrice Page Pritchett, wife of V. Clayton Pritchett of 12 Highland Avenue, died Saturday after a month's illness. Funeral services were conducted Tuesday by the Rev. Dr. Arthur Nelson Butz, pastor of Prospect Presbyterian Church, in the Colonial Home, East Orange. Burial was in Restland Memorial Park, Newark.

"Prominent in social, religious and college club circles here, Mrs. Pritchett was a charter member of the Wellesley Club of New Jersey, Maplewood Women's College Club, the Ladies' Aid Society of Prospect Church, and a former member of the Maplewood Woman's Club. She also held various offices in the Parent-Teachers groups at Clinton School, South Orange Junior High School.

"Born in Rochester, N. H., 50 years ago, the daughter of the late Victor E. and Frances Garrish Page, Mrs. Pritchett was graduated with honors from the high school there and from Wellesley College where she was a member of the Zeta Alpha sorority. After graduation she taught school in Washington, Mass., Butler and Ridgefield Park.

"Besides her husband, Mrs. Pritchett leaves a daughter, Miss Dorothy Fae Pritchett, a senior at Wellesley, and two sons, Clayton Page and Robert Victor, at home."

Virgil Pritchett is an alumnus of Elon College of the class of 1907 and has always been interested in, and loyal to, the college. Many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, if they did not know Mrs. Pritchett, will remember Virgil Pritchett because of his relation to the church and to the college. After graduation Virgil taught in Elon College and later entered the University of North Carolina. His many friends will sympathize with him in this great sorrow.

THE PROTESTANT DOCTRINE OF JUSTICE.*

By REV. FRANCIS W. McPEEK, Newly Elected Secretary of Industrial Relations.

Protestantism is very much a spent social force today because for the past three generations it has watered down its primary social doctrine—that of justice. The most realistic, and therefore the most hopeful faith of mankind, it has given up one of the most important viewpoints that made it so.

In our denomination the Council for Social Action seeks to restore the concept of justice to our faith. The Christianity which cannot answer in terms of its principles the terrible questions about right and wrong which men everywhere are making, cannot long survive in the struggle with ideologies which do. More importantly yet, the Christianity which will not act with all the power at its disposal against social wrongs must soon fail.

The Council for Social Action is nothing in itself. If its efforts are reduced to those which can be made only by its elected members and staff, then it is of little significance. But if it can help the hundreds of thousands of men and women and children who form the denomination to believe again that in human affairs God requires justice, and to act that His will may be done, then it may have real power.

The fact is that our whole church is judged not upon the basis of what a few preachers say. It is judged upon the basis of what church members are doing in their shops, their school rooms, their farms, their offices, and their businesses. The brilliant Calvin knew this was the only fair standard of appraisal, and even the most ignorant of men today know it.

On Sunday, last, the Laymen's Fellowship adopted their statement of principles. Among them is this one: "To encourage widespread practice of Christian principles in all daily relationships." The whole denomination is glad to see such a movement inaugurated, for it realizes what the total effect of such an effort can be in our church and social life.

But I, for one, know that there cannot be true fellowship unless there is justice. Can the employer and worker sit down together in Christian fellowship if left behind them in the plant are situations bearing the marks of suspicion, of unfairness, of abuse of union or economic power? Can the worker of the city and the farmer meet in simple friendliness so long as one must subsidize the other through unjust prices and wages? Can the Negro laymen meet easily with the white laymen so long as the principles of justice are violated by white real estate men, educators, employers, judges, and others? The single response to all these questions is a flat no. Nor can justice be done to every man, owner or worker, until it is understood what it is.

Therefore I think that one of the fine contributions of the Laymen's Fellowship may be to help develop again the Protestant doctrine of justice. It is not a task for a church historian, a theologian, and ecclesiastical lawyer alone. But in the spirit of Congregationalism, it is a common work, calling for the best thought of those in every vocation or condition of life. I believe that half of the answer to any question is a correct statement of the question itself, and I believe that the answer to questions about the relationships, the rights, and the obligations of men rests largely in their correct formulation.

The public is daily disturbed by angry cries about "rights" by both labor and owners. It is a tragedy that so many of us still believe that the fundamental human issues can be solved by laws. In Washington so much of the drafted legislation now making news, if enacted, would very easily throw us into industrial warfare. The fault of most of it is not only that it fails to take into account economic realities, or even again that it is partisan or class legislation, but its worst fault is that it is unrealistic. It takes into consideration neither the nature of man, nor his rights as defined in Divine law. For these reasons, such legislation must always fail to be effective.

I do not wish to discuss at this time specific pieces of proposed labor legislation. My opinions are not well informed, and the Council for Social Action is permitting me to spend the first few months of service with them in study. But I know enough from Washington and other experience to say this: The only law which works is one which is accepted by the majority of the people as right. And I know also, from my religion, that what is right is what is right in God's sight, not in the opinion of political or economic partisans.

To you who are members and friends of the church I should like to add this word. In the years to come the Industrial Relations Committee of the Council for Social Action will have a good deal to say about the affairs of labor and management. That is because it will be our responsibility to do so. Whether you agree with us on specific issues may not be too important. What is important is that all of us must keep steadily in mind the words of the New Testament: "For the time is come that judgment our superiority disappears. Have you read Sherwood Eddy's great volume on the missionary leaders he has known, and, indeed, with whom he has pioneered? Read, then, the description of how he and his roommate, Dr. Luce, father of Henry Luce of Time and Life and noted Christian educator in China, while they were students, rose early in the morning and spent a solid hour in prayer before they cracked a book of studies, and, from the life of Eddy himself, see that selfless passion for Christ and his way at work.

EVANGELISM AS MOTIVATION FOR CHRISTIAN LIFE AND SERVICE.

Today in our Congregational Christian Churches, we are only producing about fifty per cent of the ministers we need, and, so far as I know, the Mission cause is not being besieged by eager people in vast numbers. How can we expect to man our churches with the finest youth of our day, and, incidentally, we have them, unless they get in modern terms a sense of complete committal to Jesus Christ and his way of life, a committal which will lead them to say, "What would you have me to do, Lord?" You see, an ongoing, a radiant church, a great army with banners at home and abroad can come only through the motivation of an adequate evangelism.

Take the whole of the Kingdom of God and bringing it to pass in our own day. One of the finest men I know objected in my presence to the work of the Federal Council of Churches because one of the committees had issued a statement on economic principles in the light of the teachings of Jesus. I haven't read the statement to which he refers. It might have been wrong. But what this man seemed to fail to understand was that the church is concerned with economics, and that by all its traditions had a right to make a comment based on just as accurate as possible an interpretation of Jesus' teachings.

As all of you know, the great Confessional Pastor, Martin Niemöller, is now in this country. The story of his eight years in a concentration camp is one of the immortal sagas of Christendom, and his retort to Adolph Hitler, "You are not my leader, God is my leader," will abide in the treasury of great Christian sayings. Well, shortly after he had landed in America, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt criticized his coming and said that because he opposed the Nazis only on religious grounds, the American people should not be asked to hear him. Now, I have the greatest respect for Mrs. Roosevelt. She is a woman of great Christian character and in her own right stands out as one of the truly significant persons of our age. But Mrs. Roosevelt apparently did not realize that when Martin Niemöller said he opposed Hitler on religious grounds, that he meant by religious all the implications of our Christian faith. In fact, the interview which he had in Naples shortly after the American troops had rescued him from the Nazis was, as is often the case, inadequately reported. For example, "Nazi socialism encouraged socialization of marriage, wherein a Nazi was encouraged to have children not only by his wife but by other women as well, in order to build up the manpower of Germany. This violated the commandment, 'Thou shalt not commit adultery'." Then he went on to illustrate the treatment of the Jews, and other things by the same interpretation. In a word, this great Christian opposed Hitler because of great Christian teachings. But my point is that the very use of the word "religious" should have reminded Mrs. Roosevelt that this man stood in a great tradition which would make him a welcome speaker at any time.

Actually Christians, when they have been Christian, have always had a vital concern for the world in which they live. The motivation back of so many of the reforms which the world has realized is a Christian motivation. It was T. R. Glover who said of the early Christians, "They were perfectly fearless, absurdly happy and always getting into trouble." Why? Certainly not as a result of a purely inner mysticism. Rather, it was because they put into practice the spirit of Christ, and other people didn't like it.

We Congregational Christians are always interested in the Puritans. Well, we can't read or think about them without being aware that they were men and women who, like the early Christians, sought to change the world. Have you read Ralph Barton Perry's great volume, Puritanism and Democracy? In it we have a picture of their influence and of the fact that they were moral athletes, disciplining themselves that they might build on these American shore a Republic of God. I lived many years in New Haven and was always fascinated by the colony's early history. The purpose, as defined by the founders, was to "establish a plantation whose design is religion." The people who governed in the early days were carefully chosen from the church members (they were called Six Pillars) and it was their responsibility to create a truly Christian state. Whatever their failures, the fact remains that the Puritans stood for great Christian principles and that through them the cause of righteousness and justice was greatly advanced in our world. In the words of Perry, "The Puritans imprinted on English and American institutions a quality of manly courage, self-reliance and sobriety. We are still drawing upon the reserves of spiritual vigor which they accumulated."

Now as we look over the world today, the same seems to be the case. Our Russian friends have sought to achieve great social ends without religion, and, indeed, many times by the persecution of existing religion. But the end product is sadly lacking in a quality which we recognize as moral and spiritual. A great Russian has described these efforts as a "monstrous collectivism that has no face." Perhaps the best illustration of this capacity of Christians not only to change society but to hold firm in a time when total darkness descends upon a society can be found in the famous comment of Albert Einstein on his increasing respect for the church. Einstein, you remember, thought that in the hour of crisis the universities and the labor unions would be forces which would hold out against the vicious implications of National Socialism. But when the time came, these moral forces, these forces of humanism failed and it was the Church which alone stood firm. Dorothy Thompson tells of an interview with a man who had gone through the collective hell of Dachau. He told her of how men in order to postpone their own death or to get more food or to have other favors agreed to operate on their fellow prisoners, to carry on terrible experiments, and to run the crematories. Then said Miss Thompson, "What group was it that stood firm for high ideals, for conscience in that time?" And he said, "The priests." That is, the men who had the motivation of evangelism, who had come to know God and Jesus Christ whom he sent, and who committed themselves to him, knowing that he would keep and undergird them against that day.

I can't see but that this is true in our world generally today. We have here in America a vast problem of the races, a problem which must be solved and which is not limited to any one area in America. How, except by the grace of Christ, by the brotherhood which is inherent, by the Christian conscience which is a sensi-

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

Sunday is the day in our church calendar which is known as Race Relations Sunday. This year our theme is: "Why Not Cry Brotherhood?"

In the note on preparation for worship sent out by our Federal Council of Churches it is suggested that children be given an opportunity to meet and appreciate children and persons of other races. This experience would help their worship service to become real for them.

You and I are surrounded by Negro neighbors here in the South. Yet it is hard for us to meet them and come to know them, isn't it? You can make ways if you try hard enough. The other day an adorable little Negro boy got on the bus. Our son watched him as he went to the back of the bus. "Mother, why does he have to sit back there?" "It's because of a stupid law that we have here in North Carolina, Son. But if you want to talk with him we can go back and sit by him!" We went back and sat by him. His mother said that we might talk with him. Santa brought him a red wagon for Christmas just like our boy's. His name was Tom and he had a little brother at home who was just learning to walk.

You may visit the Negro Library, if there is one in your town. Look at the books that they read; their pictures. It may be that you can meet Negro boys and girls there who are in school as you are.

You may visit children in the Negro Hospital or Negro Ward who may have visitors and make Negro friends in this way. If there is a Negro woman who helps your mother cook or clean, perhaps she has children, little brothers or sisters whom she would bring to play with you some Saturday.

INTRODUCTION TO SERVICE.

(To be read or recited in unison or by one of the children.)

"I stand before the maps of the world; before the rain map and the map of winds, and I know where rain is falling and where wind is blowing; before a road map of the world, and I see the roads of all lands and people traveling on them; before a train map, and watch the trains going up and down the earth with pilgrims, guided, all, by a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night; before a map of the lights of the world, and the fires; before a map of the homes of the world, and of the uncharted regions of the human hearts, which in all lands are fashioned alike. What possessions we have in common! Rain and wind and roads and trains and lights and fires and trees and birds and homes and hearts."—Girl's Everyday Book.

IS YOUR CHILD CONSIDERATE?

By ALICE BREHM WILLIAMSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Recently I read an interesting article about Emily Post, and in it she was quoted as stating, in effect, that good manners consist of a thoughtful consideration for the welfare of others and that such consideration becomes natural only as children form the habit at an early age.

It is said that during his first six years a child learns more than he does in all the rest of his life put together. This, surely, is no exaggeration, for during those first years he learns to control all the basic functions and to fit himself into a society in which some things are right and some are wrong. It is in this latter phase of experience that parents and teachers often fail to give the proper guidance.

Susan is five; she is always welcome in any home. At an early age she was taught to have respect for the feelings and property of others. She was told that to share her toys was being a "good sport," but that if some other child did not wish her to touch his toys, his wishes should be respected, and it was "hands off" for her. She was given positive directions, not negative, for her mother knew that "don't" can be a tiresome word and many unfavorable suggestions are contributed by "don't" instructions. "Please" and "thank you"—simple but impressive words—very early found a place in her vocabulary. Of course, she had to be reminded often, but after five years they now come naturally.

Susan has been taught the golden rule of doing unto others as she would have others do unto her. Yet she is not a timid or thwarted child; she knows how to take care of herself. On her first day at a new nursery school, she met with some opposition on the part of a four-year-

ELON COLLEGE COMMUNITY CHURCH.

We have just closed our Spiritual Emphasis Week at the Community Church. It was a season of enriching fellowship. The Reverend Alfred W. Hurst, D.D., of our Cleveland Park Church, Washington, D. C., and a former pastor of this church, was with us as guest minister.

Services were held at nine o'clock each morning and at seven o'clock each evening. The large student body now on the campus filled the Whitley Chapel each morning and heard messages well adapted to their spiritual needs. At this early hour it was not possible for many of the people of the community people to be present, but the students and faculty profited greatly. In the evening services there was a fine mingling of the total constituency of the community in a spiritual searching of our hearts.

It is heartening to those of us who are responsible for the spiritual life of the entire community to see the response the people of the community are making to the full-time ministry of the pastor and the very effective service of Miss Lula Browne, our Director of Religious Education. It has taken time to get adjusted to the new field and that period of adjustment is still before us. We are beginning, however, to move into organizing the work of the campus and community for the larger opportunity which is ours.

The community has accepted the challenge of the larger program in a most encouraging way. The presence in the weekly services of so many people of the community around the campus, and the coming into the fellowship of so many gives to us an inspiration to all who are interested in the work of the church in this strategic situation. The spirit of co-operation both on and off the campus bids fair to the development of one of our stronger churches at the center of training for Christian leadership—at home and broad.

We have a large class of young men studying for the ministry and a number of young ladies studying for full-time Christian service. Some of these will go to the mission fields, while others will give themselves to work in local churches as Directors of Religious Education and teachers of the Bible in public schools.

When the veterans of World War II began to return and enter colleges, it was feared that new and great problems would be thrust upon our institutions of higher learning. I am happy to report that no such problems are present in the student body at Elon College. We have approximately four hundred veterans in school, and they are adjusting themselves admirably to the life of the campus and community. Honestly, I hardly see how they have come out of the experiences they faced in the war, into the quiet of campus life and the "being still" which accompanies their work and study here. Very few have failed to make the adjustment and to pass their work with creditable grades.

Many organizations are yet to be formed before the total needs are met, but we are moving in that direction. We covet your prayers, and if parents who have children at Elon, and pastors whose young people are here for training, will write us, giving helpful information concerning these fine young people, it will make it possible for us to serve them much better by knowing their background and their interests in life. Won't you write us now?

JESSE H. DOLLAR.

MINISTERIAL FELLOWSHIP.

A few days ago I received a letter from a brother minister, which interested me not a little. It was a personal letter. The first line contains a statement like this: "Just a little surprise note to tell you that I have formed the custom of praying for all my fellow ministers daily. . . . Today I have chosen you." When I had read that far I folded the letter and went to my desk. While reading and, in prayerful meditation, I felt that I had enjoyed a closer fellowship with Dr. John G. Truitt than I would otherwise have enjoyed.

This letter caused me to feel, again, the importance of a closer fellowship of those whose business it is to carry the message of Salvation. A teacher, one chosen of God. I fear the interest of the church suffers because of a lack of a willingness to share the opening of others. Too often we rather turn away and widen the chasm.

In this letter, to which I refer, there are three important words: Custom, Daily, Chosen. They are especially important when they refer to me, as the object. I am not questioning whether the ministry prays. The thought I have in mind, are we interested in the work of our fellow ministers? I think that would be a step in the direction of a revival. It is the desire of our Lord and Master that we love one another, that we pray for each other and that we share each other's burdens. Love and cooperation is the fulfilling of the law of Christ. E. M. CARTER.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

old boy. Finally, he hit Susan. She went to the teacher and said, "Miss Keene, Jackie hit me. I know its wrong to hit, but sometimes people have to be shown how it feels. May I hit him—not hard—but just to show him?" Miss Keene said, "Yes."

I think respect for older persons is an attractive and rare characteristic in this day in which freedom in work and play is emphasized in our educational set-up. This idea of freedom is misunderstood by many parents. The should know and teach their children that freedom, liberty, gives to each of us a chance to express his thoughts, to make choices, and to carry out his own plans, but that these privileges must be shared equally, or they will disappear.

Juvenile delinquency develops only when children have not been properly taught. It is due to the fact that parents and others have neglected to fulfill their obligations to the children, to the communities, and to themselves. The penitentiaries and asylums are full of people who easily might have been assets instead of liabilities to society. These people, who could have been helped to find pleasure in taking the right paths at the beginning of their lives, chose the wrong ones, made serious mistakes, and were punished; or, meeting opposition for which they were unprepared, slipped into lives of unreality.

A child is happiest when he learns to fit himself acceptably into a society. The Bible (Revised Version) says, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and even when he is old, he will not depart from it."

We can do anything we want to do if we stick to it long enough.

—Helen Keller.

JESUS AT THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

LESSON VII—FEBRUARY 16, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.—John 8:12.

SCRIPTURE LESSON: John 7:9.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I John 2:7-11.

The Light of Life.

Some of us know something about what it means to live in a world of darkness because of our experience during blackouts. The writer of these Notes was an Air Raid Warden, and on several occasions he had to patrol the streets when it was "pitch dark" when there was no light to be seen anywhere. It was bad enough even though he knew the lay-out of things in his neighborhood. But what would he have done if he had been in strange places! Again he has had the privilege of cruising around Chesapeake Bay on dark nights. How grateful he and his companions were for the lighthouses and the range lights, to say nothing of the stars and on occasion the moon. How much it means to folks going places in the dark and in strange settings to have light. Christ is the light of the world. He illumines our pathway. He gives guidance. He marks the course. He himself said that if one followed Him He would not walk in darkness.

But more—he would have the light of life. In Christ is life and that life was the light of men. Ultimately there is no life without light. Christ is the life of men even as He is the light of men. He gives light and He gives life. Apart from Him there is no true life, only mere existence.

True Freedom.

"Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Error binds men, enslaves men. Truth sets men free, gives them liberty. As the scientist discovers truth it sets him free to do things and to make new discoveries. For a long time men thought that the earth was flat and square and they were afraid that if they sailed too far they would fall off into space. When they discovered the truth that the earth was round, it set them free. It is thus in every realm. It is thus with the spirit of man. Christ gives true freedom. He is the Truth and He sets men free. Luther found new freedom when He found new truth. He that doeth the truth cometh to the light, said Jesus.

Tragic Slavery.

"Every one that committeth sin is the bondservant of sin." Jesus Himself is the authority for that statement. Men may live in a free country, and boast of their liberty—they may say that they are "free, white, and twenty-one," but they may be most abject slaves. Sin has binding power. One translation of the Psalms reads as follows: "My sins are mightier than I." Many a man, if he were honest would admit that he is not free, but rather that he is a slave, a bond slave. And the slavery to sin is burdensome and blighting.

Curiosity and Not Compassion.

"His disciples asked Him saying, Rabbi, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he should be born blind?" "They were more concerned about the philosophy or the theology of the cause of the trouble than with compassion for the man with the trouble. Alas! how often our speculations stand in the way of our ministrations. There are many folks who excuse themselves, or try to excuse themselves from doing anything to help folks in trouble by glibly theorizing about the origin of the trouble. All too many times people take the attitude that folks are getting just what they deserve when they are afflicted or in trouble. But they do not get what they deserve unless they also receive sympathy and help in their trouble.

A Venture of Faith.

"Go wash in the pool of Siloam." It was a venture of faith. To be sure the Master had put some clay on the man's eyes, but there is no medicinal power in clay. It was a venture of faith. He simply obeyed Jesus, he did what Jesus told him to do. Religion uses religion but it goes beyond religion, it moves beyond into the realm of faith.

Obedience Brings the Blessing.

"He went away therefore and washed and came seeing." When he obeyed he got the blessing. According to his faith, so it was unto him. He might have argued and theorized, and temporized and he would have still been blind. But when he did what Jesus told him to, he got the blessing. It is now thus and ever shall be. There are too many people theorizing and temporizing. All too many folks are waiting to confess Christ and to accept him because there is something they do not understand, because they are waiting for light that will never come until they obey. As a great preacher once said in a great sermon, "Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge."

If This Man Were Not From God.

The blind man who had been healed did not know much about theology. But he did have some common sense. He had had an experience even if he did not have an explanation. He quite sensibly reasoned that unless there had been some divine sanction on Jesus, He never could have done the thing He had done. It is pretty good reasoning. How account for what Jesus did—and the record is trustworthy—how account for his constant and continuing influence in the world, if He was not the Son of the Living God. One gets the cart before the horse when he reasons from the lesser miracle to the greater miracle. Accept Jesus as the world's Number One Miracle and it is not difficult to accept the miracles which the Son of God did. But if one wants to start the other way let him look at what Jesus did and then see if there is any other explanation for them apart from the fact that He came from God.

An Unanswerable Argument.

"Whether he be sinner or no, I know not; but one thing I know, that whereas, I was blind, now I see." As has so often been written in these Notes, one can experience what he cannot explain. An experience of God in Christ is such a helpful interpreter in life. There are some things we have to accept by faith, believing where we cannot see. But there are some things that we believe because we know. The New Testament deals in declarative sentences and not in question marks. Let a man through faith and obedience come to know Christ and he will be fortified against so many of the uncertainties and the unknowables of life.

THE PROTESTANT DOCTRINE OF JUSTICE.

must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" (Peter 4:17.)

May all of us so live and work in the spirit of His justice that we shall not be blameable in thought and word, nor hesitant to act.

EVANGELISM AS MOTIVATION FOR CHRISTIAN LIFE AND SERVICE.

tive one? And what about the future peace of the world? Can we expect the problem of the atomic bomb to be solved merely by statesmen, and the politically minded? The editor of the Saturday Review of Literature has reminded us that modern man is obsolete—and he is. Only the Moral Man, the Spiritual Man, the Man motivated in a world like this by Christian principles can live in a world of atomic energy without being destroyed. The scientists admit this; the statesmen admit it. The only hope lies in men too Christ-like to use such a weapon, men who are ready to forge strong and virile ties of a new brotherhood, a comradeship of mankind.

Do you recall that scene in one of Joseph Conrad's volumes, where Jim is signing on to the Narcissus and after he has agreed to ship on her asks an old salt what kind of a ship she is. "Fair, eh?" he says to prod the old salt a bit. The salt pauses and then replies, "Ships is all right. It is the men in them." Yes, our world is all right, but it is the men in it which makes the difference, and a Christian man can do much to make the world right. Evangelism then is the necessary motivation for Christian life and service.

But if this be true, I feel it is imperative to have an adequate message and view for all Evangelistic Effort. In a word, if we are to win people to the Christian life and to membership within the church, let us see to it that we win them to the fullest expression of that life. Let us never be content, for example, to give them a substitute, or to seem to suggest that they do not need to follow Christ, or to live up to their highest. One of the tragic things which is so characteristic of much of modern Christianity is that people seem to think that joining the church is about the same as joining a country club. A pastor of one of our Swedish Congregational churches was discussing with a group of other Congregational ministers not long ago this business of joining the church. He said, "We are more particular about having people join the church. We insist on high standards, and if people do not seem to be ready, we have them wait." Someone asked, "How many members do you have?" He replied, "Four hundred." "What is your average attendance?" "Four hundred." In other words, he had almost a hundred per cent of his people present at each service.

Some of this sharpened and more incisive meaning can come through our preaching. Now, I wouldn't presume to tell you what to preach. But I know what I can ask myself, and, incidentally, how far short of fulfilling it I fail. Am I being careful to preach at my best? Am I sure I am stressing the message of the Gospel? Do people hear the Word from me, so far as I can make it so? Do I see that they hear the great passages of scriptures? Are my prayers real and vital and searching? Am I spending enough time in study, in prayer, in Christian living to preach the Gospel? Well, you can fill in the lines, but I do want to stress that it is here we want to begin.

I think the same thing is true of our personal conferences with people, and our pastor's class. All of us, I imagine, do both of these things. I seek personally to interview a good many people each year about confessing their faith and joining the church, and, if I am honest with you, as I want to be, I'll have to admit that I have to watch out that I don't make it too easy to join. And so it is with the pastor's class. The boys and girls come. They expect to, and their parents expect them to, and unless we look out, they get some fair instruction, have a nice experience and finally join the church. But in the experience they ought to lay hold of a new principle of life. It is up to us to see that so far as we can they do just that.

And, of course, it applies to this whole business of visitation evangelism. You remember the letter in the Christian Century which asked, "It is visitation, but is it evangelism?" That's the question. We have been following this method now for three years in our present parish. About thirty-five men have gone out and talked with other men and their families about coming into the church and taking a more vital part in its life. It has been a grand experience. The men have wanted to do it again. But very little evangelism has occurred. This year I am frankly going to have as many people participate, and I am going to choose much more carefully the ones who do. Then I am going to spread it over the month of February instead of one week. We are then going to spend a whole evening instead of a few minutes discussing how you go about it. And we are going to give them only names of people who are prospects for church membership. In a word, we plan so far as we can to make this an evangelistic effort. Let us then, in the second place, see to it that there is an adequate message and view in all our evangelistic effort.

Finally, in the third place, we ought to assimilate new members on the same high basis. I hardly need to say to any pastor here that we lose a great many people from the Kingdom of God because of what doesn't happen or what does after they join the church. By what doesn't happen I mean the tendency to let them shift for themselves once they receive the right hand of fellowship. Clearly we must see to it that they are brought along in the Christian way, and helped to grow into a richer and fuller spiritual life. But it is also what we do at times that shuts the door on real Christian living. That is, what are the tasks and the responsibilities we give new members? Many of them, frankly, are "made" tasks, not unlike the made tasks of the WPA. They just don't have much meaning, or they may even contradict the plain teaching of the Gospel. I think of all the inane groups which waste precious energy and dissipate what was intended to be used for the Kingdom of God.

No wonder after a while some people sit back or just go through the motions. Do you remember the old story of a painting of Queen Victoria, viewed by two little girls. The Queen is portrayed in all her glory. She had on her regal robes; she had a crown on her head, and an orb and scepter in her hands. One little girl said to the other, "What is she doing?" The other replied, "Nothing. She is just reigning." Well, Christians do not sit around reigning if they are true to their Lord. They have their coats off and they are hard at work.

With what great Christian tasks do we challenge our people. When we have suppers, are they for fellowship or just for the church debt? Do we have people thinking about great issues in the light of Christian teachings? I had such a group in my last parish. Eighteen of them met once a month. What about the things outside the church? Years ago my parish published a list of what the members were doing in and out of church. We never tried it again, but it suggested a spirit. I believe in an active church, a real program, but I say to you and to myself, let's make it significant so that the Christian grows in spirit, in service, in vision and in effectiveness.

Goodwill is the one and only asset that competition cannot undersell nor destroy.—Marshall Field.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear friends:

I sometimes think an orphanage is just about like a home. There is always something needed. The orphanage is about out of sheets. We have tried time and again to buy sheets but have not been able to get them. If we had a visitor and he would see a torn sheet on a bed, he might think we ought to do better. We would do better if it were possible. The curtains are worn and curtain material has been hard to get, too.

Table clothes—one of the matrons has been begging with tears in her eyes for table-cloth material. So far, I have not been able to get it. It may be in the near future we will be able to supply her needs when these kind of goods get back on the store counters again. Bed spreads, which are now worn, should have been replaced a year ago. We did finally find a few in South Carolina a few days ago and bought them. Many needs in the buildings ought to be supplied, and would be if things could be bought.

We have been very much in need for some inlaid linoleum on one of the kitchen floors. I have had an order in at three different stores for nine months and haven't got it yet. That is the same way with many of our needs. Our country has been at war and we have had to sacrifice some of our needs and just wait. Some of our buildings look very much in need of repair. The screen wire has rotted during the past four years and needs new wire. Visitors may think we are not on our job and have been careless. But do you know that it has been four years since you could buy a roll of screen wire? A large hardware store in Burlington has promised to get us some the first opportunity he has to buy any.

The steps on the back of one of our buildings are badly in need of repair. Six months ago a good friend agreed to donate and re-build them out of steel, and has finally got them made. They are now on the ground ready to be set up. Why has it taken so long? He could not get the steel which has been hard to find.

The two back porches at the old building are badly in need of repair, but it has been impossible to get finished lumber from the mill to do the required repair work. It is useless to begin to tear down what we have until we can get lumber to do the work and replace something better. We hope that these supplies will soon be on the market again.

Then to get someone to do the work is almost out of the question. Last July we gave a contractor a contract to put a concrete floor in our cow shed. The work was to be completed by September. It was the last of December before we got the work done. And thus it goes. Remember our country has been at war!

BELOVED MINISTER DIES AT LANGDALE, ALABAMA.

The Rev. H. M. Gray one of the best loved characters in this section of Alabama and Georgia, died Tuesday, December 17, at his home in Langdale, following a long illness. He was seventy years old.

One of the most widely-known ministers here, he had served as pastor of the Congregational Christian Churches of Lanett, Langdale and Huguley. Coming to the Alabama Valley twenty-six years ago, he soon became a recognized leader in religious and civic affairs of the community.

Surviving him are his wife; three daughters, Mrs. Posey Sorrell, Lanett, Miss Opal Gray, Langdale, and Mrs. Alburn Walburn, LaGrange; two sons, T. G. Gray, Greenville, S.

C., T. W. Gray, Lanett; one brother, Robert W. Gray, Atlanta; sixteen grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren.

Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon, December 18, at 4:00 o'clock from the Lanett Congregational Christian Church with Rev. J. D. Dollar and Rev. W. W. Elder officiating. Burial was in the Lanett Cemetery.

The following nephews served as pallbearers: Charles Fred Gray, Guy Gray, Willie Gray, Homer Gray, Talmadge Gray, John Bryce Gray.

STEWARDSHIP STUDY GROUPS.

within about $1,200.00 of the goal set forth in the budget. About fifty cards, some of families with several contributions, are yet to be seen and these will doubtless oversubscribe the balance needed for the budget when the work is completed. The men are at work this week finishing the job assigned them. One distinctive feature of the canvass reveals a healthy condition and shows a sacrificial spirit among the members, the benevolent budget was oversubscribed by more than $300.00. Also, an additional amount of around $200 was subscribed for a new educational building badly needed for the work. This item was suggested, but not included in the proposed budget. It is the hope that something concrete will be done about this at an early date.

Summing up the result of the work done by Doctor Denison in the Valley these past two weeks we would say, it was by far the greatest good ever accomplished for stewardship living, and it is our belief that it will bear much fruit for the kingdom of Christ through many years to come.

A CREED.

To be so strong that nothing can disturb your peace of mind; to talk health, happiness and prosperity; to make your friends feel that there is something in them; to look on the sunny side of everything; to think only of the best; to be just as enthusiastic about the success of others as you are about your own; to forget the mistakes of the past and profit by them; to wear a cheerful countenance and give a smile to everyone you meet; to be too large for worry, too noble for anger, too strong for fear, and too happy to permit the presence of trouble.—*Christian D. REV. MURDOCK W. BUTLER.

Rev. Murdock W. Butler, son of the late James and Martha Butler, was born in Southampton, Virginia, October 6, 1859. He died on January 14, 1947, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. D. Wellons, Roanoke, Virginia, at the age of 87 years, three months and eight days.

He attended the Suffolk Collegiate Institute, and at the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, held in Windsor, November 1879, the Committee on Ministerial Education recorded him as a ministerial student, along with J. W. Barrett and R. E. Barrett. At the session of the conference held in November, 1880, he was licensed to preach the gospel as a probationer. R. E. Barrett and R. A. Ricks were licensed by the Conference during the session. In 1881, at the session of the Conference held in Liberty Spring church he was ordained as an Elder; and R. E. Barrett, M. L. Williams and R. A. Ricks were ordained by the said Conference. The following constituted the Ordaining Presbytery: Revs. M. B. Barrett, J. T. Kitchen, J. P. Barrett and C. J. Ralston. He was, therefore, an ordained minister in our church for more than 65 years, and with the exception of a few months when he was taking an enforced rest, he was in active service until he was incapacitated by an automobile accident sometime last year.

Among the churches served by him during his active ministry were the following: Bethlehem, Liberty Spring, the Waverly charge (the Waverly church being organized under his care), Berkley, Raleigh (N. C.), Henderson, East End, Newport News, Gulf Mills (Pa.), and the Wakefield charge. He was a progressive, forward-looking, beloved pastor. Kind and courageous, gentle and considerate, modest and unassuming, he won his way into the affection of many people during his long years of active service. Although he did not have the advantage of an extensive college education, he kept abreast of the times and was always striving to discover and use the latest and best methods in his pastorate. He advocated and championed advanced methods in Sunday school work many years before other leaders in our church saw the importance of new plans.

Among the ministers he was respected and honored. Any minister who earns the goodwill and escapes the adverse criticism of his fellow ministers may count himself very fortunate. His lovable spirit silenced would-be critics, and he enjoyed the friendship, the cooperation and the support of many friends among ministers and laymen.

The funeral service was conducted in Johnson's Grove Church near Sedley, Va., and he was buried in the community where he spent his childhood. Revs. R. M. Kimball, H. S. Harcastle and the writer officiated.

Sixty-five years in the Christian ministry! That is a great record for length of service and for devoted, loyal support of the cause of Christ. Think of the pleasant smiles, the cordial greetings, the friendly hand-clasps and the spiritual impulses of such a life. His body lies in the silent grave, but his spirit and his ministry cannot be silenced by the passing years. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord—their works do follow them." It was a benediction to have the friendship of this man of God. He was a man of the people, also, and the people loved him. Blessed man. Blessed ministry. Blessed memory.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION MEETING.

In recognition of the essential unity of Christians throughout the world, the millionth copy of the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament will be presented to Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany at a popular mass meeting Sunday, February 9, at Grand Rapids, Michigan, which will open the 25th annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education, according to Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the Council. Presentation will be made by Dr. Luther A. Weigle of Yale University Divinity School, chairman of the Standard Bible Committee who made the revision under the authorization of the International Council, Dr. Ross stated.

Highlighting the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the annual meetings and 75 years of cooperative work will be a program on Monday evening (February 10) at which Dr. Nevin C. Harner, president of Heidelberg College, Tiffin, Ohio, will speak on "Christian Teaching for a New Day," followed by a dedication service. On Friday (February 14) an anniversary dinner is planned which will give recognition to persons who have served 25 or more years in interdenominational work in Christian education.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, New York, will speak Wednesday noon at an All-Council Fellowship Luncheon on "Protestantism in the Next Quarter Century," and the 1947 national Russell Colgate Distinguished Service Citation will be presented to Thomas J. Watson, New York, president of the International Business Machines Corporation, by Dr. Luther Wesley Smith, Philadelphia.

At a meeting of the governing body, The International Council, which meets Friday and Saturday (February 14 and 15), Dr. Paul H. Vieth of Yale University Divinity School will present the recently completed "Study of Christian Education."

Why Not Try Brotherhood?

A MESSAGE FROM THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA

"God is light and in Him is no darkness at all.
If we say we have fellowship with Him while we walk in darkness, we lie and do not live according to the truth.
But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light we have fellowship with one another."—I John 1:5-7 (Amer. Rev. Ver.)

When we attempt to look out upon the world as though the eyes of Jesus Christ, we see people everywhere longing for freedom and peace. Yet people of different nations, classes and races are plagued by fear, and atomic power is harnessed to the engines of war.

In our own land, while we talk of the Four Freedoms, we see lynching and riots, the rebirth of the Ku Klux Klan, political brigands on the march and greed at flood tide. We see the zealous champions of white supremacy attempting to dominate by legal or illegal power, while men and women of Japanese and Negro ancestry, who fought and suffered for democratic freedom, are ostracized, beaten, and in several sections of the country even killed, as they seek to enjoy some of that freedom.

All this indicates that great numbers of our people are still assuming that social problems can be solved by racial and cultural segregation and discrimination based upon an outworn system of caste and class upheld by legal force or by lawless violence.

Our racial problems are not merely a domestic matter but have world-wide significance. Our American leadership in securing a world order of justice and peace for all peoples will be fatally handicapped so long as we fail to solve the problems of racial justice in our own country.

Interracial problems can be solved only by a new approach and a new attitude. We cannot face both ways—toward belief in a master race and also toward the democratic principle of equality.

We cannot achieve this new attitude without the dynamic of the Christian Gospel which recognizes the wrongs of the old ways, which leads us to love our neighbors, and even our enemies and furnishes the strength for justice and mercy rooted in faith in God. Christian churches and their leaders are the exponents of this Gospel of Justice and Love.

Creative democratic living is cradled in our homes, in our churches, in our places of work and in our local neighborhoods and communities. We must, therefore, either strive for unsegregated churches and communities, where our children may grow into men and women of mutual respect and understanding, and use our abundant resources to serve and bless all, or we shall continue our slums, our ghettos, our share-cropper plantations and our job discrimination and reap the whirlwind of prejudice, hatred and of mob violence.

The new day makes it imperative for us Christians, both as individuals and as corporate churches to:

Renounce the pattern of segregation especially within our churches as out of harmony with the New Testament ideal of the Christian community.

Take effective measure to oppose movements and agencies which aim to set one race or group against another.

Seek an economy which will spread the abundance of our fields and factories, to feed, clothe, and house the many, irrespective of race, creed, or national origin.

Use every means to secure employment of workers based not upon color, creed or national origin but upon character and skill.

Stand for equal opportunity of minority racial groups for decent housing unrestricted by legal covenants, real estate codes and community practices.

Work to guarantee civil rights and privileges to all.

Encourage the United Nations to move steadily forward toward full justice and fair opportunity for dependent and colonial peoples.

Seek to know our neighbors regardless of cultural, national and racial distances and to share with them the riches of personal and intergroup fellowship.

Respect the dignity of every human being.

ELON COLLEGE--HIGHER EDUCATION FINANCIAL SUPPORT

THE COLONNADES.

Higher education is not self supporting. Tuition and fees paid by students must be supplemented. States and municipalities supplement student support by taxation. In more recent years tax supported colleges have entered the benevolent field and now have raised large sums of money as endowments. The church supplements student support of its colleges by apportionments to local churches and gifts from friends and alumni both for current needs and the creation of permanent funds that help to guarantee present and future usefulness. A gift to your college is an investment that will bear rich dividends in human character.

M., when the story of Sarah of Hebron entitled, "Turn the Other Cheek," will be dramatized. It is the story of a mother who had two sons and a daughter, one of the sons, Joel, being a wicked youth who fell in with bandits. How his mother saves him from life imprisonment provides the climax of the dramatization. Some weeks ago I wrote all ministers of the Southern Convention asking if they would please give some assistance in preparing the special college issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I want to thank those who responded. Their witness appears in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and in most instances their photograph accompanies their testimony.

AT ASHEBORO.

The people in Asheboro need a church building. Imagine using a school auditorium for seven years and having the Sunday school classes all over the place. Last Sunday, February 2, there were seventy-eight people present for Sunday school, a large number of them were children, the future church of ours in that city. More than fifty folks were there for church services at 11:00 o'clock.

The lot for the new church is well located. The parsonage is well located. Now the church needs to be built.

Dr. and Mrs. F. C. Lester were received into the church membership and their son, Harry, was consecrated to the Lord. This was a pleasure of mine to be present for the service. The people of the church are happy to have them as new members. The church looks to a great year as they hope to build their new building.

MRS. JAMES C. LYNCH.

AN APPRECIATION.

For the past eighteen months Randal C. Mason has served in Mt. Zion Christian Church, Eclipse, Va. He presented himself to us in answer to a call one Sunday afternoon. We liked him and his preaching so well, we asked him if he would continue to come and preach for us. He said: "I'll come and do all I can to help—I never could say no." We understood he had as much on him then as any other pastor would do. Still we couldn't let him go because we knew the Lord sent him to us. He was so interested in our church and so concerned about us not having a pastor. He realized from the start what we needed, so he started in to help in so many ways. There were prayer and business meetings every week for a while until we were reorganized and plans were made for building and improvements during which time we had Bible study. With Mr. Mason back of us all the time, we turned the ugly part of our church into new class rooms; installed a $1,300.00 automatic oil heating system; repaired the whole church and beautified it. Along with all this work he talked us into re-opening Hobson Christian Church, located a few miles from Mt. Zion, which had been closed eighteen years. We carried out Mr. Manson's plans and have been holding services there every fifth Sunday. His stay has been inspiring—a pleasure from time to time. We appreciated Mr. Mason's kindness and thoughtfulness to us. He has come to us when he should have been in bed resting.

We received seven children through christening, two adults through baptizing, three or four by letter, and several reconsecrated during his stay here.

We are disappointed in losing such an efficient worker. Therefore in recognition of his services to us we extend our thanks by trying to carry on.

May the Lord watch over him and his family as he goes to his new home and charge.

MRS. GEO. W. DIXON, Church Secretary.

A TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT SMITH'S LEADERSHIP AT ELON COLLEGE.

By REV. W. T. SCOTT, Supt.,
The Southern Convention.

President Leon Edgar Smith is a product of the Christian Church and has given himself in loyalty, devotion, and leadership for more than forty years as a churchman, pastor and educator. Graduating from Elon College, he was among the first of our ministers of the Southern Convention to earn a Theological Seminary degree. After graduating from Princeton Theological Seminary, Dr. Smith was pastor for a short time at Huntington, Indiana, when he was commanded by the Southern Convention for a job in the Third Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., where for fifteen years he labored and built the Christian Temple and a membership of 1,700. The Christian Temple is one of our denomination's most liberal congregations in benevolences and has one of our most beautiful structures.

In 1931 Dr. Smith was again commanded by his church to accept the presidency of Elon College. Elon was passing through uncertain and perilous days. The student body had reached a low of approximately two hundred, a debt of $768,000 was pressing the institution hard, and there was no income from endowment because endowment income had been allocated to interest payments.

By the indomitable courage, faith, and hard work of Dr. Smith and his associates Elon College was saved. Under his wise management in 1935 the budget was balanced without any outside money, except receipts from apportionments from the churches, and each year since 1935 the budget has been balanced.

On January 6, 1943, the Elon College debt was paid in full, endowment money being released thereby. Since that date the endowment has been increased from $232,000 to $375,000, exclusive of the Southern Convention note for endowment on which the churches are committed to raise $12,500 annually. The student body increased to a high, in 1940, of 661, when the war disrupted the lives of college young people. The student body of 1946-47 is well over 700. The "Million Dollar" Expansion and Development program for Elon College has been launched with $275,000 already secured in cash and pledges.

Building improvements and additions have been made to the property of the college. When Dr. Smith came to Elon, East Dormitory was closed. It has been refinished on the interior and refurnished. Hardwood floors have been placed in North Dormitory, a dormitory has been made out of the old publishing house, the Veterans Court has been erected, and farm lands of 268 acres have been acquired. Plans are under way for the completion of the objective of the development program for the college.

Of necessity, President Smith has had to give much energy, time and thought to the business and financial interest of the college. Nevertheless he has constantly endeavored to increase the scholarship and caliber of the faculty and today we have one of the strongest faculties in the history of the college. The Department of religious Education has been reestablished and increased emphasis placed upon training for the ministry and full-time Christian education work for both young men and young women.

In December, 1946, a far reaching success was attained when Elon College was re-admitted to the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. This last achievement is the result of all the labors of Dr. Smith, the trustees, and supporters from our churches.

We salute President Smith and earnestly hope that the work which he has done will continue to bear fruit and his vision for Elon College as a great institution of a higher Christian education may be fully realized. Dr. Smith merits, needs, and desires the help of all of us who love the Church and Elon College. Any tribute to Dr. Smith's work at Elon cannot be accurately made without recognizing the presence and support of Mrs. Smith who has given of herself unspairingly along with Dr. Smith.

LANETT, ALABAMA, LETTER.

Dear Brother Editor:

It has been a long time since I have had anything to say through the columns of THE SUN, but I am still interested in THE SUN and in our church. I was with the church at Langdale for nine years, and the people there were so very nice and good to me until we shall always feel under obligations to them. But the time comes when we must go elsewhere, so we are now with our new church about three miles out of town where we have found a very happy situation and the good people there are very appreciative and cooperative. This church is less than three years old, but we now have a membership of eighty-three, and a nice brick structure almost completed, which we expect to dedicate sometime in the spring.

Rev. H. M. Gray served this church as supply pastor for a little more than two years, and greatly endeared himself to these good people. He had three strokes last year, and died from the last one in November of last year. He fought a good fight. He kept the faith. He finished his work and is gone to receive the crown which was laid up for him.

We need your prayers as we try to carry on in the Master's name.

Mrs. Dollar has been speechless and helpless since November, 1945.

Our twelve children are all married now. Our son, John, Jr., and his wife live with us, and the children are all so sweet and good to us as can be.

We try always to reconcile ourselves to the will of God, and we earnestly solicit the prayers of all our friends.

J. D. DOLLAR.

BOOKS ARE BRIDGES.

For the first time in its history Turkey has joined in the observance of "Children's Book Week," writes Miss Dorothy G. Blatter, a Nebraska woman, sister of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Blatter of Albion, Nebraska, who is doing teaching and publication work in Istanbul, Turkey, under the American Board of Foreign Missions.

"A children's magazine by the name of Dogan Kardes, the United States Office of Intercultural Cooperation and our American Board publication department joined forces to bring before the public the idea of 'More Books for More Children,' writes Miss Blatter. Posters bearing the slogan, 'Books Are Bridges,' only in Turkish it was 'Her Kitap Bir Koprudur,' were distributed to schools and book shops. There were articles in the newspapers and stories about books in Dogan Kardes as well as talks at various schools.

"At the library of O. I. C. (United States Office of Intercultural Cooperation) we had quite an impressive book exhibit and later a book-week tea was held there for publishers, editors and others interested in children's books. There were short talks and lots of informal conversation about the books on display.

"If interest can gradually be aroused and some children's libraries and reading rooms established, I think people would begin to realize the importance of publishing finer and more lasting books for children here," adds Miss Blatter.

During this "Book Week," Miss

HOPE FOR THE FUTURE IN CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

Kirtley F. Mather, Professor of Geology in Harvard University, made the following statement endorsing the recent nation-wide observance of Youth Week: "Science and technology have placed in human hands weapons of mass destruction that today make it possible for mankind to commit a collective suicide. At the same time they have opened a new door to a life of abundance, with comfort and efficiency for all, and with possibilities for human welfare transcending any dreams of the past. What men will do with this new power is even now being determined, not by science but by the spiritual factors in the hearts and minds of men and women. The only hope for the future lies in the development of Christian faith and the acceptance of Christian ideals, especially among the youth of America."

This valid appraisal of our present condition indicates the task of Christian education and the Christian college. To be socially effective, youth must have more than good intentions. A naive faith on the one hand and a revolutionary impulse on the other are both inadequate in the face of current developments. Youth must be equipped educationally and motivated spiritually to translate high ideals into the vernacular of tomorrow's world. The influence of sound learning tempered by a reasoned faith is indispensable in every modern vocation.

The Christian college is faced with an unparalleled opportunity and an inescapable responsibility. We realize with Murray D. Lincoln that "The war has thrown into bold relief the problems which face us as both national and world citizens. In such a time and world the Christian college is able to teach the skills of science and technology and open new doors to the life abundant. It is able to teach not only the science of power, but also the danger and moral accountability of power. It is able to take young people, train them, release their energies and guide them into constructive vocations."

Youth must be led far beyond the old conflict between science and religion into a mature faith. Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell has stated the matter succinctly. He said: "On the day when the British and Canadian scientists cracked wide open the inexhaustible arsenal of solar energy, the scientists led us to the verge of a precipice into whose abyss we dare not look. Godless science and godless nations may lay waste the world, but a science that becomes the ally and the hand-maiden of religion, and that lays its trophies at the feet of Jesus Christ can transform the desert until it rejoice and blossom as a rose, and may well become the harbingers of a new and better day for all mankind."

Hope for the future lies in this kind of education which the Christian college is equipped to give. But one thing further is required. The church, redeemed and redeeming, is essential to the realization of this hope. The church must contribute its youth and means to the support of its college and the college must return its graduates, not alienated, but dedicated to the church and to the realization of the Kingdom of God on earth.

VIRGINIA CONVOCATION OF CHURCHES.

Outstanding leaders of Protestantism were brought to Virginia last week in its Convocation of Churches at Lynchburg. Dr. Albert Palmer, moderator of our General Council, was present and discussed the primacy of worship and preaching in Protestantism. This great preacher and teacher of preachers described the ideal sermon as being "Captivating, cogent, clear, convincing and creative." An adequate contemporary faith which is matched with action was given as the answer of the church to a chaotic world.

Dr. Roy Burkhart spoke of the essential oneness of the world. A world, said he, which is one geographically, one in human need, should become one in mutual helpfulness. Dean Luther Weigle of the Yale Divinity School declared that education which undertakes to transmit culture minus its religious heritage becomes distorted. The opportunity and need for a Christian university in Japan were presented by Dr. Thoburn T. Brumbaugh.

The Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Jr., the Executive Secretary, reported "Much more unity among our churches that we have realized," and pointed to "a common Lord, a common Scripture, a common hymnody, and a common task that is much greater than any of our churches alone can accomplish."

High tribute was paid to Dr. Ernest Trice Thompson, the first president, for his sane and progressive leadership. Dr. R. B. Montgomery, president of Lynchburg College, succeeded Dr. Thompson.

The Rev. Minor C. Miller, director of the department of Christian Education, reported that seven Vacation School Institutes were held last year to provide a means for interchange of experience among vacation school workers. Weekday religious education is gaining ground in Virginia, according to Mr. Miller's report. There are now ninety teachers who bring weekday religious education to approximately sixty thousand pupils.

The total disbursements of the Council in 1946 amounted to $40,545.24. The expanded program for 1947 calls for a budget of $48,750.00. Of this impressive amount the modest request from our denomination is $350.00.

Recommendations of the Commission on Activities for 1947 call for "A more effective program for training church workers, paying special attention to those areas where such training is most needed." A Summer School for Rural Ministers will be held at Virginia Polytechnic Institute July 14-18.

Elon College and the Ministers of the Southern Convention

"I find it difficult to express in words what Elon College has meant and means to me. It, in a large measure, prepared me for the work of the ministry. My heart rejoices in the quality of leadership it is producing today.

T. FRED WRIGHT.

REV. E. M. CARTER.

"The greatest satisfaction of my life is to look back over the years spent at Elon College—our college. The college of, by and for the church. The time I spent there has enabled me to render far more profitable service to the church and to myself."

E. M. CARTER.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"Perhaps I am more indebted to Elon that at first is evident, for it was an Elon trained minister that greatly helped my home and me on to the higher and finer things of life; besides I had three brothers to go to Elon ahead of me and they helped to lift the vision in our home. I wish I could repay Elon at least in part."

JOHN G. TRUITT.

REV. E. C. NEWMAN, D. D.

REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"Elon College gave me sound training in a wholesome Christian atmosphere, a vision of larger service, and abiding inspiration to Christian living and Christian service."

H. S. HARDCASTLE.

REV. W. E. WISSEMAN, D. D.

"Elon College is the greatest influence in the progress of our church and being the Alma Mater of my wife, myself and four children. I have for her the gratitude of a dutiful child towards the beloved parent."

C. E. NEWMAN.

REV. E. CARL BRADY.

"Since early childhood Elon College has been a grand institution to me. It has never been rich but has used well that which has been placed at its disposal. Our college deserves our prayers and our support."

E. CARL BRADY.

REV. LACY M. PRESSNELL.

"Elon College has provided a course of study and many books in my study for the ministry and means much as a part of my church."

LACY M. PRESSNELL.

"Elon College provides leadership, ministerial and lay, for our churches. Our loyal support is essential if our college is to continue in this worthy endeavor."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It's only a slight injury, so far, from a little hangnail, but it is remarkable how much it bothers me in my work. I am willing to admit my own clumsiness at my best, but I could hardly shave or button my shirt, and now behold what a struggle I am having with this typewriter. Just a tiny infection in one finger—how much it means. What about the fellows who have lost the whole hand in battle, or a foot, or both eyes, or both legs. It is well enough for us to think of them! I am told by those who deal with rehabilitation and therefore should know that the crippled soldier considers the public his greatest handicap. Let us do all we can to be a help and not a hindrance to our noble young fellows who have suffered for us.

But what I meant to say is I have learned anew how "we are all members of that one body, being many members, are the body" (I Cor. 12: 12). Each of us needs the help and cooperation of each other one of us. Take, for instance, the Southern Convention—we all need each other. We can be an organization of some 31,000 members, and even more, for many children and other adherents, are not counted in that number, if we will but love and serve one another through the channels set up for such an organization. There must be some central office. And now so complex has become our day we need some one, or more persons, to give their whole time to the work of organization, counsel, and guidance. How much can we do if we take seriously our organization and feel that we are one body, with many members.

I have been thinking that love, or consideration for one another, should be the great organizing force within our body politic. Love is like God, creative, life-giving, and ready with healing and strength with which to overcome all difficulties, and to promote growth. There is our college, our orphanage, our mission board, our board of publications, our board of superannuation, our conferences, our Woman's board of missions, our various other organizations and committees—do you say there are too many? Perhaps I might remind you again how I am struggling to type this message with only one tiny infection in only one finger. I need that finger in good health. (Especially since I use the "Columbus Method"—discover it, and land on it!) But when I do my work I do not have to lose any time thinking about how many organizations there are, no more than I thought yesterday about whether I had ten or eight fingers. It is perfectly proper to have respect for the common welfare of my whole body—"and to love my neighbor as myself"—that is to have respect for him, too. Some fellow may get sort of upset us at times—but even a sore finger is worth something.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

THEN AND NOW.

I have just come from a happy week spent on the Elon College Campus. It was an interesting and exciting experience to return to Elon after fourteen years of absence. There has been little change in the physical aspect of the college, and one is impressed still with the beauty, unity, and compactness of the buildings and campus. But it is apparent that dormitory space is far from adequate. Fourteen years ago at least one dormitory was closed and rooms were vacant in the ones that were open. Today the enrollment has spilled over until houses all around the edge of the campus are being used as living quarters.

The real assets of Elon, as of every college, are found in the students and faculty. The large student body is in the main serious, wholesome, and keen, sensitive to the pressing problems of the hour, responsive to the challenge of Christian thinking and living. The faculty group is necessarily much larger than formerly and measures up to the standard we require of teachers in a Christian college.

I was especially impressed with the department of Christian education. Gradually this department is being strengthened by Professors Bowden and Reynolds and Miss Lula Browne and I see no reason why it should not develop under their leadership into a religious education department, second to none on the undergraduate level in any liberal arts college in the country. The completion of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Endowment Fund is an indispensable prerequisite to that achievement. Young people who aspire to become religious education directors in churches are being drawn here from various parts of the country, but most importantly, young men and women are receiving training that will make them of incalculable value as intelligent, trained, and consecrated lay leaders in their home churches.

Some progress has been made toward reconciling the usual tension and division which nearly always exists in a college community between "town and gown," and I predict that this cause will receive new impetus through the cooperative efforts of President Smith and Pastor Dollar. The Community Church is aware of its good fortune in having as its first full-time minister a man of outstanding ability, genial personality, high vision, and deep consecration. The Community Church and the college, in their separate programs as well as in their joint efforts, face a new day of opportunity, and both should have strong support from the Southern Convention as well as from the denomination nationally.

WINSTON-SALEM CHURCH.

Winston-Salem Pilgrim Fellowship recently had visitors from our churches in and near Burlington. These visitors brought a program that was especially designed to strengthen the local group. Supper and recreation were provided by the local group and then followed singing led by Baxter Twiddy, discussion of program material and helps, and a worship service led by Burlington and Elon College young people. The Winston-Salem Church basement was full of young people that evening though it rained harder than it has in many days. Bad weather didn't stop these young people.

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Winston-Salem Church also sponsored the program on Sunday morning, February 2. Baxter Twiddy spoke and a quartette from Elon sang. This was one of the best services of the local church and was one of the best attended services. Bobby Jean Kimball is president of the local Pilgrim Fellowship.

The choir members have bought and made their own robes. This adds greatly to the color of the morning service each Sunday. Mrs. Coy Nelson, our pianist, and her daughter, Mrs. Eugene Vance, were recently received by letter into the fellowship of the church.

Pictures of Fessenden Academy and of the work of the American Missionary Association were recently shown at the annual business meeting of the church.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE DEPARTMENT OF RELIGION AT ELON.

By FERRIS E. REYNOLDS.
Head of the Department.

One of the most significant trends in higher education today is the active interest in Biblical instruction as a regular item of the college curriculum. In a society like ours, whose cultural roots are in the Hebrew and Christian religious traditions, it is only logical that an educated person should have an intellectually respectable knowledge of the literature of the Old and New Testaments. There are signs that this conclusion is exerting considerable pressure upon so-called secular education. But that is not all. It is being realized further that religion is not just one department of life, but that it is the integrating and motivating force of all the various areas of human interest. To use a common figure, religion is not just a spoke in the wheel, but it is the hub that holds the entire structure in proper order and balance.

In view of these "signs of the times" in education, the Department of Religion at Elon College has conceived its task and planned its work. Accordingly, the program of the Department is threefold in its scope and emphasis:

1. In the first place, there is the broader aspect of Christian Education which is concerned with the establishment and nurture of Christian ideals and standards of value. Certainly this work is crucial. And while it is not the exclusive function of the Department of Religion, that Department does have special responsibilities in the task of unifying the life of the college upon the basis of Christian realities and attitudes.

1. Then, there is the more academic aspect of the Department's work. Each student, regardless of his major subject, is expected to take the basic courses in the Old and New Testaments. This means that the Department of Religion actually serves every student on the campus at some time during his college course.

3. In addition to this more general instruction in Bible, the Department of Religion seeks to meet the more professional needs of the large group of men and women on the campus who plan to pursue full-time religious service. Some of these are already serving as student pastors and others are looking to that field of ministerial service for their life's work. For this ministerial group, special courses are offered in New Testament Greek, Exegesis, Philosophy of Religion, and Principles of Religious Leadership. Still others plan to enter into the service of the church as church school leaders, as public school teachers of religion, or as missionaries. Courses are offered these students, therefore, in methods of teaching religion, church school organization, and related subjects.

Besides the head of the Department, there are two other instructors in religion, Miss Lula Browne and Dr. D. J. Bowden. Miss Browne offers the course in religious education and Dr. Bowden gives those in the philosophy of religion.

MY EXPERIENCE AT ELON.

Columbia Theological Seminary,
Decatur, Georgia,
February 1, 1947.

Dr. L. E. Smith,
Elon College, N. C.
Dear Dr. Smith:

During the past two years since I have been away from Elon my fondest memories still linger there with all those who are carrying on with their education and enjoying the many blessings that are to be had on its campus.

Inasmuch as there may be students now in school who face a problem similar to one I had a few years back when I was a freshman at Elon I would like to share an experience with you. I do so with hopes that it might help someone else find his or her place in life.

As so many boys and girls do, I went to Elon not knowing just what I wanted to major in, but just felt the need of a college education. After a year on campus and seeing how many different fields are open for the young man or woman today one would think it harder than ever to decide, but it was not that way.

I had never been a deeply religious person but the environment at Elon was such the little "spark" of Christianity that was in me was kindled into a new flame. I hope many more young men and women not certain of their place in life will take advantage of the spiritual atmosphere provided for them. My experience was that the faculty and facilities of the college are instruments in God's hand to aid in multiplying our talents however small they may be.

May God's richest blessing be with you as you guide and direct the splendid work that is now being carried forward for the growth of Elon.

Sincerely,
GENE POE.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We are now in the midst of the College Period. During this period it is expected that our Sunday schools and churches will give generous support to the college. Some of our churches and Sunday schools are disappointing us. In fact we have contributions from only two for this report — First Church, Greensboro, and Lynchburg, totalling $90.31. The other 190 odd Sunday schools and churches in our Convention could have forwarded to the college a moderate contribution without difficulty to themselves but with great profit and encouragement to the college. I trust that before the College Period expires, we shall have contributions certainly from the major part of our local churches.

The college is grateful for the support received.

THE ELON COLLEGE COMMUNITY CHURCH.

We have just closed our first quarter with Dr. J. H. Dollar as our pastor. This is the first time the Elon College Community Church has had the service of a full-time minister.

During these three months, thirty new members have united with our church. Dr. Dollar, assisted by Miss Lulu Brown, who is part-time worker with the church and Bible teacher in the college, has been successful in starting work among the young people in the community, as well as in working among the veterans and the orphanage children.

We have an enrollment of 156 children in our Community Sunday School. The Adult Bible Class has an enrollment of approximately 50. The average Sunday School attendance of the students of the college, is about 60 each Sunday. The children living in the community and at the orphanage are very faithful in their attendance at Sunday School,

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

Just now as I am writing this it is good weather to stay indoors and make valentines. I hope that you have had fun making yours and that you got a lot of pretty ones from the right folks from the valentine box at school.

Our children were made happy today by new feathered friends which have come our way with the cold weather. The privet tree just outside our glassed-in back porch has furnished food for scores of cedar wax wings and four couples of robins today. Little noses have been pressed to the cold window panes as eager eyes have watched the birds get their berries. "Look, Mother, that one is standing on his head to get those on that limb!" "Come here, Mother! See that black one out in the garden? He walks around like a preacher!" It was a starling and he did look dignified with all of his feathers in place in spite of the wind. Little Rebecca entranced with the scene finally got one word out among all of her brother's chatter. Pointing her chubby finger she said, "Bird!"

We are beginning to think that Rebecca has been taking lessons from the squirrels up here. Every time we forget and leave the sugar bowl on the breakfast table we soon find her in the middle of the table wetting her fingers and fishing sugar from the bowl. Today I found her up in the middle of my kitchen work table mixing soda into some water. I had been giving her and her brother doses of aspirin and soda water for their colds! Thus far she hasn't gotten any bad falls. She insists on walking up our mountain alone and down alone. I keep at her heels ready to grab her if she stubs a toe. Just now she is keeping the rest of us busy keeping her out of mischief.

Please be my Valentine and write me a letter!

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT STUDIES PRAYER.

During the month of January the Juniors of the Congregational Church School of Plainville, Conn., have been thinking together about prayer. Each class has cooperatively written a prayer. Here they are:

Fourth Grade Prayer—Dear God in Heaven, we thank you for our food, clothes, homes, schools, and churches. Help us to do right and to have peace. Guide us to be good citizens. In Jesus' name. Amen.

Fifth Grade—(Our Everyday Prayer.) Our Father in Heaven, help us to do right, be loving and kind to others. Help those who are ill or in trouble. We thank you for health, happiness and the chance to learn at our Church School about what is right. Amen.

Sixth Grade—Dear God, hear us pray to day and forgive us for the wrong things we have done. Help us in our trouble. Give us courage to forgive our enemies. Teach us to overcome jealousy. Aid us to understand the Bible better by coming to Sunday school regularly so we may grow up to be better Christians. Amen.

* * * * *

I would be glad to have some Lenten Prayers for our page during the weeks of Lent. Will you help your class to write one and send it to: Mrs. A. C. Todd, 41 Larchmont Road, Asheville, North Carolina.

Thank you!

A LESSON IN HONESTY.

By EDITH GABRIEL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"See here, Mother!" exclaimed Johnnie, joyfully, on returning from an errand to the grocery. "I have more money than I took to the store, and I have the crackers and milk, too.

"What do you mean, Johnnie?" asked Mrs. Davis. "Let me see," she added, as she looked into his half-open extended hand.

"Count it, Mother. You'll see I'm right."

"Let us count it together. Milk, fifteen cents—crackers, twenty cents. That is thirty-five cents. I gave you fifty cents, and you have sixty-five cents left. How could it have happened?"

"Mother, may I have it? It is mine, isn't it? Now I shall have enough to get that tire pump for my bicycle. I'm lucky!"

"Wait a minute, Son. Do you really think it is yours because the grocer made a mistake?" asked Mrs. Davis.

"Well, if he is stupid enough to make such mistakes, it's his fault, isn't it?" said Johnnie, rather disconsolate to think his mother took a different view.

"Let us talk this over," she replied. "Suppose you and another boy are playing a game in which quick and correct thinking and action count. Then, if your opponent is slow or makes a foolish move, it is right for you to benefit by the points which he loses, isn't it?"

"Yes, Mother," said Johnnie hopefully.

"But," continued Mrs. Davis, "it is only in games that one may take advantage of another's mistakes, and even in games there are very strict rules with regard to playing fair."

"Yes, I'll say there are are!" Johnnie.

"In business, if one person takes advantage of the other—that is, if he watches for a chance to make the other one lose—he is not being fair. Do you understand?"

"I understand what you say, but I don't see why he isn't being fair."

"We needed some crackers and some milk. The manufacturers of the crackers are a long way from here, and they sell them only in very large quantities; the milk comes from a dairy miles away, too. Mr. Mills stocks his store with many things like these, and he hires men to wait on his customers and to keep the place neat and clean. He charges a little more than he pays for each article, to make it possible for him to meet his expenses and to support his family. So, although he is in business first of all for himself, his business is very important to us and to other families in the neighborhood, too."

"Yes—I see. He is really doing us a favor, isn't he? For me to keep his money when he made a mistake would be like—like—well, you see Henry Stout asked me to change a glass marble for him this morning. He wanted five commons for his glass. While I was counting I dropped a common. He picked it up and gave it to me. He didn't try to keep it."

"You have the right idea," replied his mother, smiling.

"I'll take the money back," said Johnnie.

"And hurry, because dinner is about ready," she answered.

Mr. Mills thanked Johnnie as he would have thanked a man under the same circumstances. Then he said, "You know I have too much to do; that is why I make mistakes. Say, young fellow, how would you like to earn a little money? You could work an hour after school—say three days a week. That would help me a lot."

"Mother, I think this is the best stew you ever made," said Johnnie as he passed his plate for a second helping, after relating his experience at the store. "May I work for Mr. Mills, Mother?"

"Yes, why not?" she answered. "I'm glad you like the stew."

RALLIES IN APRIL.

The Spring Rallies for the Eastern Virginia and North Carolina Conferences will be held the two weeks following Easter. The speaker at the Rallies will be Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, who is no stranger to this area. Pattie Lee will come to us fresh from her trip to India, the Near East and Europe. With our foreign study on India, and our home study on race relations, it seems especially appropriate to have Pattie Lee speak to us, for those are her two fields of major interest in the missionary enterprise.

Eastern Virginia Rallies will meet

April 8, 9, 10 at places to be announced soon.

The North Carolina Rallies will meet as follows:

Halifax District—Lynchburg, April 14.

Alamance - Guilford - Rockingham - Forsyth at Reidsville, April 15.

Chatham-Lee-Moore-Randolph at Shallow Well, April 16.

Vance-Warren-Durham-Wake at Mt. Mt. Auburn, April 17.

THIS AND THAT.

Don't forget to observe the World Day of Prayer on February 21. In rural areas, if weather is bad, why not give out programs to your women on preceding Sunday and ask them to observe the day individually in their homes by using the program with their families. All of us want the experience of being united in prayer with Christians around the world on that day.

—o—

The January issue of All About Us, the mimeographed bulletin of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Greensboro Church, emphasizes Friendly Service. From the "personals" we gather that the women are responsible for the Sunday morning nursery during the church hour, that they have a new officer in the person of Beth Beane as Student Secretary to work with the college girls, and that they reserve a special place in their hearts for their pastor's wife, Graham, "who does so much so well."

—o—

We hope you read carefully the two letters your society has received recently—one from Mrs. W. J. Andes telling about the World Day of Prayer Observance, and the other from Mrs. W. E. Wisseman bringing her New Year's message and telling of all the things for which to plan in your society for the next few months. Although these letters went to the president, it is hoped that she will read them or bring their message to the whole group.

—o—

It is hoped that everyone took notice of the quarterly treasurer's report which Mrs. Leathers had printed in THE SUN for January 30. (Incidentally, this present quarter is the last for the biennium and it is hoped that as much money as possible will be sent in.) See how much our Thank Offering for Shaowu amounts to, and then look at the grand total. All Conferences are doing good work and should be commended for it.

THANK OFFERING AT PORTSMOUTH.

Members of the Women's Missionary Society of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., feel indeed thankful for their Thank Offering Service which was observed on the evening of November 24, 1946, in the church auditorium. The program prepared by the Convention Thank Offering Committee was presented by the pastor, Rev. Randall C. Mason. It was really a challenge to all who have shared in the constant outpourings of God's rich blessings. The worship center was the communion table on which were placed a cross, two lighted candles, a large globe, and two collection plates. An offering of $31.00 was received when each person came forward and presented his gift to two standing ushers. We feel grateful indeed to everyone whose contribution, large or small, helped us in this achievement, and to our kind, loving Father, whose goodness to us made it possible to receive this offering to send to the Shaowu, China, mission field. Thus an evening of spiritual fellowship, inspiration, and giving was enjoyed by all present.

RUTH COLLINS,

President.

THE CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

For the women of the Christian Temple the first Tuesday afternoon in each month is a date of importance and interest, when they meet at the church for the regular Council meeting. Under the leadership of the president, Mrs. F. W. Wilson, our society is increasing in interest, and the scope of the work undertaken.

A committee prepares the programs for each meeting with studied devotionals, and emphasis upon some phase of our mission work.

In addition to the regular Thank Offering program in November, we had a splendid message on "Triumphant Living," by Mrs. R. L. Wiley.

On November 19, a supper and "fancy fair" were held in the social hall with an evening of good fellowship and fun. The evening was a social and financial success.

In January, preceding the United Preaching Mission in Norfolk, our society sponsored a union prayer service for the four Park Place churches.

In February, Miss Gertrude Nyland, a director of religious education, spoke on "The Old and New" (Continued on page 14.)

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

LESSON VIII—FEBRUARY 23, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep.—John 10:10.

LESSON: John 10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 23.

False Shepherds.

"All that came before me are thieves and robbers." It must not be taken literally, for God had had his faithful shepherds in the years that were gone—Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, to say nothing of Abraham and Moses, and a great host of priests and prophets who had loved the sheep and had been good shepherds. But there had been many false prophets, scribes and Pharisees and leaders who were apparently not concerned about the sheep, but rather about their own aggrandizement and their own pleasure and profit. And there are false shepherds today—men who do not care for the sheep, men who are beguiled by the love of power or the love of money. But not all, no, not by any means all. God has a great host, which no man can number, of faithful shepherds of the sheep.

The Door.

"I am the door of the sheep"—they are the words of Jesus himself, one of the many of his "I am's." Doors may be ornamental but their primary purpose is practical. They are openings or ways through which one goes from one room or one place into another room or place. As usual Christ was putting a sublime spiritual truth into simple language. He is the Door—he is the way through which men pass into a richer, fuller life. He is the way by which they come to God. It was just another way of saying that He was the Way. Furthermore through Christ the Door, men find liberty—they go in and out and find pasture. Through Christ the Door, men find salvation—I am the Door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved. Through Christ men not only enter into a new kind of life in the world that now is, but lay hold on eternal life in the world which is to come. Christ is the Door in all that the word, door, means.

The Shepherd.

It was the word that he loved best. He called himself the Shepherd, and the Good Shepherd. When one learns more about the meaning of the term as Jesus used it, and in the light of its associations in His day, the term takes on a rich and warm and tender and strong association. More than any other word—preacher, minister, priest, rector, elder, presbyter, parson, prophet, bishop—it is the most popular, the most beautiful, the most ample as a name for Christ's envoys. More than other words it embodies the functions of those who are called by God to have oversight of the flock of God. The world could get along quite well without great orators, but it cannot get along without good shepherds. And strange as it may seem to some ministers—and not all of them young men who rather turn up their noses at pastoral calling—a man does not have to sacrifice good preaching in order to be a good pastor. Indeed the best preaching, in the sense that it meets the needs of people, and develops the fruits of righteousness is done by the men who are the best pastors. There is a place for church "programs" in our modern world, but there is a greater need for pastors. In all too many instances pastors are so loaded up with so many things that their pastoral work suffers. It is significant that when Jesus gave his last charge to Peter, he gave it in terms of the pastoral function—"Feed my sheep, feed my lambs, feed my sheep."

The Shepherd and the Sheep.

When Jesus used the term sheep as a symbol of people, he was not speaking disparagingly. He was simply using a figure of speech that had meaning and which is true to the fact, that after all man with all his powers and knowledge is about as helpless alone to cope with life as is a sheep. And in the relationship between the shepherd and the sheep there are some of life's strongest and tenderest ties.

The Shepherd knows his sheep. "I know my sheep and am known of mine." He knows us altogether. He remembers our frame, he knows that we are dust. He knows our weaknesses, our waywardness, our sorrows, our secret sins, our aspirations, our hopes, our fears, our needs, our hungers, our possibilities. The Good Shepherd knows his sheep, and he knows them personally, individually, intimately.

The Shepherd loves his sheep. He lays down his life for the sheep. No man can take it from him. His Father gave him power to lay it down and the Father gave him power to take it again. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man will lay down his life for his friends. Christ the Good Shepherd loved us and gave himself for us.

The Shepherd feeds his sheep. He is the Bread of Life, the Water of Life. His words are spirit and they are life. He came that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. In him is life and that life is the light of men.

The Shepherd seeks the sheep. Perhaps that is one reason why Jesus chose the title. He came to seek and to save those who were lost. He has the heart of the shepherd—the heart that prompts him to seek until he finds that which was lost. We try to escape him, we sometimes seem to succeed, but sooner or later he finds us out. He looks for every one of us as if there were only one of us to look for. And he loves us the same way.

Here is the picture of God in Christ which gives humanity help and hope. To be sure there were times when the shepherd must be firm in dealing with the sheep. He must discipline them when they are unruly. He cannot allow them to have their own way. He must restrict them in the interest of their welfare and their safety. But the heart of the Eternal is most kind, wonderfully kind. God is not a stern-visaged Judge or an autocratic King, but a Shepherd! For Jesus said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." And Jesus was the Good Shepherd.

WHAT ELON COLLEGE MEANS TO ME.

not so saturated their gifts with their love as to make the Elon spirit contagious among its sons and daughters who come and go. Elon has always meant much to me. There is a thrill to me in its very atmosphere on the campus, in the classrooms, the dormitories, the religious activities, or recreational sports. There is something about the Elon spirit that gets a hold of your heart and grips it like the thing Paul was writing about when he said, 'Love never faileth.' Elon College came into existence, has lived, and will keep on living because her spirit is founded upon a faith, a trust, and a love that cannot die."

BEGINNING THE MISSION PERIOD.

To Pastors, Sunday School Superintendents, President of Women's Societies—

Dear Friends:

We are beginning the period known as Mission Period in our Southern Convention program. Although we ought to stress and emphasize missions throughout the year, we are asked to put special emphasis on missions during the Mission Period. I am writing to ask you for your co-operation in this challenging and critical work.

As you probably know our Southern Convention is trying to raise $27,000 "over and above" its regular missionary giving during each year of this biennium. This is its share of the Post-War Emergency Program of the larger fellowship of Congregational Christian Churches, and is to be allocated as follows: Shaowu Project, $10,000; Church Extension, $10,000; Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction, $7,000. This $27,000, let me repeat, is "over and above" our regular missionary giving. That does present a challenge indeed. But it is a goal that is easily reached if our people give in any worthy manner at all. For instance, if half of the members of our churches gave only what amounts to "a cent a day" over and above what they are giving, we will go over the top easily. One almost hesitates to write about the world mission of the church in terms of "a cent a day," but I have done that to make the thing concrete and practical, instead of leaving it in the abstract.

Many churches are going to make their appeal on the basis of this "cent-a-day" plan. They will distribute small containers among the membership of their churches and ask for an "over and above" offering of at least an amount equal to a cent a day, or $3.65 per member. This will take the place of the Special Easter Offering, although it may be used in connection with the Mission Board. The important thing is not so much the plan which is used, but the determined and persistent effort which is put forth to arouse our people to the sense of emergency which prevails and to get a generous response from them.

To be sure this looks like a big task—to raise $27,000 "over and above" our regular missionary giving. But it is really a small sum in the light of the desperate need of the world for the gospel, and in the light of the commitments which the Mission Board has made for this biennium. We can do it if we will. Will you give such as you are and such as you have to this great cause? Will you rise up to meet this challenge and this opportunity?

Sincerely yours,
H. S. HARDCASTLE,
President, Mission Board.

FOREIGN MISSIONS CONFERENCE.

Approval of a project to establish an interdenominational, co-educational Christian university in Japan highlighted the 53rd annual meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, held at Buck Hill Falls, Pa., January 14-17, 1947. The Conference represents 124 Protestant mission boards and societies in this country and Canada.

Final approval of plans for the construction of the university must await ratification by the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. The Federal Council joined with the Foreign Missions Conference last year in setting up a Joint Committee for the Establishment of a Christian University in Japan. According to the proposal as adopted by the Conference, a fund of not less than $5,000,000 and not more than $15,000,000 will be raised here and in Canada to support the project in its early stages. If the project is approved by the Federal Council, a national sponsoring committee of from five to ten members from both bodies will be appointed to prepare detailed plans.

Development of a new "group evangelism" technique designed to accelerate the work of Christian missions overseas was one of the recommendations contained in a special report of a Commission on Effective Evangelism, presented by its chairman, Dr. Kenneth Scott Latourette of Yale Divinity School. Core of the "group evangelism" method, the report explained, lies in reaching the rulers of people, securing their adherence to the tenets of Christianity and the resultant adherence of their countrymen, and then giving this "nominal impact" depth and content by follow-up work of teaching missionaries.

Japan offers one of the most fertile fields for this type of evangelism, said the report, because in that country the cultural pattern has been severely shaken.

It was also voted that plans be made for holding a North American missionary assembly or congress in the near future. Such an assembly, according to the proposal placed before the delegates, might be employed as a means to bring all mission boards in both this country and Canada together in a large joint meeting.

A recommendation from the business committee urging the release of all politically clear German missionaries still interned in India, Jamaica, Australia and South Africa was adopted by the Conference. It was urged in addition that German missionaries in Japan and Indonesia who have been released from internment be repatriated at the earliest possible moment if they so desire.

The Conference went on record in favor of a resolution currently before the U. S. Senate which provides for a temporary quota of 100 immigrants per year from Korea who would be accorded the privilege of becoming American citizens.

The resolution called upon the "constituted authorities of the United States Government to propose to the

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The kind Master is good to us. He has blessed the children with good health during the year, 1946. We had only five tonsil operations, one crossed eye straightened, and but a few accidents, none serious.

When we count our blessings one by one, we find they were many during the year, 1946. We have strong faith in God and believe He can come to our rescue when we need Him. In fact, we feel that on many occasions in our work here, we have relied solely in the Lord when we felt we had done all we could for a sick child. Our prayers have not always been answered in the way we asked, but in a better way and a greater blessing than we really asked for. We believe in prayer, and we believe in praying for others as well as for ourselves. We well remember more than twenty years ago we had a scourge of serious illness, and a number of our children had pneumonia. As soon as one would get better, another would develop it. The way looked dark, and we could not see the light. We often prayed that God would come to our rescue and spare the little folks.

One morning when we opened our mail, there was a letter from another state, and in that letter was this sentence: "We have heard about your serious sickness, and our church had special prayer in your behalf yesterday." Oh, how it lifted us up to know that somebody was praying for us. Do you in your daily devotions ever ask God to be mindful of the little children on the Christian Orphanage hill? Do you? You may not believe it, but it would do us a lot of good to know you were praying for us and asking God to be with us and give us strength and wisdom to guide these little children in their young and tender years in the right way.

You can see the goodness of God on every hand. As I sit in my office on this 7th day of February, I can look out of the window at the beautiful blue sky and behold the beautiful bright sunshine, the trees, the evergreens, the blooming shrubbery, and can see God in everything. Why not take our troubles to Him and lay our burdens at His feet? Jesus said: "Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

WINSTON-SALEM CHURCH.

Dr. F. C. Lester was present and presided, since he was the president of the Corporation. Reports from various departments of the church showed progress. The Church School, organizing last April with twenty-four people, now has a membership of fifty-one and an average attendance of thirty-five. The church is raising more money than at first anticipated. Expenses have been heavy this past year but so far the church is still on top.

A young adult class has recently been organized with Mrs. E. M. Whitman as teacher. This is one of the most encouraging groups of the church and should do some great things.

Any church of our Southern Convention or of our fellowship elsewhere having members living in or near Winston-Salem should send the names to us and we will try to contact them. Be sure the address is correct as Winston-Salem is a city of some 100,000 people. We need the help of all in building our church here.

W. J. ANDES, Minister.

Customs of India." There will be further observance of our foreign study.

The mid-year finds us with all obligations up to date, and we are looking forward to having a good representation attend the World Day of Prayer, the District Meeting on April 8, and we also expect to be represented at the Woman's Missionary Convention and School of Missions at Elon College the week of June 16.

As time goes on we realize, more and more, the limitless possibilities for good even in a small group of interested women.

spiration and direction for life is the strongest incentive to me to stand loyally by her and give, in the largest measure possible, of my prayers, my devotion and money that she may be able to meet the growing demands of the educational world, and to offer the youth of today and those of the generations to come the measure of helpfulness she gave to me. To help, in any manner possible, to guarantee her influence to others is one of my heart's deepest yearnings. Look into the pulpits and pews of our churches in the Southern Convention and beyond its grounds if you would measure Elon's contribution to the Kingdom of God."

JESSE H. DOLLAR.

"I am deeply grateful to Elon College for the genuine spiritual atmosphere which I found there and which, in part, influenced me to enter the Christian ministry. I am also grateful for the association and friendship with consecrated Christian men like the late Dr. J. O. Atkinson and Dr. J. U. Newman. They were a real inspiration to me and left a profound impression upon my life."

ROBERT M. KIMBALL.

"As an alumni of Elon College, I can say that the training I received while there and the contacts and associations through the years is a source of inspiration and helpfulness. Whatever good may be accomplished through my efforts in life I owe largely to Elon College."

H. E. CRUTCHFIELD.

"The best thing I can say for the college is that it helps those who need help. It enlarges vision and usefulness. I am happy to be a son of so great an institution."

ANTIOCH COLLEGE: ITS DESIGN FOR LIBERAL EDUCATION. Henderson and Hall. Harper and Brothers Publishers. $3.00.

"A good many people have heard about Antioch College," as the authors say in the Preface. This book tells about the experiment in college education which has been in progress since the inauguration of Arthur E. Morgan as president in 1920. Brief reference is made to Horace Mann who became the first president of Antioch College in 1853. Many of those who have heard about Antioch College will be disappointed in this book which gives such scant information concerning Horace Mann's experiment and the life of the College prior to 1920. The heroic struggle of the Christian denomination and the Unitarians in establishing this enterprise is not mentioned. Some will recall that five presidents of the college were members of the Christian denomination: Horace Mann, Austin Craig, J. B. Weston, O. J. Wait, D. A. Long, and W. A. Bell. These modest beginnings deserve at least a scant mention in a volume devoted to the school.

Many people should read about this contemporary experiment in liberal education which is being conducted at Yellow Springs, Ohio. The real heart of Antioch still is social-mindedness, we are told, as it was in the days of Horace Mann who told Antioch students to "Be ashamed to die until you have won some victory for humanity." An excellent picture of "The Antioch of Today" is given in the following summary:

"Antioch is committed to the increasing human potentiality both in quality and in quantity. On the one hand its proposed to work toward this end by keeping the abstractions its teaches stubbornly related to facts, and on the other hand it proposes to teach young men and women in ways that will enlarge their own lives and make them effective agents toward a fuller, freer society. The effectiveness of these young people depends on their having been educated in emotional outlooks and attitudes as well as in intellect; on their possessing a general understanding of the world and society and finding a specific and congenial way to contribute to it; on their standing in the democratic one-to-one relationship with other men in the framework of this democratic relationship; and finally, in their working toward such a realization of their own potentialities and ethical relationships with others as will result eventually in more abundant life for all." We look hopefully to education of this kind. R. L. H.

MISSIONS CONFERENCE.

Union of Socialist Soviet Republics the immediate simultaneous evacuation by American troops of Southern Korea and by Russian troops of Northern Korea, with the establishment simultaneously of a United Nations Plebiscite Commission which would proceed at the earliest possible date to hold an election to provide for free, democratic government."

Also approved by the Conference was a resolution asking Congress to repeal the Philippine Trade Act of 1946, which described as constituting an affront to the sovereignty of the new Philippine Republic.

According to the resolution, the act, passed by the Seventy-Ninth Congress provides for only 100 Filipinos to emigrate to America in one year, while 1,000 Americans may be admitted annually to the Philippine Republic. The act also provides, among other things, that if economic exploitation of the Republic's natural resources and public utilities is to be opened to any person, it should be opened to American citizens and all forms of business enterprise owned or operated by American citizens.

The resolution proposed that the act be replaced with legislation which "respects the fullest sovereignty of the new Republic and which is designed to prevent economic exploitation over which the country would have little control."

Separate legislation, intended to assist in the rehabilitation of the Philippines also was urged.

The Conference approved an overall budget of $456,000 for 1947 to carry on the cooperative program of its area and functional committees.

HIGHER EDUCATION AND THE CHURCH

SECTION OF CAMPUS SHOWING MOONEY CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

Education and Christianity are mighty forces in civilization. They inspire men's minds and mould human character. Without education man is in the twilight of superstition with all of its tendencies towards subversion. Without Christianity he is in the grip of worldliness with all of its forces for evil and destruction.

Schools exist to inform, to educate and to train. Their mission is conceived of today as universal. Not simply the few but the masses need to be educated. More efforts are made today to realize this end than ever before.

The church exists to proclaim the Christian religion, to propagate the Christian gospel.

Christianity is a universal religion. It was given to the world to save the world. Its power is the hope of the world. It is the responsibility and the privilege of the church to proclaim this power to the ends of the earth.

The school and the church cannot be divorced in this matter of redeeming man, building character and saving the world. They have been standing apart long enough. Let them come together, these two mighty forces—education and Christianity. Join the sinews of their souls, that ignorance with its darkness, and evil with its destruction may be overcome, uprooted and cast out; that the Kingdom of God may possess the earth.

A Lenten Message

By DOUGLAS HORTON
Minister of the General Council

For the strength that comes from quietness and confidence we shall all find an aid in the Fellowship of Prayer for 1947.

Let us remember, however, as we enter these holy days, that the cultivation of faith is likely to lead us into dangerous places. If a man thinks that the renewal of it in Lenten prayer and meditation will leave him passively content within the walls of His church or chamber, he had best have none of it.

Christian faith is not faith in the abstract. It is faith in God—in the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is faith in a God who is so alive that he sweeps us into the high rhythm of life—meditation followed by ministry, commitment to the highest by concern for the lowest, the quiet hills of Galilee by days of action in Jerusalem. The potential of devotion becomes kinetic power. One cannot have communion with God and expect not to be carried into His orbit—even as far, for some, as Golgotha. "My father worketh hitherto—and I work."

On the man-ward side faith is anything but passivity. It is an outward movement of the spirit. It is a sortie (to borrow a fine word from Jacques Riviere) which the soul makes beyond its walls. It cannot be of God and be otherwise.

It is for this reason that the needy peoples of the earth today may dare to hope in us. The starving millions in the war-stricken countries, the shelterless and those who find shelter in ruins, the wretchedly clad, all of them helpless in face of disease and epidemic—these look toward us Christians with pathetic wistfulness. So also does the innumerable company of the friendless and forgotten, the economically and racially oppressed in our own land. Nor shall we desert them if our faith be real. In faith we shall go out to them, pledging our brotherhood in something more than words. In faith we shall share and share and really share.

If the Church of Jesus Christ might only see its possibilities in the world today, not only as an instrument of mercy but also as a builder of the way into the future! It might be (I believe that it actually is) laying the foundation of a world in which science shall become the ingenuity of love and the various arts the medicines which heal and make strong the human spirit. It might be leading the nations into the peace which follows from unity. It might be pointing mankind toward the world foretold by the prophets.

These possibilities, however, the Church can see only through the eyes of faith. Faith alone can endow the Church with inner power and outward effectiveness. If there be faith in us, the Lord God, who comes to us as Jesus Christ, can assume His leadership, taking command of our souls and our society. To this end Edward Johnson, one of our spiritual forebears in old New England, calls to us across three centuries: "Take this sharp sword of Christ's word and follow on, ye valiant of the Lord . . . boldly leading forth His troops . . . terrible as an army with banners. Crowd in, all ye that long to see this glorious sight; see—there's their glorious king Christ on that white horse whose hoofs like fire cast . . . flames of fire in his paths."

The 1947 Red Cross Fund Campaign will be conducted February 25-March 10. The larger portion of the $60,000,000 which Red Cross is hoping to raise throughout the nation will be used for veterans and for the armed forces in the United States and overseas.

On last Sunday night the young people of the Christian Temple and Rosemont Churches met together for evening worship and later had a Fellowship Hour. Miss Ray, a teacher in the Norfolk County Week-Day School of Religious Education, was the speaker.

ment Fund. Those wishing to make a permanent gift to THE CHRISTIAN SUN might send their gift to W. J. Andes, 637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

His subject will be "The Christian Knowledge of God." Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo will lecture on "The Ministry—Unashamed and Unafraid."

C. L. Rush, the Superintendent of Palmyra Sunday School, lost his home with all its contents by fire January 25. The family were all away and when the fire was first seen by neighbors it was too far gone for the firemen and friends to save anything. His many friends immediately came to his rescue and he with his family are set up to housekeeping temporarily in a rented house. He plans to rebuild as early as possible.

A HAPPY SURPRISE.

The pastor and his wife were invited to a covered dish supper February 11, in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Laymon, sponsored by the married ladies' Sunday school class of the Mayland Sunday School. After a bountiful feast was served to forty-two members and friends, a very interesting program was rendered. A happy social hour was enjoyed, and just before time to adjourn the pastor and his wife were invited back into the dining room and presented with a real pounding—the things that are necessary for the pantry of working people. Words fail us to express our appreciation for a favor of this kind and also for the happy privilege of serving such a generous people. We shall strive to render better service in the future.

PARABLE OF "THE TEN TALENTS" DRAMATIZED ON "THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD," FEBRUARY 23.

"The Ten Talents," powerfully dramatic parable of the New Testament, dramatized in modern language and citing man's need to use his abilities or they will eventually disappear, will be the sixth chapter in "The Greatest Story Ever Told" series to be broadcast Sunday, February 23, over ABC at 6:30 P. M., EST.

The drama opens on the outskirts of Jericho where the multitude await the arrival of the Master and his disciples. When wealthy little Zacchaeus, town publican, joins the welcoming crowds, they excoriate him as a rich presumptuous sinner undeserving of the Master's attention. However, their outcries are quieted when the Master relates the parable of "The Ten Talents" entrusted to the adventurer, Phillip, who wishes to marry the heiress, Bernice, despite her unwilling father. But Phillip determines to prove his mettle and his love for her by challenging the desert wastes to bring home to Jericho from distant Bagdad the rich oriental silks worth twice ten talents.

The series is produced by famed Biblical scholar, Fulton Cursler, whose scripts faithfully retain the teachings of the New Testament. A moving, colorful background and mood music is sung and played by a mixed choral group and an augmented orchestra.

THE ORGAN PRELUDE—Mrs. Donnell

THE CALL TO WORSHIP:

THE PROCESSIONAL HYMN No. 356:
"God of Our Fathers."

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON: Luke 15:
11-32. This Scripture reading was prefaced by the following words:
Jesus' story of the prodigal son has a word, not only for individuals, but also for a prodigal society which expresses itself in war. It is for this reason that I read this story today.

THE ANTHEM: "A Song of Peace" (Sibelius). Solo—Mr. Fonville.

THE PASTORAL PRAYER.

Dearly beloved, in the holy quiet of this hour, let us draw nigh unto him who heareth prayer; and let us remember that he listeneth more to our hearts than to our words. Let us each bring an offering of penitence, of love, of teach-ableness. May we, thus praying, find grace to help in time of need.

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you; for everyone that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and unto him that knocketh it shall be opened.

THE CHORAL RESPONSE.

HYMN No. 371: "Fling Out the Banner."

THE OFFERING.

THE OFFERTORY PRAYER.

THE OFFERTORY ANTHEM: "Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory" (Steffe). Solo—Mrs. Huff.

THE SERMON—By the Pastor.

The following is a brief outline of the sermon preached:

Introduction—

1. War, which calls young men and women to leave their homes and go into battle, is produced by a prodigal society.

2. Jesus' story of "The Prodigal Son" indicates some of the things which make a prodigal society and at least two things which we must have to have a Christian order of Society.

I. This story shows these things which produce a prodigal society.

1. A spirit of adventure for personal gain as shown in the prodigal son. This is illustrated in the late war in individual leaders of Germany, Japan, etc.

2. Mass support of such individuals with the hope of individual and community material gain as shown in the "friends" of the prodigal man.

3. Dominant spirit of jealousy as shown in the elder brother.

II. This story shows these two things which we must have to produce a redeemed society in which an order of peace will prevail.

1. Faith in our fellow man. The Father had faith in the prodigal son —faith that he would return to the Father's house.

2. Faith in God. The Son had faith in the Father—faith that the Father would receive him, if he returned home.

Conclusion—

If we would hope for a world order in which there would be no occasion for war, we must spend ourselves in creating in the hearts of men a faith in one another and in God.

RECOGNITION OF RETURNED SERVICE
MEN AND WOMEN — Mrs. Stevens.
(The bulletin for this service carried the names of those still in service and the pastor called attention to this before addressing those who had returned.)

THE PASTORAL WORD TO RETURNED SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN. With these men and women standing, the pastor addressed to them the following words:

At the outset of World War II, you, with millions of other young men and women were called by our country to serve in the Armed Forces, to do battle in a war produced by a chaotic world and a prodigal society. You fought a devoted and victorious battle. To do this, you sacrificed much in emotional pain, physical hardship, and intellectual discomfort. These things are the cost of war. You did not seek the war, but the war sought and found you. This is always the case with the man who does the real work in winning any war.

When you began to leave the families of our church to enter this battle, we raised in this sanctuary this service flag, and caused to be affixed thereto a blue star for each of you. We did this for two reasons: first, as a perpetual reminder of your absence from us and your sacrifice in our behalf and in behalf of the world, and secondly, as a perpetual pledge from us to you that our love and our prayers would go with you wherever you were called. We have sought to keep true to this pledge.

We raised these flags in the altar as a symbol of our blessings on our State and Nation in all things which are right and true. You have fought a good fight and have kept faith with us, and today we are gathered here in your honor, to welcome your return and to thank Almighty God for His great mercy in hearing our prayers and permitting us to witness this day. We, as a church, are grateful for your devoted efforts in war and in peace, and heartily welcome your return home.

We here consecrate ourselves to the faithful performance of the ministries committed to us as a church, so that the world may find and know the way of peace. We seek your loyal and devoted cooperation in this task. The army of God needs each of you as soldiers in the battle against evil, as laymen in the pews, as teachers and leaders in every part of the program of the church, as full-time workers in the Kingdom of God through the church.

In the name of the church I welcome you with gratitude. In the name of God, the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, I bless you. May you find peace within your heart and constructive labors for your hands.

RESPONSE IN BEHALF OF SERVICE MEN
AND WOMEN—By A. D. Cobb, Jr.

A SERVICE OF MEMORIAL FOR THESE MEN WHO GAVE THEIR LIVES IN WORLD WAR II: Robert Van Mc-Clure, Ralph Cooper, Clarence Wilson Coble, Emory A. Fry, James Elmer Dickey, Tom Brown Terrell.

THE PASTORAL WORD—Mr. Stevens.

IN MEMORIAM:

The Gospel of Christ, of which we are the custodians, teaches us that life is the gift of God to be constructively used in behalf of His Kingdom and the betterment of human kind.
It also teaches us that death is an experience in which man is transferred from earthly habitation to the world beyond. The immortal hope that is in Christ Jesus is our stay in this transition experience. The assurance of that hope belongs to all of us through faith in Him who is our Saviour, and the commitment of our lives to him.

"Greater love hath no man than this; that a man lay down his life for his friend" were the words of Jesus.
They are true words. The memory of those whom we have loved and seen pass on is sacred to all of us.
It is a blessed and sacred memory indeed.

Today we pause to pay tribute to the memory of: Robert Van Mc-Clure, Ralph Cooper, Clarence Wilson Coble, Emory A. Fry, James Elmer Dickey, Tom Brown Terrell.

These men gave their lives for us, their friends. They spilt their blood to settle the dust of a chaotic world.
To the glory of God and to the memory of these men we dedicate this moment. We commend their lives and their sacrifices to Almighty God.

MEMORIAL PRAYER. (All in Unison.)

Our Father, unto Thee, in the light of our Saviour's blessed life, we would lift our souls. We thank Thee for that true light shining in our world with still increasing brightness. We thank Thee for all who have walked therein, and especially for those near to us and dear, in whose lives we have seen this excellent beauty and glory. We thank Thee for the lives of these men in whose

THEOLOGY or SOCIOLOGY?

The Christian religion has suffered the misfortune of being interpreted as theology rather than sociology. Theology has its place and is indispensable. To many people, however, it is something to be talked about, debated, something which does not issue in action. Roughly speaking, theology is concerned with God and sociology is concerned with man. Sociology has to do with living conditions, with society, now. Theology leans toward the past. Sociology is concerned primarily with the present and the future. Theology and sociology should be welded. Theology should issue in sociology.

What are the areas of contemporary religious and social concern? What are the social implications of our Christian theology? The Resolutions of the Department of Social Education and Action adopted at the Virginia Convocation of Churches in Lynchburg indicates some of the inescapable problems which claim the attention of the enlightened Christian conscience. The resolutions which follow were prepared by Dr. John H. Marion, Chairman of the Council's Department of Social Education and Action. Study them as excellent examples of Christian sociology.

Overseas Relief.

Since the end of the war the people of the American churches have given much material aid to suffering peoples around the world. Many groups and organizations have been engaged in overseas relief, and in their work of binding up the world's wounds thousands of people in our Virginia churches have generously joined.

These commendable contributions, however, must not blind us to the appalling predicament in which millions of our fellowmen still find themselves. Says a writer in a recent issue of "The Christian Century": "It is exceedingly difficult for an American to visualize the conditions under which more than ninety per cent of the human race is now living. Even a person blessed with a heart that goes out to his fellow men can hardly be blamed for failing to take into account in the course of daily living the privations and suffering which, except in a few favored countries, has become the lot of humanity. . . . Continued misery is not news . . . yet the bitter reality is that two worlds now exist and that the chasm between them is constantly widening. The danger is that it may become unbridgeable."

The situation, plainly, is one that members of our American churches cannot afford to ignore. To allow widespread suffering of this kind to continue without doing all we can to relieve it is to multiply the evils and tragedies of our time. Indifference at this point will not only increase the misery of our fellowmen whose lives and homes have been ravaged by war. It will also take its toll in our own spiritual lives and deepen the feelings of bitterness and frustration that pull the peoples of the world apart.

In view of these continuing physical and material needs among the people of many war-torn lands, and mindful also of our obligations as Christians to be ministers of mercy in the presence of hunger, sickness and privation, we urge the people of our Virginia churches:

(1) To give their support and encouragement as American citizens to the International Emergency Food Council established by the United Nations in May, 1946, and to commend its statesmanlike achievements toward relieving hunger and preventing famine in many of the underfed areas of the world.

(2) To give money as generously as possible through their own denominational channels, through the Virginia Council of Churches, toward the purchase of food and medical supplies for the people of needy nations.

(3) To establish centers in their communities or their local churches where gifts of clothing may be collected and sent to the Church World Service center at New Windsor, Md., or, in the absence of such co-operative ventures, to send bundles of clothing individually to the New Windsor office where they will be sent overseas at once for European relief.

Soviet-American Relations.

No thoughtful American needs to be told that Russia poses for our nation today a gigantic and frightening political problem. A no less sobering fact, however, is that Russia presents also to the American people a tremendous and demanding spiritual challenge as well. In fact the two problems are intimately tied together, and it would not be overpainting the picture to say that whether or not the political problems are to be safely solved for ourselves and the world depends in large measure on how we meet the test in the field of our spiritual attitudes and moral responsibilities.

There is a fatalistic feeling abroad that war between the United States and Russia is almost inevitable. Many honestly believe that the deep difference between our way of life and the Russian way can be solved only by bloody and violent fighting to the finish. Yet if many of our saner and wiser leaders are to be believed—men like former Secretary Byrnes, Senator Vandenburg and Mr. John Foster Dulles—that is by means our only prospect in this field, and war need not come at all if only we are wise enough to use the spiritual and moral weapons that are still within our power to use.

There is a way of dealing with Russia, we believe, which will foster the spirit of enmity and which in time may lead to war. But there is also a way of dealing with Russia that might be called the way of Christian realism—a realism which, if it has no place for blindness, sentimentality or appeasement, also leaves no room for hard-boiled cynicism or fatalistic despair.

To the end that our country may adopt and pursue this better and more realistic course, and to the end that peaceful relations between these two great powers may be maintained, we urge the people of our Virginia churches:

(1) To become as fully informed as possible about Russia and the Russian people. Even when all the facts are in, Russia no doubt will still be seen as a threat to our peace and freedom against which we do well to guard ourselves. But as citizens we need to see that we greatly increase that peril by the needless ill will we arouse by snap judgments and unfounded opinions. In the face of so critical a situation we urge every Christian to recognize as one of his primary duties the moral obligation to be intelligent.

(2) We urge the people of our churches to guard carefully what they say about Russia. Careless talk in this field is one of the chief perils we now confront. The statement so often heard that war between America and Russia is "inevitable" is one, we believe, that is based more on fears than on facts. The Christian citizen who wants to be honest and who believes in the power of friendship will examine carefully all rumors before passing them on, and in general will be scrupulous about what he says, remembering as St. James said, that while the tongue is a "little member," it can set ablaze tremendous fires.

(3) As perhaps our best defense against the spread and threat of communism, we urge that Christian people take the lead in demanding that our country prove its superiority to Russia by the positive practice of our Christian principles and the constructive extension of our democratic freedoms. If, short of another global war, the expansion of Russian paganism is to be checked we must take care to make our American democracy far stronger and more appealing to many underprivileged people around the world than it has been so far. We must wage a battle for justice and fair dealing for the common man in our Christian way no less vigorously than Russia has often waged that battle in her pagan way. We must see to it that our democracy performs exactly what it promises and delivers what it contracts to deliver.

Civil Rights.

One cornerstone of our democracy is what we call our "civil rights." By the letter and spirit of our Constitution these are guaranteed to all our people. To safeguard the health of our body politic, there, it is not enough that we defend the principle of majority rule, but that we also protect in practice the rights and opinions of our minorities. To fail in this basic obligation is to endanger in the end the liberties of all.

Yet, if signs are to be believed, the civil rights of many people in our land today are being seriously threatened. Groups that have little or no respect for the rights of certain minorities are gaining strength in many quarters. Violence, intolerance, misrepresentation and falsehood are being employed as weapons of intimidation and suppression. This is partly due, no doubt, to the aggravated tensions and passions of our post-war world, but this fact should not be allowed to make us any less vigorous in opposing such un-American and un-Christian behavior. Having paid so high a price in money and human life for the preservation of our liberties against enemies from without, it will be the highest folly if we now permit these freedoms to be undermined from within.

Our own state has been fairly free of the outrageous deeds of organizations that march under banners of bigotry and hatred. Yet we cannot rightly assume that all denials of civil rights are perpetrated by secret bands that parade in sheets by night, and the possibility of similar social wrongs in less spectacular fashion near home should keep us eternally vigilant.

In particular, because the church cannot afford to be indifferent to any violation of Christian principles in our social relationships, and because Christian citizens along with others have a large stake in the preservation of our political freedoms, we therefore recommend:

(1) That the Virginia Council of Churches and individuals go on record as condemning all organizations in our country whose aim and purpose is to hinder any American minorities in the exercise of their civil rights, or that seek to persecute or intimidate any groups or individuals because of their race, creed, class, or color.

(2) That if our American Congress sees fit to maintain its Committee on un-American Activities, the Virginia Council of Churches call upon this Committee to be no less concerned to investigate and to expose the un-Americanism of organizations like the Columbians and the Ku Klux Klan—which are definitely akin to fascism—than it is to expose organizations whose subversive activities stem from their communist character.

(3) That the Virginia Council of Churches urge all members of its constituent denominations to be on guard in their own communities against all possible violations of the civil rights of their fellow citizens, and that wherever possible they throw their influence and the influence of their local churches on the side of those forces that seek to uphold for all kinds and classes of Americans their civil rights and constitutional liberties.

Public Welfare in Virginia.

The church of Virginia will wish to follow carefully the study and findings of the Virginia Legislative Commission to Study Public Welfare. This Commission, known as the Mitchell commission in honor of its chairman, Judge G. E. Mitchell, Jr., was created by the 1946 meeting of the legislature and will report to the 1948 meeting. Its assignment is "to make a thorough and complete study of the system of public welfare in Virginia."

Virginians who will follow this study will likely find that as a people, we know far too little of the social services provided by our state. But facts already available show that our present provisions in this field are far from adequate. In fact in the light of our human needs and by comparison with the provisions of other states, our own appear so meager as to be disgraceful.

The following facts can be taken as a fair sample of the total picture. In September, 1946, the 10,762 children who, though living in their own or their relatives' homes, were being supported by public welfare because of the incapacity or absence of their parents received an average of $11.81 a month for their maintenance. In the same month 225 children receiving public care in foster homes received average expenditures of $22.01 each, but there seems good reason to doubt that such amount will pay for a child's care outside his home and reason also to doubt whether 225 children are all who need such (Continued on page 6.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is time now for our churches to demonstrate their evangelistic zeal. An increasingly large number of our churches look toward Easter as a special time of ingathering of new converts and new members. Both rural and city churches are planning to receive new members during the period leading up to Easter and on Easter Sunday. Let us see to it in our Convention that every church makes some net gain in membership this Conference year. Here is calling upon every pastor, and every Sunday school superintendent to lay the winning of souls upon their hearts. Every deacon, and Sunday school teacher is urged to get the inspiration to do some work to win others to the Christ. Every worker and official in the church should join in prayer, and thought, toward that end. It is a shame to have any church in our five conferences report none received. Let us pray daily that there shall be no such report.

If we make this a personal matter it will be effective. If each one of us asks ourselves what can I do to lead someone to Christ and to membership in the church something is going to happen. It will happen in our own hearts, and it will happen in our churches. When we begin to pray about this matter God will answer our prayers and show us the way. He can direct us to both the methods and the persons. He will. One of the best things anyone of us can do is to pray to God asking Him to lead us to win someone else. If we really, daily, earnestly pray that prayer we shall have a revival of evangelism in our Convention.

Some pastors will search their Junior, and Junior High (or Intermediate) rolls to see how many boys and girls there are in their Sunday school who are not yet professed followers of the Christ, and members of the church. They will think about Tommy, and Jimmy, and Mary, and Elizabeth, and will discover that they are on their hearts. Many pastors will gather them together into a delightful group and teach them the meaning of confessing their faith in Jesus Christ, and becoming a member of His Church. They will get a thrill out of it themselves, and they will in many cases learn how delighted both the boys and girls and their parents are to have their children thus taught. I know because for years

I have had that joy. And what is more their teachers, and superintendents will get a spiritual blessing out of it as well. No one who can have a few boys and girls—even two or three—should hesitate to have such an instruction class. There is time. It can be found, and happy is the pastor who finds it. He shall have great reward. Their questions and your answers, and your question and their answers will be an inspiration; and the fellowship is great. It is time now to be forming such a class. Find a way, and help your boys and girls assert their faith.

care in our state. In the fiscal year, July 1945 to July 1946, Virginia provided less for its needy old people than any other state in the Union with one exception. In the month of July 1946, seventy-eight children under sixteen were detained in Virginia jails. In 1944, petitions for the adoption of 772 children were filed in Virginia courts, but of this group 585 of their adoption placements were made without social work services.

Believing that for the sake of the human beings involved and for the good name of our state these conditions ought to be remedied as quickly as possible, we make the following recommendations:

(1) That the Virginia Council of Churches urge the Christian people of the state to take a more active interest in this important social service by becoming better acquainted with our public welfare system as it now exists and by standing ready to support whatever enlargement or improvement of it the conditions and needs of our people demand.

(2) That the Council assure the Mitchell Commission of its deep concern over the public welfare situation in Virginia, its vital interest in the Commission's work, and its hope that the Commission will make available to the people of the state as quickly as possible whatever facts and recommendations are prompted by its "thorough" study.

(3) That the Council call up the people of the state to give to the Mitchell Commission that active citizen support without which its study can hardly be carried through or its recommendations adopted.

Universal Military Training.

Whereas, the adoption of compulsory military training for young men eighteen years of age seriously affects their lives by subjecting them to undue temptation at a time when they need the helpful influence of home, church and school; and

Whereas, compulsory military training has never prevented war in Europe or elsewhere, but has created fear and suspicion, and a race in armaments which has often itself contributed to war; and

Whereas, the adoption of compulsory military training would seriously retard the efforts of the United Nations to secure international agreements looking to permanent world peace; and

Whereas, the adoption of compulsory military training with its attendant goose-stepping and manual of arms is impotent as a means of defense in an atomic age; and

Whereas, the President of the United States has set up an advisory commission which is apparently committed in advance to bringing in a favorable report on compulsory military training since nearly everyone named on the commission is a known partisan of peacetime conscription; and

Whereas, compulsory military training lifts the will of government above the will of God; and

Whereas, it has been demonstrated that enough men can be secured by voluntary enlistment and the need for compulsion is unnecessary, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the department on social action of the Virginia Council of Churches go on record as opposing any form of compulsory military training; and be it further

Resolved, that copies of this resolution be sent to President Truman, to Chairman Chan Gurney, of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and Chairman Walter Andrews, of the House Armed Services Committee; Dr. Carl T. Compton, chairman of the President's advisory commission, and the Virginia members of the United States Senate and House of representatives and to the press.

Now as never before in human history, we must solve the problems of other men and nations, or face a world where we shall be only a part of the ashes. We cannot save our sons without saving China. We shall never know how a defeated Man on a cross conquered a world, until we truly enlarge our hearts.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

TRUSTEES OF OUR COLLEGE ACT.

The mid-year meeting of the Board of Trustees of Elon College was held Tuesday, February 11, at 9:30 A. M. There are thirty-five members of the Board, twenty-three of whom were present for this meeting. There were many questions of vital importance to the college to be answered. Changes in the financial policies of the college were requested. The Committee on Faculty and Budget was authorized to prepare and present to the Board at its annual meeting a financial budget for the ensuing year showing sources and amounts of income and necessary expenditures. It was noted and understood that a budget of this character could in no ways be considered absolute.

The main questions had to do with the campaign and Expansion Program. In consideration of the fact that building cost has increased so greatly since the plans for expansion were adopted it was voted to request the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches to allow the goal for the campaign to be increased from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. The Board pledged itself to work earnestly to secure this amount.

The present power house and equipment are old, insufficient, and in a bad state of repairs. A resolution authorizing the Building Committee to proceed with the construction of the power house and the installation of necessary equipment was passed, and in the event there was not enough money in hand to do this work, to borrow the amount necessary to complete the job.

It was pointed out that this was necessary if the school was to continue. The matter of borrowing caused considerable discussion. It was finally voted, however, with the understanding that the present facilities might be reconditioned instead if it should be deemed preferable. There were two who voted against the resolution and requested that they be recorded in the opposition.

It was reported that a total of $211,414.88 had been raised in cash and signed pledges, $148,243.02 of which is in cash. In addition, $21,800 has been pledged by churches for which there are no signed pledges. A number of churches have obligated themselves to pay their quota over a term of years. Even though these pledges have not been signed it is believed that they will be paid.

The churches of the Southern Convention that have not raised their voluntary quotas for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation were urged to do so during this college year that the work of the college may continue to go forward without too great a financial handicap.

The faculty foundation authorized three years ago was completed. Under the terms of the foundation the faculty member contributes two and one-half per cent of his salary monthly and the college contributes a like amount. A board of trustees to handle the funds was elected. A. L. Hook, G. A. Johnson and L. E. Smith were elected to represent the faculty; V. R. Holt and W. C. Elder were elected to represent the Board of Trustees. These five trustees of the foundation will be charged with the responsibility of handling and investing funds of the faculty foundation. The trustees are to determine rules and regulations by which allowances are to be made. This marks a definite step forward for the college and faculty.

In view of the large number of veterans enrolled in Elon College and the college's limited facilities, the Government has allotted to the college additional housing facilities for recreational and instructional purposes. We are to receive a recreational building with basketball court for intramural sports and physical education courses, and a cafeteria building. This equipment is to be secured from the War Assets Administration at a 95 per cent reduction. We are to receive also an airplane hangar with laboratory space, this building to house airplanes and parts to be used for instruction in aviation. It was voted to accept these buildings with due appreciation.

These forward steps taken by the Board for the college will require money in considerable sums. It is hoped and urged that our people interested and concerned for the continuous progress of the college will respond readily and generously.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Elon College is encouraged by the continuous support from the churches and Sunday schools of our Convention. From the standpoint of the total amount reported this week our report is good but from the standpoint of the number of contributions the report is disappointing. Our Newport News Church sends $325, its total apportionment for the year. This certainly is generous and helpful. Our Newport News Church has been paying its apportionment in advance for a number of years. The good people of this church may be depended upon to do their share as are by far the greater number of our churches. If our Sunday schools would approve and put into effect the Convention's plan, it would mean much to the Sunday schools and churches themselves. Our college, its contributions and needs should be constantly before our people that they may be encouraged to give generous support. The college is most appreciative of this assistance.

memory we now bow before Thee. May we know that in the body and out of the body they are with Thee, and that when these earthly days come to an end, it is not that our service of Thee and one another may cease but that it may begin anew. Make us glad in all who have faithfully loved; make us glad in all who have devotedly lived and died. Lift us into light and love and purity and blessedness, and give us at last our portion with those who have trusted in Thee, and sought, by small things as in great, in things temporal and things eternal, to do Thy holy will. MISSIONARIES SAIL.

Nine Congregational Christian missionaries sailed on the third voyage of the Marine Lynx February 14 from San Francisco bound for service in China under the American Board. Five of these Congregational Christian workers are new missionaries going out for their first term of foreign service. In this group are:

Miss Mary Reed Dewar, R.N., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Blanchard Dewar, 17 Davis Avenue, East Orange, New Jersey, bound for Peiping, North China. "It is not only our duty but our privilege and pleasure as Christians to promote better personal relationships between men and women, black, white, rich or poor. I like working with people. Friends are the most important thing to me. There is only one way to make and keep them—by practicing the Golden Rule," said Miss Dewar on the eve of sailing. Active in young people's work both in the Congregational churches and in the YMCA, Miss Dewar has devoted many of her summers to youth conferences and daily Vacation Bible School work. She is a talented violinist, having played at one time under Jose Iturbi in the New Jersey State Orchestra at Atlantic City.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Allen Thompson of West Hartford, Connecticut; Milton, Massachusetts; and Indiana, Pennsylvania, bound for Foochow, China. Mr. Thompson is the son of Mrs. Mary L. Thompson, 33 Houston Avenue, Milton, Massachusetts. He was educated at New England Conservatory of Music, Boston University, University of Michigan and Harvard University. This is not his first experience of life in the Orient since he taught music at the Kodaikanal School for missionary children in India for four years. Mrs. Thompson is the daughter of William G. Holstein, 140 S. 11th St., Indiana, Pennsylvania. She was educated at Columbia University Graduate School, Indiana State Teachers' College and the University of Michigan, and formerly did social work in the Hiram House settlement in Cleveland, Ohio, and Religious Education work for Indiana County, Pennsylvania, Rev. and Mrs. David M. Stowe of Berkeley, California, bound for Peiping, North China. The Stowes flew to the Hawaiian Islands on February 10, but will join the Marine Lynx in Honolulu. Mr. and Mrs. Stowe have been Directors of Plymouth House, the student center connected with the First Congregational Church of Berkeley, California. Mr. Stowe is the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Stowe of Santa Monica, California, and was educated at Midland College, the University of California and the Pacific School of Religion. Mrs. Stowe is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold A. Ware of Alhambra, California, and was educated at Occidental College, Los Angeles. With a brilliant future as a teacher and writer prophesied by his professors, Mr. Stowe decided to go into foreign Christian service because he believes that "missions are the firing line of working Christianity and in them human need and Christian commitment meet and match each other." It was at Pasadena, California, where Mr. Stowe served as the summer pastor in 1943, that he met his future wife, Virginia Ware. He was student assistant during his seminary training to Dr. H. F. Burr. Mr. and Mrs. Stowe are the missionary representatives in China of the Piedmont Congregational Church, Piedmont, California, and the Central Congregational Church in Honolulu, Hawaii.

Experienced Congregational missionaries returning to their fields include:

Albert L. Faurot, Missionary of Music, son of Rev. Ira N. Faurot, Smith Center, Kansas, returning to Foochow, China to join the Music Department of a union Christian university. Mr. Faurot, an accomplished concert pianist and teacher, was in China during the recent war years and worked with his Chinese students through periods of disaster and deprivation when Foochow College, with which he was associated, took refuge in interior Ingtau. On his return to Foochow, Mr. Faurot will join the Music Department of a combined united Christian university, still in the process of organization which will include Fukien University, Hwa Nan College and the Theological School. A graduate of Park College, Parkville, Missouri, Mr. Faurot became assistant in the Music Department as well as director of his college band. He furthered his study of music in Kansas City, appearing at one time as student soloist with the Kansas City Little Symphony. During furloughs Mr. Faurot has studied piano in London with Dr. Tobias Matthay and on this last furlough took special study in piano and voice in New York City. His thesis on Chinese music is being published by his alma mater.

Miss Anne B. Kelley of 511 Bonson Street, Waupun, Wisconsin, is bound for her post as a teacher in Bridgman Academy for Girls, Peiping, North China. Miss Kelley is a graduate of Beloit College and the University of Wisconsin. She taught in the United States for a time before going to China under the American Board for the first time in 1918. Miss Kelley is the sister of J. H. Kelley, 3924 E. Burnside Street, Portland, Oregon.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert C. Hausske of Chicago, Illinois, are returning to Peiping, North China. Mr. Hausske who is a layman, has worked in China during periods of war, famine and flood, including a period in occupied China during the recent World War. He has been business manager and treasurer to two hospitals and of other mission institutions and during his most recent period of service was comptroller of Yenching University, during its exile in Chengtu, Free China. Mrs. Hausske has specialized in work with Chinese mothers and children especially along the lines of diet and health. She has served with the National Christian Council of China on its Homes Committee and her posters were used to publicize National Child Welfare throughout China.

THE TASK OF PARENTHOOD.

By MRS. ROBERT M. KIMBALL,
Family Life Superintendent.

A number of years ago in a Young People's Summer Conference I heard a story entitled "A Worker in Ivory." I do not know the author of the story, but the message has lingered with me through the years. It certainly offers an inspiration and a challenge to all those who at times find the task of parenthood and homemaking a bit difficult:

In a quaint village far up in the mountains of Switzerland lived an old man who had spent his life working in ivory. His hair was as white as the ivory flowers he was making; his shoulders were bent; but his eyes were bright, and his hands were sure as he used the tiny tools in fashioning the petals of the different flowers. In his windows were daisies, violets, edelweiss and buttercups which he had made for sale.

One day a visitor was choosing six of his flowers to take to the girls of her Sunday school class in America. As she placed them against the soft velvet of her dress they seemed so real that she exclaimed enthusiastically, "They are perfect, just perfect. How can you make them so?"

"No, lady," was his reply. "They are not perfect. I wish I could make one perfect one. I have been trying for thirty years to make one like God makes them out of doors, but something is always a little bit wrong. When I bring His in, mine seem imperfect. But I have honestly tried, and it is worthwhile giving one's life in trying to make a perfect thing, don't you think so?"

The lady took the pins and carried them to America, trying her best to give to her class of girls the message and spirit of the man from the mountains of Switzerland.

In a beautiful home in New York today there is a mother who is known to all her friends as a wonderful mother. Life has not been easy for her, but she has made it beautiful. One day when a friend asked her how she could be patient and courteous under very trying conditions, she went to her room and brought out a little edelweiss pin made of ivory. Fastening it to her dress, she said, "You have often seen me wear this pin. It is one of my treasures. When I was fifteen years old my teacher brought it to me from Switzerland, and she told me the story of a man who worked in ivory and made these pins for sale. He said to her, 'It is worthwhile giving one's life in trying to make a perfect thing.' All these years that sentence has been a challenge to me. I cannot be a perfect mother, I cannot hope to have perfect children or a perfect home; but I want to do the best that I can. I am willing to give my time and strength to try to make a beautiful life. Mine seems very imperfect, but I am trying."

So the ivory worker of Switzerland helped a teacher mould a life when she gave his message with his edelweiss.

I would like to call your attention to a number of excellent pamphlets which have been published recently by the Division of Christian Education of the Congregational Christian Churches, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts:

"Ten Suggestions for Enriching Family Life."

"Helping Your Child to Know God."

"Helping Your Child to Pray."

"Helping Your Child to Know the Bible."

"Helping Your Children Form Christian Standards."

"Let's Worship Together in the Family."

"The Family Cooperative—How One Family Planned to Share Its Income."

"Conversation Counts."

"Parents, First Teachers of Religion."

"This Family Is Achieving Something."

All of these pamphlets are 2c each or $1.00 for a hundred copies.

I think it would be an excellent thing if every church in the Convention would make these pamphlets available to their members.

We might all try the plan used in the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C. Very attractive folders were made in which these pamphlets were enclosed and distributed personally to the families of the church and church school. This would be a most worthy project for every Women's Society.

* * * * *

I am wondering if our ministers have seen the little booklet published by the Division of Christian Education entitled, "Your First Week Together," by George William Brown and Ruth McAfee Brown. It contains personal devotions for a young couple during their first week of married life. Here is something a minister might like to give to each couple he marries along with the marriage certificate.

THE PERIOD UP TO EASTER.

The church's busiest and best season is just ahead of us. Let us make it a time of increased attendance on Sunday school and church services; let us make it a time when new members are received into our church; and a time when we are all experiencing a deeper consecration to the Christ, and a greater giving of ourselves to Him. The world needs good Christians so much. It needs our prayers, our faith, our witnesses and our works. "Let us tighten up our spiritual belts," and be more faithful to Him.—From Suffolk Bulletin.

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

The Sunday after you read this page will be the first Sunday in Lent. A season in which we examine ourselves; repent of our sins and strive to overcome them; when some of us do without "the trimmings" and put what they would have cost us into our piggy banks for China or some other needy field.

I imagine that Richard and Dorothy Jackson are arriving on their chosen field of service in China during these first days of Lent. I wish that all of us would remind ourselves anew that we have pledged them our support back here in the Southern Convention. Let us not only support them with our money but also with our thoughts and prayers. Write letters to them. Letters will mean so much when they are so far away and in a strange new land. You know how glad you are to get letters when you are just away for a week in camp. Well, then, you can get some idea of how much more it would mean to you if you were so far away for such a long stay!

I find that there are still some people who feel that we should keep our money here at home for Home Mission work only! I can't see how anyone could feel thus after our American boys have come home from service to tell us that many of them owe their lives to the good work of our foreign missionaries. Last night I heard a young Jewish Rabbi say, "You know when I'm happiest? It's when I forget myself, lose myself in service for others!" Christ told his followers that they who would find life must lose it. He meant just what the Rabbi said. If we will try to see how completely we can lose ourselves in the work at Shaowu, China, with the Jacksons, then we will not have time to worry about our little petty cares here in our own communities. Our lives will become broader and taller as we reach out to China and look up to God, the Father of us all, in prayer for troubled China and our Christian laborers there. Let us remember Shaowu during Lent!

PRAYER OF PENITENCE FOR LENT.

"O God, we, thy children, come to Thee in penitence, for we have done the things that we ought not to have done, and have left undone the things that we ought to have done, and we need thy forgiveness.

"We pray to Thee, who art gracious and merciful, to give us a new mind, that we may turn from all evil ways, from words that ought not to be spoken, from thoughts that are alien to Thy kingdom, and from deeds that are done without love; and may find new life in Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

WORK BEFORE PLAY.

By LOUISE PRICE BELL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"I'll be out in a minute," called Patty from the kitchen door. "I've only a few more dishes to wipe."

"Come on! Leave the old dishes," suggested Joan, Patty's best friend and next-door neighbor. "Hurry, or we'll be late for the beginning of the show!" Joan sounded rather cross.

"Oh, we'll be there all right; we'll dash," replied Patty. "This is my job, and I have to do it. If you want to help me, go for my purse—it's on my dresser; I'll be ready by the time you get back." With that, the little girl started rinsing out the dish towels.

The above incident really occurred. Now, don't think Patty is an angelic youngster. She gets into scraps with her brother, spills things quite often, and is sometimes forgetful. But one thing she has learned, and this is that her work—whatever it may be—must be done before she may have her recreation.

Patty's mother started very early to cultivate this idea in her little girl's mind. The younger the child when an idea is planted, the firmer are its roots. All wise mothers teach their children that before they may have the freedom of play they must take care of any duties that are theirs. To a tiny child, this might mean picking up scattered blocks before starting on a new play activity. To older children, it might mean practicing music lessons, sweeping porches, making beds, or—as in the case of Patty—washing the lunch dishes on the days when there is no school.

This "work before play" is, perhaps, another way of saying, "First things first"—a maxim everyone agrees is good. In any case, its practice makes a valuable asset for the child whose mother has helped him to form the habit. It becomes an attitude of mind and fits its possessor for adult life in a most satisfactory manner, so far as that phase of living is concerned. If mothers will commence helping children early enough, children will automatically and naturally learn to do the important tasks they have been given without once thinking of playing first. Patty no more thought of considering her friend's suggestion of leaving the dishes unwashed than she thought of not going to the movie they they had both looked forward to seeing.

Little Betty has not formed this habit. When she starts playing jacks with some of her friends, it is a real task to get her in and at the piano where she should be practicing her music lesson. In all homes where music is an important consideration and one or more members of the family are taking lessons, the practicing should be done at the earliest time in the day that is available. It is not a bad idea for Mother to say, "Peggy, as soon as you have finished with your practicing, I think we'll go and call on Aunt Mary and little Anna." This is an incentive, not a bribe in any case. When such a call is not possible, a hot drink on a cold day, or a cold one on the porch on a warm day, makes a delightful ending to a period of practicing.

A thoughtful mother will plan to have something pleasant follow the completion of any tiresome or difficult piece of work. She will not dramatize it, nor always tell her child about it in advance. The mere fact that something enjoyable usually comes at the end of a trying task will cause the two to become so closely associated in a child's mind that the enjoyment will begin long before the task is ended.

The church opens the only main highway into the past which most of us travel with any frequency. Associated with it are the noblest traditions of the human race. It brings us to prophets who discovered the nature and will of God; psalmists who wrote the greatest of all books of lyric poetry; a Saviour in whom God lived; martyrs who died for the faith; Pilgrims who helped plant the faith on a new continent; a host without number of our fathers in the faith who wrought righteousness in every age.

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

BAY VIEW.

The primary feature of "Youth Week" at Bay View was a supper given the young people on Thursday night, by the Woman's Fellowship of the church. The women sent and brought covered dishes of vegetables and meat loaf. Ice cream and cookies were served for dessert. The women left out no detail in order to provide the young people with a real wholesome and inviting meal.

For two and one-half hours after the meal the young people were led in games by Mrs. W. M. Fisher. There were about twenty young people in attendance.

ROSEMONT.

"Youth Week" was appropriately observed by the young people of the Rosemont Christian Church on Sunday night, February 2, at which time they took over the evening service of worship and conducted it in a superbly worshipful and deeply reverent manner.

The service was ably led by Tommy Liverman who also made the principle address of the evening, taking as his subject, "A Faith Worth Sharing." After speaking of the sixty-sixth birthday of Christian Endeavor he launched out upon the six objectives of the United Christian Youth Movement, making a strong appeal for more of our youth to give their lives in Christian service through the youth program of the church. His splendid message was very well received by the large number of young people present, their parents, and others, who listened attentively.

Other young people participating in the service were: Betty Williams, who gave a poem, entitled "God's Dreams;" Billy Neill, who read the Old Testament lesson, Psalm 104:24-30; Betty Lou Boyette, who led the congregation in evening prayer; and Dot Spencer, who read the New Testament lesson, John 3:16-21. Don Liverman, Henry Hodges, Roy Spencer and Ray Morrison acted as ushers during the service and received the evening offering.

Special music for the service was furnished by the Portlock High School Glee Club, under the direction of Miss Martin of the High School faculty. The Glee Club rendered two very beautiful selections, "The Lost Cord" and "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross."

At the close of the service the expressions on the faces of the parents showed clearly that they were proud of their sons and daughters. And that same expression of satisfaction and joy on the faces of other members of Rosemont Christian Church denoted that they were proud of their young people's society.

THE NATIONAL PRESIDENT SPEAKS.

Church leaders of young people today must show American youth how to live as Christians now, rather than spending so much time trying to save their souls for a future life in heaven, declared James Young of Chicago, national president of the Pilgrim Fellowship, during a panel discussion in the Monday morning session of the young people's work section of the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education in Grand Rapids, Mich.

Pleading for study materials that will teach the Christian implications of problems of young people today, such as atomic warfare, anthropology, conscription, and geopolitics, Mr. Young said that the church must help youth to live their Christianity, instead of talking so much about their souls.

Christian principles must be instilled into the lives of school and secular youth organization leaders if the future of the church is to be secure, stated Harvey Lord of Little Rock, Arkansas, national chairman of the United Christian Youth Movement and a student at Union Theological Seminary, New York, in giving his views on the panel topic, "What Do Young People Say?" He decried the lack of opportunity for expression of a "gang" spirit in church youth organizations, which meet "only on Sundays in separate denominational camps."

Although words exist for the most part for the transmission of ideas, there are some which produce such violent disturbance in our feelings that the role they play in the transmission of ideas is lost in the background.—Albert Einstein.

JESUS SUMS UP HIS CLAIMS.

LESSON IX—MARCH 2, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself.—John 12:32.

LESSON: John 12:12-50; Mark 11:1-10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 2.

Behold Thy King!

In some ways He did not look like a king, making his entry into the capital city of the nation. He did not have on any royal garments, he did not have any royal attendants, he was not riding in a royal equipage—that is a sixty-four dollar word meaning a royal carriage or chariot, he did not have a military guard or secret police—there was nothing that smacked of royalty according to the standards of the day. He was dressed in a simple, flowing costume, there was a crowd of humble folks going along with him, and he was riding on—"believe it or not"—the foal of an ass, an humble beast of burden which did not have on any royal trappings.

But he was a King. Royal blood flowed through his veins. He had descended from the seed of David, one of God's great kings. There was a royal look on his face—he looked every inch a King although he was not dressed as one. He was a King, the one who is destined to be "King of Kings and the Lord of Lords." He was the Son of God, God's Crown Prince, asserting His Kingship and proclaiming his Messiahship. That is the significance of the "Triumphal Entry" as it is called.

His action and his attitude on this occasion was suggestive and significant. As Dean Brown with characteristic insight puts it, Jesus laid his hands on a piece of property. He entered the capital city of the nation, he went to the place of worship, he visited the place of instruction, and at the end of the day, he went into a home. What a world of difference it would make in the life of the world, if property were held sacred to the Master's use, if the political, the religious, the educational, and the domestic areas of life were brought under the sway of his spirit and transformed by his presence!

Jesus Christ is King. He proclaimed and inaugurated the Kingdom of God. The Kingdom is both present and future. We do not yet see all things put under his feet. But ultimately the kingdoms of this world will become the Kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, and he will be crowned King of Kings and Lord of Lords and he shall rule forever. Even so Lord Jesus come!

The Greeks Seek Jesus.

Among those who came up to Jerusalem to worship were certain Greeks evidently proselytes to the faith of Judaism. They came to Philip and said, "Sir, we would see Jesus." It was an echo of the search of the Wise Men who at his birth came seeking him who had been born King of the Jews. The Greeks sought wisdom, they stand for intellectual insight. But they were consciously or unconsciously voicing the sentiments and aspirations of the intelligentia—another sixty-four dollar word meaning the educated—and bearing witness to the fact that mere education, mere intelligence, no matter how high and pure do not answer the hunger of the heart.

And here again Andrew is the man who is "Johnnie on the spot." It was he who found his brother and brought him to Jesus. It was he who called attention to the lad in the midst with the barley loaves and the fishes. And now it is he who brings the Greeks to Christ. Our modern world needs a host of Andrews who can point honest seekers after the Christ to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world. And this Lenten Season is a good time to be about this phase of the Master's business.

Life Through Death.

"Except a corn or grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Every farmer and amateur gardener knows how true this is. There can be no new seed unless the seed that is planted dies. But if it dies there springs up new life, and the seed that dies finds its life in a fuller, richer way. There is an expression of this natural law in the spiritual world. He that saves his life surely loses it. But he that loses his life for others finds and saves it. We are coming to the Lenten Season which culminates in the Tragedy of the Cross and the Triumph of the Empty Tomb. Here is drawn out in living letters the truth of these words of Jesus.

A Voice or Thunder?

"The people therefore that stood by and heard it, said that it thundered; and others said, An angel spake unto him." There was a voice all right, it spoke distinctly to those who had ears to hear. But to others there was only the vague and perhaps the ominous rumbling of thunder. Just before the French Revolution there were what the aristocrats thought was simply thunder, the rumbling of the discontents and the dispossessed, but it was the voice of the common man and of democracy speaking in words that later became terrible in their implications. There are many sounds today which to many seem like mere thunder. But may it not be that they are the voice of God as He seeks to make known His will and His way for humankind. Blessed is the man that hath ears to hear what the Spirit saith.

The Magnetic Cross.

"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself." They are the words of Jesus. And John adds that Jesus spake them by way of signifying what death he would die. They were prophetic. The Cross is a magnetic Cross. The hymn writer was right when he said "that old rugged Cross, so despised by the world, has a wondrous attraction for me." There is something about it that attracts men to it. There is dark mystery about it, there is even something about it that at times repels us, but always we turn longingly and trustingly to it again for the answer to life's ultimate questions, and for the healing of our hurts and the hunger of our hearts. That Cross tells of the awfulness of human sin, of the boundless love of God, of the fact that God suffers for our sins, and of the redemptive power of vicarious suffering and sacrifice. Truly, when a man beholds the wondrous Cross on which the Prince of Glory died, his richest gain he counts but loss and pours contempt on all his pride.

Anyone who has faced real danger in war or peace is said to be a fool or a liar if he claims that he was not afraid. Like the disciples, we have fled into dreams, absorption in work or pleasure, or into cynicism. We do not apologize for our failures but find strength in God to discipline the impulse to flee. Finding it, we dare say that he whose knees have not literally shaken while his heart drove him forward into danger, has something to learn. He will know Jesus better when he has learned it.

BOUND, BUT REFUSING FREEDOM.

By BERNARD V. MUNGER, Minister,

Providence Church,
Graham, N. C.

Jesus said: "As the Father has taught me, so I speak." . . . "As for you, if you hold fast to my teaching, then you are truly my disciples; and you shall know the Truth, and the Truth shall make you free." To this the people replied: "Come now, what do you mean by an offer of freedom? We are descendants of Abraham—we have never been in bondage." Then Jesus said: "I tell you, everyone who commits sin, is in bondage. I know that you are descendants of Abraham, and it is for that very reason that my teaching offends you and gains no ground with you! You are more concerned with who you are, than with whose will you are doing! If you were God's children, doing God's will, then would your deeds show it, and you would listen to my words. But, because you can not stand my teaching, I declare that you are children of Satan, for it is his lies that you follow."

That was the Scripture reading for the morning. I believe it is highly pertinent to our day, and our situation. The essence of it is this: Jesus came teaching and offering the people freedom from their bondage. They drew themselves up in pride, and said: "Sir, do you know who we are? We've never been in bondage." And so, in self-satisfaction they denied their bondage, and were indifferent to his offer of freedom. Today I want to suggest that what happened then is now happening amongst us! It is quite possible that when we draw ourselves up to full height, and say, "We're Southerners" that we're making the same response that those Hebrews did long ago. It is just quite possible that when Jesus comes to us and confronts us with the demands of His teachings and says that in following them we shall find freedom, we are so interested in declaring who we are, that we don't really know that there is a right good bit of bondage bound up in the very reply we make, "We're Southerners." So, I want to bring you a description of the things that I think should be included in any definition of the meaning of "We're Southerners." But, before I say another word, I want that you should know that I'm not interested in making comparisons! I will let other parts of the country speak their own opinions, what I want to do is to share what I believe is an honest description of what is included in being part of the South.

First, we are in bondage to circumstances we didn't create. We are the descendants of people who discovered long ago that cotton and tobacco could be profitably grown here if there were plenty of cheap labor. Our forefathers then went out by force and got that labor. They brought Negroes here for their own profit! They trafficked in human flesh, for the purpose of profiting on those they bought, sold, and worked. And, never in our country's history has there followed such a clear visitation of the sins of the fathers upon the children. . . . There came the War Between the States with its useless slaughter of a half-million men! Then came the impoverishment of the South. Then followed a legacy of hatred, prejudice, hardship, and discrimination which is still with us. So, when we say "We're Southerners" we should not forget that it includes being part of a people who are in bondage to a heritage of circumstances that we didn't create—but from which we have not escaped!

It also means that we are in bondage to a tradition of segregation and injustice. Out of that disastrous and devastating war came a new and terrible problem: what to do with the millions of black freedmen in the South! The solution has been segregation. It's woven deep into all of our customs, and is written into our laws. And, to it, we have added a long, long heritage of injustice. So, to be a Southerner means, among other things, to be in bondage to a tradition of segregation and injustice—a tradition which was working and deep-set before we ever arrived on the scene.

Also, to be from the South means to be part of that section of our country which has suffered more than any other part from bondage to a system of economic exploitation! The men of the South who had lived and waxed rich on an economic system that exploited the men and women who slaved for them—didn't change after the Civil War. They only turned their exploitation upon all who labored, no matter what their color! Numerous are the Southern men who have made riches from the sweat and poverty of those who worked for them! And then this became nationally known, and greedy Northern money-seekers rushed in, and sought to get rich, the same way: by exploiting at long hours, low wages, and in bad conditions, those who worked for them, on farm, or in the mills. To be a Southerner is to be a person sharing in bondage to an almost savage system of economic exploitation which has only recently begun to change.

Consequent upon these are other bondages which we suffer in the South. To be a Southerner means to suffer from the bondage of ignorance! By and large the schools of the South have been pitifully supported by the wealthy few who didn't really care whether the youth of the South ever got an education. They felt that you didn't need an education to pick cotton, raise tobacco, or work long hours in a mill! And so has come a bondage of ignorance in which we all share. . . . But, there is a still more pertinent ignorance. It is the ignorance that we all have toward the lives and thoughts and hopes and loves and fears of the whole host of Negro men, women, and children whom we have shut up in their "places" by segregation! You never get to know people you don't associate with on a personal basis. You can't really know a person whose life you can't share! I've heard too many of you say that Providence has long needed a minister who really gets to know his people: by living with them, eating with them, sharing in their activities, going where they work and play! Well, if a minister must do that to know his people, and I believe he should, why do we expect to be "in the know" concerning our Negro brethren whom we have shut up to themselves. To be a Southerner is to be one who is in bondage to this ignorance which follows upon segregation!

Time does not permit me to elaborate on two other bondages which are ours: the bondage of fear—and the bondage of demagoguery. Out of poverty and ignorance grow fear, and these three combined are the stuff of which cheap-coniving politicians make capital, in their drive for power.

I must pass on to a greater bondage which is ours as Southerners. We are forced to be hypocritical! We speak of our religiousness, our respect for law, and our Americanism. But, our speaking is hypocritical because we've kept so many black men and women and children from enjoying the blessings of our religion, our law, and our Americanism! Democracy

Dear Friends

There are two things that I always try to keep on my desk. One is the Bible. Somehow when I have my Bible close by so I can put my hand on it at any time, I feel closer to the Master. Some say the Bible is a dull book. I don't feel it so; I find it a very interesting one, and I enjoy reading it. The more I read the Bible the deeper meaning I get from its truth.

It is a pity so many of our younger boys and girls think of the Bible as a dull book. I well remember when I was a small boy how my Sunday school teacher tried to impress upon us the importance of memorizing verses of Scripture. She has long since gone to be with her Savior, but the memory of that saintly woman and the Bible verses she taught me still lingers in my mind. Her kind influence has followed me all down through the years to this very day. Many of the verses I learned then are the ones I remember still.

Then I like to have a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, our church paper, on my desk. I like to read Dr. John G. Truitt's sermon and also his Suffolk Letter which is always interesting. I like to read Dr. Hardeastle's comments on the Sunday school lessons. I like to read Brother House's editorials. I like to read Dr. Smith's letters about the college. In fact, I enjoy the entire paper.

Some years ago when I had charge of the subscription list, I considered THE SUN's subscribers as a great big family. When a subscriber dropped off my list, it gave me a pain around my heart; and when I could add a new subscriber, it made my heart rejoice. I learned to love each and every one and considered all as members of one big family. Subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and then when it comes to your home, read it and you will benefit therefrom.

racy, religion, and the American dream all have a high place for respect for the integrity and value of the individual personality. Yet, our segregated, unjust way of life casts a stigma upon individual personalities because of their color, and denies them the freedom of movement and participation in common life, so essential to democracy, true religion, and the true American way. Thus, our whole life is shot through with hypocrisy.

This gives the sensitive Southerner a guilty conscience, to which he is in bondage. It is this guilty conscience that hounds us and makes us so sensitive when criticized! If someone criticizes the way we talk or dress or eat, we laugh it off. But, if someone criticizes the way we treat the Negroes, we get mad! Why? Well, we don't have a guilty conscience about our speech or dress. But, we do have concerning our hypocrisy, injustice, and and impersonalism toward Negroes. It is that which makes the matter so disturbing to us!

Against all of these things, we must see the bondage of prejudice. Prejudice would be a simple matter were it not bound up so tightly with these other things. But, once get prejudice buttressed and strengthened by these matters, and it becomes terrific—stubbornly resistant to all attacks upon it. That is why talks on race-prejudice are most of them meaningless—for they fail to see prejudice in its place—fed by, strengthened by, and made necessary by these things which put us in bondage!

That is why Jesus, when He strikes at the roots of prejudice, seeks to transform the whole man, and thereby get rid of prejudice. He offers a solution which makes its attack upon all of these problems by transforming the whole man—and creating a new man who, just because he's new, becomes a part of the solution, instead of a part of the problem! Jesus comes to us offering us teachings and transformation, and He says this means freedom. How tragic it is, then, that we refuse to listen to him, because we don't face up to our bondage. . . .

For purposes of self-defense, we deny our bondage. Instead of viewing the past as something to be overcome, to be delivered from, we too often speak and act as if it were something we could trust, and be proud of! Instead of viewing segregation as the bondage it is, we call it the only possible solution, and a satisfactory solution which shouldn't be questioned. That's why we're so puzzled when the Federal Council of Churches, the United Council of Church Women, the Home Missions Council, our own, and other denomination councils not only question it, but condemn it! . . . In like manner, we take so readily to the spoon-feeding of our exploiters with their press and radio, that we readily deny our bondage to the economic system of which we are a part, and add to the confusion by calling any who offer to help us "agitators" or "communists!" . . . And, take our ignorance about the Negro. We deny that outrightly. We know the Negro, we say. He is a happy-go-lucky, lazy, shiftless, dirty, thieving, no-good who is contented with his lowly condition and quite servile to the whites unless stirred up by agitators. He is alright, we say, when he's in his place, but out of it, he's in for trouble, for he is mentally and morally our inferior. That's how we deny our ignorance concerning the Negro. And that's how men in high position amongs us deny their ignorance, and at the same time show it. Take Senator Hoey, for instance, because he has spoken so authoritatively about the happiness and contentment of the North Carolina Negro. Ask him questions, and by the obvious answers which you can give for him, see how little he really knows about the Negro: Has Senator Hoey ever ridden in the back seat of a crowded bus—hot with the weather and the motor-heat, the air filled with exhaust smoke, and bouncing around like the tail of a kite? If not, then he is ignorant of how it feels to be shut-tled back there and to be expected to like it! Or has Senator Hoey ever gotten off the bus and watched the white people go into a fairly decent restaurant—and then has he had to go to a little uninviting sidehole on the outside of the same restaurant, and order his food through that hole, and get it handed out to him, through a hole? Well, if not, he has little right to speak as if he were anything but ignorant of how it feels to be a Negro in North Carolina.

So we could continue, to show how we deny our bondage to fear, and our bondage to our demagogues. But let us pass right on to our denial of our bondage to our hypocrisy. We really like to make others believe that we mean it when we say "Separate and equal facilities!" What a hypocritical bit of language that is, especially when we won't let anybody but ourselves define the word equal! We've been so busy making sure that the facilities are separate, that we've made the word "equal" just a description of something that doesn't exist! We deny our hypocrisy so readily! We even deny that we are hypocrites concerning our religion—but that we can only deny by such an obvious twisting of the whole matter, that we usually don't want that matter touched upon by religious men who speak to us! Which, of course, makes it easier for us to deny our guilty conscience! We tell ourselves, over and over again, that we're really doing the best we can. And, that, after all, we like the Negro, in his place! Just as if any person, or group of persons, has a right to assign a "place" to any other person or group of persons!

By now you may be bored, irritated, or offended. I hope you are aware of the fact that the old Scripture story has its modern application. We are in bondage, and we deny our bondage. And just for that reason we are indifferent to anything Jesus Christ could offer by way of freedom. Surely we must be indifferent to what Jesus offers, or we'd have accepted his offer long ago and have become part of the solution to these problems we've been speaking about!

When Jesus comes to us, offering teachings that are true, and because true, the the pathway to freedom, we are indifferent to his teaching and his offer. He begins by transforming lives—and transformed lives bring the changes that we need so much. He asks that we recognize our bondage, want deliverance from our bondage, and are willing that He should have His way with us! And right then, He and His Church, when it is truly His Church, offer us what we need most of all—a new beginning! That's his first good news. That we can have the opportunity of putting behind us those things that are past—and looking forward to the future—His future. It is in Him that we can learn to stop defending the past, and start adjusting ourselves to the future. Also, Jesus offers us His Father's House as the one place in the South where segregation can easily be banished and fellowship established. It's being done very many places—here in the South. I've been part of it in Franklinton, Durham, and Raleigh—I know it's happening.

Jesus also has the solution to the other ills—the freedom from those other bondages. He offers the possibility of transformed lives. And, lives that He transforms come to have a different economic outlook! They know His Truth about cooperation, service, and stewardship. That, you see, is the only real solution to the exploiting economic system which has so many of us in bondage. . . . And those who exploit us know that, even if we don't. They are already shouting loudly that the Church, when it takes Christ seriously, is dangerous; when it gets serious about putting Kingdom business before all other business, personality before profits, and service before success! That's what transformed lives think about economics—and such lives, loyally at work in Christ's Church, can not be satisfied until others think and act the same way!

Oh that I had time to say more about Jesus' offer of love to cast out fear! Love of brother dispels fear, his fear, and our fear. And loving trust in God makes us willing to trust that God's way of love—is the way—the way of triumph!

Jesus also offers that deeper cure which takes away our need for hypocrisy and our guilty conscience. We are hypocritical only because we want to make an impression. But, Jesus is here to show us that we needn't try to make an impression on God. He knows us for what we are—and Good News!—He'll take us as we are, and love us, and offer us forgiveness and a new chance in life!

Too little time is left to say what should be said about this freedom that comes when we take Jesus' teachings seriously—and seek, by His power, to live in accordance with His Way. Only this should be added: we're not in it alone! It was the burden of last Sunday's sermon that Jesus is in this kind of work too. And, His Church is hard at it, in many places! There are many churches with many church members who have accepted Jesus' guidance, and His power, and are seeking to live transformed lives. These people are willing to share their experience of freedom and victory with us—if we'll only take the time to give them an audience.

They have a stirring story to tell, too. It is the story of moving out from under this bondage I've described—and into the freedom Christ offers—freedom to live with other people as brothers—living in a world where that which binds is turned upon and overcome, and that which frees is welcomed—as a friend! Such freedom is real, it is attainable, and it is truly life—for it is life under the sovereignty of God, and within the love and mercy of God.

"As for you, said Jesus, if you hold fast to my teaching, then you are truly my disciples; and you shall know the Truth, and the Truth shall make you free." The people refused Him then, in the name of their loyalty to the past and to their sin-filled ways! But, He's saying it now, to you. Are you going to follow their way? Or, are you going to answer: "I see it now! Jesus' way is the way of God's future, the future of brotherhood, of courageous adventure in fellowship, cooperation, and unity, under God. That is the way for me! God help me as I seek to take it—and keep it!"

Resolutions of the Virginia Council of Churches Concerning Alcohol Education

Growing numbers of people in our churches are disturbed over the personal and social effects of beverage alcohol. Just what ought to be done and what can be done to solve the many vexing problems in this field are questions on which Christian people sincerely differ. In spite of our disagreements, however, there seems to be a wide field in which our convictions tend to converge and where there is not only the possibility but the urgent need of common programs of education and action.

The responsibilities of the churches in this field would seem to be of several kinds. There is the obligation, for one thing, to render a spiritual and healing ministry to the victims of strong drink, and to do this as sympathetically, wisely and effectively as possible. There is also the obligation to carry on programs of education that make clear to both adults and young people the potentially devastating and demoralizing effects of beverage alcohol. But while these are perhaps the primary duties of the church in this field, there is yet a third important responsibility in connection with the social control of alcohol.

At this latter point, to be sure, our disagreements are often sharp and deep. But while many Christian people refuse to put their churches on the side of any piece of legislation, and though great harm may be done by official church sanction of specific laws unless these are backed by the overwhelming majority of the people, there is nevertheless a real danger in allowing Christians to believe that their Christian principles have nothing to do with their social responsibilities. We agree with a recent statement of the Federal Council of Churches that "if there is real progress in the care and treatment of alcoholics, in research on alcohol problems, and in alcohol education," it will also "be increasingly possible for a better informed and voluntarily convinced public to institute and support more effective and stringent control measure over the alcoholic beverage trade."

In the light of these facts and obligations, therefore, and in view of the human wreckage being piled up by the excessive use of strong drink, we recommend:

(1) That the Virginia Council urge upon its member churches that they give all possible aid to those organizations which seek soundly and wisely to rehabilitate the victims of alcohol, and that they give especial aid and commendation to those troupes that make use in their ministry of the resources of religion.

(2) That the Council commend to the Christian leaders of our Virginia communities the work of Allied Youth, Inc., as an organization that has been widely useful in spreading among our high school and college young people sound scientific information that fosters sobriety and self-control.

(3) That the Virginia Council urge the leaders of our Christian churches to give attention to the need for a thorough, scientific and consistent program of alcohol education in their local congregations and communities—a program that seeks to make clear the implications of Christian ethics for social relationships as well as for individual conduct.

(4) That the Virginia Council of Churches commend the members of our Virginia General Assembly for their refusal to use tax money from the sale of liquor for the support of the public schools, since all such use of alcoholic beverage revenues tends to mislead the public as to the anti-social nature of the traffic itself.

(5) That the Council commend to the churches of our state the Yale School of Alcohol Studies, and that it urge all member denominations to investigate the program and possibilities of this School with a view to sending a number of interested pastors to its 1947 Summer Session.

(6) That the Council call to the attention of the Christian people of our state and the deplorable and pernicious effects of uncontrolled and often misleading liquor advertising, and that it ask all Christian citizens to give careful consideration to the possible need of regulating such advertising by law in the interest of the national welfare.

A Teacher's Ode to Love

By Sophia Lyons Fahs

Though I teach with the skill of the greatest of teachers,
And have not love,
I am become a thing for mere display,
A discordant note in my School of Religion.

Though I am an artist in story, music and drama,
And though I have the keenest understanding of modern theories
Regarding democratic processes;
Though I have all faith so as to overcome the most stubborn obstacle to progress
It profiteth me nothing.

Though I give all my time and my resources to teaching,
And though I consume my strength in overwork,
Yet have not love,
It profiteth me nothing.

Love suffereth patiently and is kind,
Love knoweth neither envy nor jealousy of other teachers;
Love is herself teachable;
Is not boastful of success;
Doth not behave unbecomingly when new methods are proposed;
Seeketh not to exploit the child for personal prestige;
Is not easily overwrought;
Doth not brood over sights;
Rejoiceth not in cants nor in formal righteousness,
But rejoiceth in that which is genuine and true.

Love patiently beareth discouragement,
She trusteth the best in children, hopeth for the best,
And confidently waiteth for the best to conquer.
We know but little and we teach but imperfectly.
When that which is better is discovered, that which is surpassed should be discontinued.

When I was but a child in my own character development,
I spoke as a child,
I felt as a child and I thought in childish patterns.
Now that I am striving for a religion worthy of my years
I should put away the prejudices of the childish.
Even yet I see as through a darkened mirror,
Some day I shall see clearly,
Now I know but in fragments;
Then I shall know fully, even as fully as I am known.
Now abideth faith, hope and love, these three,
And the greatest of these is love.

The revealing parable of the New Testament—"Faith Is As a Mustard Seed"—dramatizing the need to rekindle faith with unremitting good works is the theme of the seventh WORLD DAY OF PRAYER—1947.

By Rev. Robert A. Whitten.

A mighty army marched today
To an appointed place of prayer;
Praying that men might find the way
A world-wide peace to share.

It was a prayer for brotherhood
Of every race of men;
That each might seek his brother's good
And treat him as a friend.

Wars then would cease, and be no more,
Swords, plough-shares would become;
Christ would indeed become the door
Through which such peace is won.

Our God would smile on such a scene,
Heavenly choirs would sing again,
As Christians live salvation's theme
"Good will" and "Peace to Men."

chapter in "The Greatest Story Ever Told" series to be broadcast Sunday, March 2, over ABC at 6:30 P. M., EST.

At the opening of this inspiring drama, the Master, preaching from a skiff on the shores of the Sea of Galilee, likens the kingdom of heaven to a mustard seed which man sows in his fields. And he tells of the woman Deborah's faith in revelation and her suppliant humble determination that, despite insuperable odds, her husband, Hiram, should be healed of an incurable malady. So that he may live to fulfill his self-appointed work of bringing fertility to his neighbors' desolate farmlands, Deborah sets out to transport Hiram on his deathbed to the Master in distant Capernaum, despite the protests of the multitude.

Each of these dramatizations on "The Greatest Story Ever Told" programs are adapted faithfully from the New Testament and produced in modern language by famed Biblical scholar, Fulton Oursler.

MORE CHRISTIAN HUMAN RELATIONS.

By REV. GALEN WEAVER,

Formerly of Honolulu, Hawaii, Secretary of the Committee on Church and Race of Congregational Christian Churches.

The biennial emphasis on more Christian human relations among the various racial and creedal groups, as authorized by the June, 1947, General Council, has been in operation about four and a half months. In that period, 120 representatives of our national denominational agencies and boards have been enlisted as members of the National Advisory Committee on Church and Race. In addition 97 other men and women have been carefully selected to round out this national committee. Thus 217 persons from all sections of the country and of various races—white, Negro, American Indian, Chinese, Japanese and Spanish American ancestries—are serving as counsellors to the Executive Committee and the Director through interchange of correspondence and individual and group interviews as the Director travels about the country.

The Executive Committee of thirty members ties in with the American Missionary Association and the Council for Social Action directorates (divisional Committee and Council of eighteen), national women's, laymen's and youth groups, as well as the Superintendents and Fellowship of Rural Ministers by direct representatives.

Three meetings of this executive group have been held. At each, persons from four races have shared in the thinking and planning. Representatives have been present from north and south of the Mason-Dixon line.

An information network of 516 persons, including the National Committee on Church and Race, has been carefully set up so as to keep these key individuals closely informed of policies, plans and actions.

Self-study procedures have been worked out and recommended to the presidents of our church-related colleges and seminaries to the executives of our National Boards, as well as to the Superintendents of our State Conferences and the executives of City Unions. The purpose of these schedules of inquiry is to discover and eliminate any discrimination based on race or color and to increase the opportunities for enlisting the contribution of all racial groups and for making all such individuals an integral part of our Congregational Christian fellowship.

The Need and the Opportunity in Japan

Excerpts from an Address by T. T. BRUMBAUGH of New York City at the International Council of Religious Education at Grand Rapids, Michigan*

Today as a consequence of the defeat of Japan's imperial armies and navies, the obvious loss of national sanctity and prestige, and the public repudiation by the emperor of his own divinity, the Japanese people are receptive as never before to spiritual, moral and social ideas from the outside world. Shinto, the ancient faith of Japan which threw such a halo of awesomeness about the nation and then resorted to superstitious practices and oppressive forms of public extortion to support the cult, is now about as dead as the time-honored Dodo, its altars broken, its shrines unfrequented.

Buddhism, too, which even in the balmy days of Shinto ascendancy, still held the traditional loyalty of eighty per cent of Japan's people, is moribund. The moral bankruptcy of Buddhism's priesthood has long been recognized, though many have been the attempts in recent years to bolster it to a new vitality. During the war Buddhism was, like Christianity, driven into a form of outward unity which the military nationalism of the day could manipulate to its own moral or immoral ends. Thus did some forty sects become one for Buddhism's total contribution to the war effort. Yet now that both the national emergency and government pressure have been relieved, we are told that the Buddhists in Japan have split into more than eighty sects and cults; and a few there are who take seriously any of them.

This collapse of the ancient moral and spiritual mores of Japan, however, leaves a vacuum which must be filled by some cosmic and social philosophy and it is no secret that various ideologies and institutions from other lands are awake to the possibilities for the propagation of their convictions among the Japanese populace. Some of these newly imported systems of thought and action are religious, some semi-religious and some utterly indifferent or hostile to religious faith.

Accordingly the people of Japan today find Christian theism far more congenial to their life and thought than certain other current philosophies with less dynamic concepts of Divine Power and Grace. It may therefore be said without hesitancy that the Christian religion has an unprecedented opportunity for advance in the personal and social lives of the Japanese people today. It can be said with equal certainty that various Christian orders and organizations are alert to these possibilities, and are pressing their systems of thought and behavior upon Japan.

Protestantism is, as usual elsewhere, a complex entity in Japan. With the merging of thirty-four denominational bodies in 1941 the Protestant forces seemed at last to be approaching unity. Yet, within a year after the close of hostilities, the Seikokwai (an Anglo-Episcopal body), the Salvation Army, a small group of Presbyterians, and certain Holiness segments had withdrawn from the united Church of Christ in Japan, and still others are talking of defection. Nevertheless, the united Church is impressive. Embracing 1,200 churches and around 175,000 members, there is nothing else even approaching its strength and vitality as a force for Christian evangelism. By actual count, 490 of its churches were destroyed by bombing and fire in the war, twenty-six of the sixty Christian schools more or less organically related to the united Church having also been either entirely destroyed or seriously damaged. Many of the 1,500 of the church's ordained leaders have been deprived of homes and even also of livelihood as church membership was scattered.

Yet there are unmistakable signs both of survival and of revival among the Protestant churches of Japan. In Tokyo, alone, where more than 200 churches were destroyed and where in certain areas it is difficult to find a religious service within a radius of a mile both pastors and congregations are girding themselves for reconstruction. The same is true of Osaka, Nagoya, Kobe, Hiroshima, Fukuoka, Nagasaki, Sendai and other cities now in ashes but where strong Christian influences have long been factors in community life. . . . A three-year evangelistic campaign is now in full swing with a goal of "Three Million Souls for Christ" and with Toyohiko Kagawa as the chief speaker and drawing card.

First of all, I think as American Christians who have suffered but little of the woes of the world so recently and so long at war, we should be far more concerned with replacing the ruined churches of Europe and Asia than with enlarging and improving our own palatial houses of worship here at home. It is impossible, without seeing the square miles of rubble caused by our B-29's and our Atom bombs in most of the cities of Japan, to realize how such devastation cripples and demoralizes such institutions as churches, schools, hospitals, kindergartens, and social settlements on which depends so greatly the development of the humanitarian spirit in society.

Above all, therefore, I am convinced that the Christians of the western world who wish to help in leading Japan out into a new era of democracy and brotherhood must rebuild the ruined institutions of Christianity. Such a thing may be unheard of in the treatment of vanquished by victorious peoples and nations; but it is high time that the old patterns of human conflict were changed and there are already so many precedents being established by Americans in Japan that perhaps an innovation in Christian strategy will find proper place.

Secondly, I think an adequate Protestant strategy for today in Japan calls for even more of both the spirit and the witness of Christian unity than our American church leaders and missionary boards, with all their good will toward the new and united Church of Christ in Japan, have yet exhibited.

Japan is just such a place of destruction, deprivation and suffering as was any battlefield during the war, and will so long remain so that I dare to say that what is most needed on our own part as Protestant Christians seeking to serve Christ in such a land is the simple theology and ethics of the Good Samaritan.

Finally, I should like to conclude this presentation with an appeal for a great outpouring of sympathy and support for new ventures of faith in the youth of Japan who will be the leaders of tomorrow. It was with this in mind that I went to Japan in October to investigate the possibility of establishing there with the support of our American and Canadian churches a new and forward-looking international Christian University. I found there a great response to this proposal. The leaders of Japan's spiritual, moral and intellectual life all rejoiced in this new hope for the youth of their land for all who might study under Christian leadership in such an institution. The present premier of Japan, a previous prime minister, a former ambassador to the United States, the Emperor of Japan and General Douglas MacArthur (Continued on page 7.)

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION REPORT.

Considerable space is given in this issue to reports and addresses given at the 25th annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Religious educators of forty Protestant denominations pooled their findings. Philip C. Landers, Congregationalist minister, who serves as the director of public relations has given yeoman's service in preparing extensive release on this important meeting. No better use could be made of this editorial space than by bringing to our readers the gist of some messages which we are not able to publish in full.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam told the delegates that Protestantism must subordinate its lesser differences in the face of totalitarian threats to individual freedom. Dr. Ross Snyder, associate professor of religious education at Chicago Theological Seminary, declared that "Protestants must build up a sense of the significance of their church in the decisions, choices and activities of the contemporary world if they want people to throw energy and money into church work."

The report of the general secretary, Dr. Roy G. Ross, stated that "Christian education forces are determined to provide the home with as much support as they can as a means of helping parents in their work of Christian teaching." Dr. Ross outlined needs for expanding up-to-date methods of religious education, through such means as films and radio, weekday religious programs, church camps, and "mass meetings and demonstrations which will arouse American citizens of good purpose to the actual and potential contributions which the Sunday school and other agencies for Christian education are making to the public weal." One such mass meeting, Dr. Ross announced, will be the Council's International Sunday School Convention, to be held in Des Moines, Iowa, July 23-27, 1947. Plans are being made for an attendance of 10,000 volunteer Sunday school workers from the United States and Canada. "The meeting of these needs," the report concluded, "will require consecrated and capable leadership, backed by many consecrated dollars. But together we can find the way to meet these and other needs which we shall encounter as we press forward along the trail."

The same emphasis on the primary importance of a vital religion in the home was continued by Dr. T. T. Swearingen, Chicago, director of adult work and family education. "The most powerful unit of influence is the family unit," Dr. Swearingen maintained. "It is in the home where attitudes toward honesty, dependability, self-reliance, orderliness are formed, as well as ideas of success and the use of money. Race and class prejudices are formed in the home. The home has the child first and for the longest period of time and in the most natural surroundings," he pointed out. "The church, no matter how good, is abnormal in its training of the child because it is a special school set up away from the natural environment. Therefore it is difficult for the church to modify the fundamental attitude that grows out of the home situation. What the church does is to try to reshape something which is already molded. Why continue to pour out time and money on the preparations for training of Sunday school teachers who have the child one-half hour a week, and continue to neglect training of parents who have the greatest opportunity and influence in the molding of Christian character?" he questioned.

"Teachers of Bible must base their theological interpretation on the results of sound historical interpretations, Dr. Clarence Tucker Craig, professor of New Testament at Yale University Divinity School, asserted. Speaking on "The Use of the Bible in Christian Teaching," Dr. Craig warned that the Bible must not be made a "grab-bag of proof-texts." "Problems of our contemporary civilization must be faced in the light of the total revelation rather than the teaching of some isolated portion of Scripture. The goal of teaching the Bible to boys and girls is not Biblical knowledge but Christian character." Deploing the fact that "we now have a generation which does not know the Bible," Dr. Craig declared that "the next generation will know it better only as it Christian educators take more seriously its central importance. The Bible is too difficult a book to understand without aids. Teachers and pupils in Sunday schools should have supplementary materials comparable in printing, illustrations, and dignity to the textbooks being used in other schools. The Bible is not the only source of Christian teaching," Dr. Craig added. "The God of history did not die with the closing of the canon. Nature, church history, and contemporary experience and biography all should be included."

SOUTHERN NEGRO CATHOLIC OR PROTSTANT?

History is being written. Decisive trends are being established. Far-reaching consequences are being determined. Social forces are in operation, and these forces are not impersonal. They are intensely personal. They are the result of individual vision and action, or blindness and indifference. They are the result, in part, of our altruism and good works, or our sins of omission and commission.

Now it is reported that Claire Booth Luce, much-publicized convert to the Roman Catholic faith, has contributed the $10,000 payment from an article, "Why I joined the Catholic Church," for erection of a maternity hospital for Negroes at Mobile, Alabama. Announcement of the gift was made by the bishop of the Mobile diocese in disclosing that the $100,000 hospital, first of its kind in the South, is part of a broad program of education and welfare for Negroes being sponsored by Alabama Catholics.

Roman Catholics are making a strong bid for Negro allegiance in the South. In all probability, this program will be magnified and intensified. What, specifically and tangibly, is the Southern Convention doing doing for the Negro in the South? Our Negro Christian churches have struggled for a generation under our arrogant, superior white noses. Their cry, "Come over into Macedonia and help us," has fallen on deaf or unheeding ears. If the Southern Convention had played the part of the good Samaritan rather than that of the priest and the levite, Franklin Christian College would be a college today, rather than a mere center of intermittent, informal and non-academic training, and the pulpits of the Afro-Convention would be filled by college rather than grammar-grade graduates.

Our outworn shibboleths will no longer suffice. We must, to use a slang but pertinent expression, "Put up or shut up." The die is being cast. Unless we wake up and bring forth works meet for repentance, the unused talent will be taken away and given to another. The unavoidable choice is before us: shall we idly surrender the Southern Negro to the open and attractive solicitations of the Roman Catholic Church, or shall we claim, support, cooperate with and maintain the Negro Protestant heritage of the South? History is being written—fast!

Cross or Weathervane? The Architecture of Lent

By REV. W. C. BESSELEVRE
Port Chicago, California

Steeple have come down. Perhaps that is just as well since so many have been only ponderous, elongated cones laboring up to support—a weather-vane. Being locally weather-wise may be of service to the town politician, may even offer cautions to over-enthusiastic church leaders, but local weather-wisdom can never be the apex of a church's ambition nor can swerving arrows become proper symbols of the church's quest. So it is just as well that steeples come down, especially where they have not been permitted to remain either as unadorned fingers pointing to God or as arms holding aloft a cross.

However, if one symbol which confronted the world with the eternal verities has been removed from the outside of the church, within the church the initiate are facing a new challenge: the cross which was denied to the steeple has appeared before the congregation. And chancels, altars, dorsals, gleaming candles—all the accoutrements once despised and rejected—are giving the cross its hallowed setting. The arrangement is called a "Center of Worship" and it has within it the power to carry the church whither it very much needs to go: away from the peripheries to the center of Christian faith.

For it should be quite evident that the change of arrangement from chance to chancels, the shift of vision from chaos to crosses, is vastly more than an aesthetic movement. If mere prettifying is the objective, then the center of worship will become nothing more than an artist's vanishing point—to be rubbed out of consciousness as soon as the novelty is passed. The pew-holder would then be faced with a beautifully proportioned, artistically satisfying relationship of objects but would be left as religiously cold as before a well-balanced study in still life. The sensitive soul would cease to be affronted by ugliness but he would not thereby be confronted with God. However worthy aesthetic satisfaction may be, the center of worship must be created for worthier ends and those ends will be attained only as the minister and congregation bring before them a religion commensurate with the holy purposes to which the altars and the crosses are dedicated.

What is this challenge which the altar presents? What is the center toward which the cross draws? And is that challenge and that center other than has been constantly present to the worshippers' consciousness? The challenge of the altar is Sacrifice and the center of the cross is Redemption—not sacrifice generically, not redemption as an innate principle, but specifically the Sacrifice of Christ and the Redemption of Christ, offered historically once-for-all on Calvary and offered spiritually in a constant stream of grace to and for sinful souls.

Now this is a faith to which the church's rifle sights were once well adjusted but the winds of circumstance have changed and a deal of shooting has been wide of the mark. Occasionally someone who is familiar with his "Kentucky windage" hits fairly close to the bull's-eye. In large part, however, it would appear that the pulpit-centered church has succumbed to its platform dominance. The evangelical fervor and holy awe with which one ought to approach God has given way to a bored restlessness which may be somewhat allayed by anticipation of a good speech to come. But it is demanded that said speech concern expostions of common-sense ethics, discussions on industrial relations, discourses on Communism vs. Democracy, and similar "practical" subjects, that it be presented dynamically—and briefly—and, if there could be a joke or two so much the better. How otherwise thrown in to liven up the proceedings, could people be expected to leave their comfortable beds or their entertaining Sunday newspaper? The pulpit-centered church must instruct, but it must draw the crowd by virtue of Timely Topics, lively expounded, and the people, having been to church will have their consciences quieted by this much.

It is devoutly to be hoped that the cross-centered church will change all that. Smart cracks and flippancies are distinctly out of place before an altar and the topic which, though it may have passing importance for the day, is only trivial before cosmic movements and eternal verities, such a subject will have short shrift before a cross. And the spirit which can kneel (?) carelessly, indifferently, hastily before the symbol of Christ's Redemption, such a spirit deserves whatever anathemas God may see fit to pronounce against him. Indeed it is to be hoped that the installation of a center of worship, wherever it is accomplished, may in itself be a sacramental act: i. e., an "outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace."

And if this movement be of the heart and not merely of the eyes it will show a re-awakening to the sacramental both in the rites of the church and, more, in the church's faith—this latter being the supreme need of the hour. For over the preceeding generation or so there seems to have been an over-emphasis on humanism based upon the synoptic Jesus. The emphases of John's Gospel and of the Epistles have been received with marked hesitancy. "For God so loved the world that He gave His Only Begotten Son." "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for the ungodly." "Be ye reconciled to God." "Christ, the High Priest." These few quotations suggest a point of view by no means common to the present-day church. But they are only brief samples of the pervading spirit in John and the Epistles, samples of that mighty persuasion through which a little band of discouraged men was turned into a conquering host. These men whose deeds and words come down in the New Testament knew, knew with a surity and finality which

SUFFOLK LETTER.

One of the most beautiful benedictions in all the Bible is that found in Hebrews 13:20-21, "Now may the God of peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, the great shepherd of the sheep, by the blood of the eternal covenant, equip you with every good that you may do his will, working in you that which is pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen." There is a sweep of assurance, and a scope of promise that should give each of us faith and courage to do our work in the world.

In this brief message I can only hint at a few things that stir my soul as I ponder so precious a passage. "The God of peace" so needed to be known and received throughout the world today, both in the individual heart and life and in the ways of nations as they seek to set foot on common ground. The God of peace, and with power to bring again from the dead "our Lord Jesus." That is the answer to the cruel cross, that is the hope of the world, the plan of redemption. There is the mandate of "the great shepherd of the sheep," the Saviour of the world, whose fold is as big as God's love, and as sure as the "eternal covenant" sealed in the blood of the Christ. That is big enough, and true enough, to recognize sin in the world, and to provide an eternal covenant for its forgiveness. It may sound old fashion, but it is as up-to-date as the sordid record being written today across the ways of men. It is as up-to-date as the lifting of a load in humble confession, and feeling the creative, redeeming love of God taking hold of one's life.

And to add to that, listen to this: "And now may the God of peace . . . equip you with every good." Yes, God will grant unto us whatever equipment we need to do his will. If he intends us to be a minister he will equip us with the ability to study, to learn, and to advance in knowledge and wisdom, until we are able to serve him—until we are able to serve him with a good heart and a right motive, "working in us that which is pleasing in his sight." Whatever he has for us to do he will "equip us with every good" needed in the doing of the same. Some are equipped to make money, others to "serve tables," others to think the thoughts of leadership and progress

—maybe some to do each of these—but God has a place for all, and a work to be done by everyone. Maybe God needs the kind of life you can live surrounded in the way in which you are surrounded, borne in upon by the things that bear in upon you. Before you decide God has no special thing for you to be, or do, seek to learn of him through prayer, and whatever sources are available to you, what his will is. "And may the God of peace . . . equip you with every good that you may do his will!"

MILLIONTH BIBLE PRESENTED.

In presenting the one millionth copy of the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament to Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany at the opening session of the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education, met in Grand Rapids February 9-15, Dr. Luther A. Weigle, Yale University Divinity School, stated:

Pastor Niemoeller, the book which I am to present to you on behalf of the International Council of Religious Education is the millionth copy of the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament in English, the first copies of which were published one year ago.

It is an authorized revision of the King James Version (1611), the English Revised Version (1881), and the American Standard Version (1901). It has been prepared by a committee of scholars appointed by the International Council of Religious Education, acting on the behalf of the Protestant churches of this country.

This revision was necessary because the King James Version was based upon a faulty Greek text; because the revisions of 1881 and 1901 were made prior to the discovery of the papyri which have contributed so much to our understanding of Hellenistic Greek, a contribution for which we owe much to that great German scholar of the generation just gone, Adolf Deissmann; and because of the meaning of many English words and phrases has changed greatly since the King James Version was made.

It was of the utmost importance, at the time of the Protestant Reformation, when the new invention of printing made it possible that the Holy Scriptures be made available to the common people in their mother tongue, translated from the original Hebrew and Greek in terms that all could understand. It is no less important today, when the old translations are no longer clear, that the Scriptures should again be translated in terms that the common people can understand. Men and women and children need the Word of God today and in the years ahead, as never before. If people everywhere, and in all conditions of life, can read and understand, and will obey that Word, a new birth of freedom for all mankind is possible in our time.

This book is the gift to you, I like to think, of the thirty-five million citizens of the United States who constitute the membership of the Protestant churches associated in the work of the International Council of Religious Education. We are of many heritages. There are here spiritual descendants of Huss, and Calvin, and Zwingli, and Knox as well as Luther; descendants, too, of Menno Simons and George Fox, and Roger Williams, John Wesley, Alexander Campbell and other prophets and reformers. Yet we are all part of the world-wide Christian Church which is one because it owes allegiance to the one Lord and Saviour of us all. That Church transcends our differences of race, nation, color, and creed; and its unity will in the end prevail in the face of all such differences.

We are mindful as we make this gift of the ringing protest of Martin Luther against the errors and abuses that had become entrenched in the Roman Church, mindful of the classic clarity of his translations of the Bible into German, and mindful of how his work and example inspired and aided William Tyndale to undertake the first translation into English from the original Hebrew and Greek.

We recall, moreover, the great debt which Biblical students throughout the world owe to German scholars. We are glad to remember the many ties of Christian fellowship that have linked us with Germany in the past, and we look with hope to the renewal of this fellowship now and in the years to come. We wish to send through you a message of friendship to the German people. We give to you this one-millionth copy of the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament in token of this friendship.

When we are in possession of thoughts so delicate and beautiful that they become holy, we hold a master key to open for us the inner glory of the greatest triumph of history.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

"A MUST."

There are many things needed at Elon College but there is at least one "must." The present power house was built and heating facilities installed in 1904-05. Second-hand equipment was purchased and put to use. How it has served for these forty odd years is difficult to explain. The insurance company has repeatedly called attention to its condition and advised repairs which have been made. A year ago the company stated emphatically that new equipment should be purchased or extensive repairs be made. Our engineer in charge contends that the boilers are unsafe and refuses to fire beyond a certain temperature even in extremely cold weather. It is impossible to operate the school without heating facilities and inadvisable and unsafe to continue with what we have. Plainly and unmistakably we are face to face with a "must" at Elon College.

There is another inescapable fact confronting us. We do not have the cash in hand to build a new power house and purchase and install new equipment. Extensive repairs could be made on present equipment, but the old power house must eventually be moved. To make needed repairs would be like putting a new patch on an old garment. The only safe and sensible thing to do is to provide new facilities and new equipment sufficient to serve the greatly enlarged plant as proposed and when completed. This will require considerable money—money that we do not have for this purpose. If we build, this money must either be contributed or borrowed. We do not want to borrow. No one wants to go into debt. We must provide for adequate heat. There is no other alternative. We are abundantly able to give the necessary money for this purpose. When we are confronted with the facts and the need, I believe that we will provide the necessary funds.

This is an expensive time to build. Labor is high. Materials are high. The price of both is advancing. To delay means greater cost. It is advisable that we build. It is not advisable that we borrow to build. It is our privilege, the privilege of the church, the alumni and friends of Elon to give that this "must" may be met.

We have in hand approximately forty thousand dollars ($40,000) for this purpose. As a minimum, one hundred and ten thousand dollars ($110,000) more will be needed. This would not complete the job as laid out by the engineers but it is estimated that it would meet immediate demands.

A meeting of the building committee and executive committee of the Board of Trustees will be called at an early date to act on this important matter and you will be kept informed.

EASTERN VIRGINIA ALUMNI MEETS.

The Eastern Virginia Chapter of the Elon Alumni Association held its annual banquet February 21, in the Fellowship Hall of the Suffolk Church, with President Roy A. Richardson presiding. Featured on the program were several selections by the Elon Vocal Ensemble, with John Westmoreland directing, and Fletcher Moore as accompanist. Mrs. Robert M. Kimball, of Franklin, gave a dramatic reading; James F. Darden, executive secretary of the General Alumni Association, presented distinguished alumni, including W. Cliff Elder, manager of the Memorial Gymnasium Campaign; President G. C. Mann of the General Alumni Association; Geo. D. Colelough, "Hap" Perry, head coach at Elon, and Mrs. Perry; "Foots" Fessmire of Greensboro; Shields Cheek; S. T. Holland of Windsor, Va., chairman of the Eastern Virginia division of the Memorial Gymnasium Campaign; and Dr. L. E. Smith, president of the College. Principal speakers were: W. Cliff Elder, S. T. Holland, and Dr. L. E. Smith. Newly elected officers: President, Russell T. Bradford; Vice-President, J. Russell Kirk; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Gladys Yates; and additional members elected to the Executive Board were: Dr. N. G. Newman, Jr.; Mrs. Russell T. Bradford and Mrs. John G. Truitt.

THE NEED AND THE OPPORTUNITY IN JAPAN.

all took occasion to say they felt this was one of the best possible ways in which the churches and Christians of North America could invest time, effort, money and love in the prospect of a Democratic and a Christian Japan.

In brief, I found Japan wide open to the influences of Christianity and all those forces in Democracy which make for responsible citizenship in an inter-related world. I could see and had it constantly urged upon me that by some such strategy of united Evangelical Christian advance and with wide use of the printed word, the moving picture, the radio and other forms of publicity now open to those who strive not to divide but to unite the world in brotherhood, Japan could within the next five years be turned definitely into the moral and spiritual channels of Christian community life.

In conclusion, I wish to give you, not in quotations but in summary, what General MacArthur believes America and Christianity alone can offer Japan today. Certain other philosophies, said the General, offer the people of Japan and the world repression of the human spirit and dictatorship in the name of the State, along with the atheism and materialism which underly all such political and social restraints. Only Christianity, said MacArthur, in an hour of interview that will long be the climax of my visit to Japan, holds out to mankind the prospect of Freedom based upon a high regard for human dignity and undergirded by faith in an all-wise and an Almighty God.

FORMER MISSIONARY SPEAKS.

The determination of the United States to hold permanently the naval bases seized during the war refuted our talk of world brotherhood, Dr. David D. Baker, St. Louis, Mo., former missionary to Japan, asserted in an address before ministers and lay workers in missionary education attending the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education, held at Grand Rapids, Michigan, February 10.

Dr. Baker, now on the editorial staff of the Evangelical and Reformed Churches, called the military occupation of Germany and Japan "with American Army personnel appropriating the best in the land" another bar to world friendship.

"When Germans under our supervision are today living on a diet not much above that of the concentration camps we condemned, it is not an easy proposition to talk of the love of God," Dr. Baker declared.

Speaking on world evangelization, he warned that many American churches are more concerned about "keeping the roof repaired than they are about drawing the whole world, including Russia, into a spiritual fellowship."

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

Foochow, Fukien, China,
February 5, 1947.

Dear Friends:

At last we have arrived in Foochow. Only one more jump—up the Min River to Shaowu, and we're really there. The trip so far has not been too bad. We were forced to wait three weeks for a ship to take us from Hongkong to Foochow, but it was warm there and we enjoyed seeing the city.

We arrived here last Friday and we will go to Shaowu next Monday. We are spending these days in the Mission Compound here, enjoying it very much except for the fact that it's hard to get used to having no heat in the house. We have been wearing warm clothes, though, and except for getting in and out of bed, it's not bad. The temperature really isn't very low—never below forty degrees, but the high humidity makes it seem like below zero.

Yesterday we had a thrilling experience. Pastor Leao of the Shaowu Church came to see us. We talked for about two hours and had a wonderful time. He can't speak English and there were many things we could not understand, and some we could not say, but we were surprised how much we could say. As he left, he said, "My heart is very full. For ten years I have waited for a missionary to come and help me. Praise God, you have come." He was so earnest and joyful, and I pray we may fulfill his expectation.

We have been fortunate to receive the promise of a truck from CNRRA to take some of our things to Shaowu. Some of us will go by launch to Yenping (half way). There we will hire a truck to take us the rest of the way. Dr. Riggs will go on the CNRRA truck. Miss Burr, formerly a missionary to Shaowu, will go up with us for a few days to introduce us and help us get started. Pastor Leao says the people are eagerly awaiting our arrival. We have been traveling so long, it will be good to get settled.

There is some good news about the hospital you will be glad to hear. Pastor Hwang, the executive secretary of the North Fukien Synod, came to Foochow in October. He went to CNRRA and inquired about supplies for the Shaowu hospital. Through the help of Dr. Yao, a former Shaowu resident, he was able to get thousands of dollars worth of medicines, sheets, blankets, etc. Dr. Riggs is very happy and will definitely go to Shaowu to open the hospital now. Several nurses and a Chinese surgeon have been lined up. The building needs repairs and the expense will be great, especially at first, so all contributions will be joyfully received.

Prices here are very high. Dorothy bought a quart thermos bottle this afternoon for $18,000 (about $6.00 in U. S. currency). It is especially difficult to think in terms of thousands and millions of dollars. My salary in Chinese money is about a million dollars a month. That amount actually represents less purchasing power than I received in America.

We can see on every side the effects of the war on China. There is a terrific struggle as people all seek to find security by getting more and more money. Nothing is safe—everyone suspects everyone else. Bandits and robbers are everywhere. Honesty is an unheard-of thing, especially among officials. Poverty, filth and disease is on every hand. Underpaid Chinese pastors struggle to keep their little flocks together. Christians are "not at home" in the midst of graft and greed. Last Sunday we went to church at Fukien Christian University. The village below the campus was celebrating a traditional idol festival. All through the service we could hear the cymbal clanging. The number of Christians in China is still small, but their zeal is great. We are continually impressed with the thousands on thousands of people. They are everywhere—old and young, rich and poor—the vast majority living in ignorance, filth and superstition. I tremble to think of the great responsibility that is ours to bring Christ and a better way of life to them.

It is a comfort to us to know always that you are behind us with your thoughts, your prayers and your gifts.

MISSIONARY NURSE HONORED.

Miss Florence M. Ridley, R.N., a graduate of Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Boston, Massachusetts, and a medical missionary in India under the American Board, has received the Royal Red Cross, First-Class Decoration in the King's New Year's Honor List for six years of distinguished war service with the British Army during World War II. This is the highest award in the power of the Royal Red Cross to confer on a nurse and Miss Ridley was one of two to receive it.

Although born in England, Miss Ridley took her professional training at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital in Boston and did some private nursing in this city and New York before enlisting for Christian foreign service in India under the American Board in 1929. She was stationed at Wai Hospital, Wai, India, in an Orthodox-Hindu town on the banks of the sacred Krishna River. The hospital is known far and wide for its ministry of healing in the name of Christ.

In her work at Wai Hospital, India, Miss Ridley is the special representative of the Central Congregational Church, Providence, Rhode Island, Dr. Arthur H. Bradford, minister, where she was commissioned for life service when she entered foreign missions work.

Every man has some peculiar train of thought which he falls back upon when he is alone. This, to a great degree, moulds the man.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK

With Emphasis on Missions

Mrs. F. C. LESTER, Editor

EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

As we are entering the mission period, we are re-thinking the challenge of the church to go beyond its local boundaries. The women of our Convention are appreciative of the letter which Dr. H. S. Hardeastle, chairman of the Mission Board has directed to all pastors and leaders throughout our Convention, calling attention to the strategy of the presentation of missionary thinking and giving during this period. Helpful also have been the letters of Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, president of our Woman's Convention which have gone out from her office to many of our leaders.

Eastern Virginia women are already shaping their plans for making a definite contribution in this missionary emphasis.

On Sunday afternoon, January 26, I met with the presidents of the missionary societies of the Waverly District at our church in Wakefield. We had a good afternoon together discussing the work of our Conference, and making plans for attaining the best results. The prospects for effective advancement in that District are good.

Mrs. James C. Lynch, the Superintendent of Young People for our Conference, has arranged for Miss Elizabeth Chicoine to meet and hold conferences with all young people's groups of our Conference. We are very grateful to Miss Chicoine for the splendid work she is doing for our young people, and we appreciate the work of Mrs. Lynch in arranging these two weeks of conferences with our young people.

The Executive Board of our Conference, President, Secretary, Treasurer, and District Superintendents met in the office of the Suffolk Church on Thursday, February 20, to plan the program for our District Rallies to be held as follows:

A CHINESE AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

[The following article was written by Paul Huang, a friend of Guy Thelin's, Foochow, China, now in his last year at Fukien Christian University. Paul is still on the Union High School staff and wrote the following autobiography in order to qualify for a scholarship at Fukien Christian University. Mr. Thelin says that Paul is "quite a remarkable chap, a good teacher, a good farmer, a good business man, a good musician, a good citizen, a good preacher, a good evangelist and a good Christian. He can do most anything. Thanks to folks who contributed to Student Aid during his high school days, these gifts from overseas have paid out well in many cases."]

"I am a native of Lutu, Mintsing. For many generations my forefathers were farmers. My father had four brothers and he himself was the second. Not being fond of farming, he became a boatman, going to and fro on the Min River, and sustained the family well through long hours of hard work. When I was four years old, my mother died after a long illness. Though there was great lamentation among the members of the family she seemed to me only to be sleeping not dead, Alas! Afterward the stepmother arrived, though she is gentle and kind, the affections of mother were never regained.

When I was eight years of age, my father sent me to a private school for two years. Then at the age of eleven, stimulated by the arrival of foreign education, I resumed studying at a primary school preparatory to Tieng U Junior Middle School. After two years I graduated from the primary and entered the Junior department. At the close of a semester there came a strong Anti-Christian Movement. Where the storms swept over there was damage to the Christian institutions; so Tieng U was compelled to close and I stayed at home without a chance to study.

Since my studying was interrupted, my father consulted with stepmother about my work, and in accordance with their decision I became a farmer and cowherd for more than one year. Seeing it was not a good way to make a living, he bound me as an apprentice to some trade, in the hope that I might find the means of making a living. Although it was only two months, I had suffered reproach and ignominy sufficiently without getting anything. The plight was so bad as to make me to flee and hide in the house of maternal grandmother. I sent men to plead with my father for his permission to let me resume studying. Just at that time my uncle came home from Chung-An, having resigned from his position as the head of the bureau of education in that city. Upon considering my plight he decided to send me to Tieng U again. While I was in the junior second year class chaos broke out in the city so that I became a refugee once more.

During this time there were many robbers and brigands in the city and many inhabitants who could not bear the trouble and danger migrated to other places; therefore, my family moved to Foochow and I transferred to the junior department of Union High School. After graduation I intended to enter the senior high department, but just then because of the dividing the inheritance with my uncles, my father's vocation met with difficulties which almost brought about bankruptcy. In addition to this there were oppressions, anxieties, and owing to the causes he died in the prime of life. While at the time of mother's death I did not under-

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Friends:

Some of you Virginians have twenty-seven inches of snow I hear! We are snowed in here in Asheville, too. First, there was sleet and then the snow came and covered the ice. Many activities here were cancelled. The city children did not have to go to school one day. The county children got two days off.

Bob sleds have been having their outing for the first time this winter. The boys and girls have been having wonderful times down the steep streets of Asheville.

Our Larchmont had its group of boys and sleds. What pleased Rebecca most was a little black Scottie dog that came with his little master. When his master's sled would start down the steep hill he would try so hard to keep up with his master on the sled. The little dogie plowing downhill in the deep snow with more falling on him thick and fast made a very lovely picture. I'm sorry that I can only send it to you in words. I'm sure that you have seen some lovely pictures during the snow. I wish that you'd send me some word pictures of what you have seen.

Be good to yourselves and don't forget to keep Lent.

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL GUIDE THEM.

The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them.

In hearts too young for enmity
There lies the way to make men free.

When children's friendships are world-wide

New ages will be glorified.

Let child love child, and strife will cease;

Disarm the hearts, for that is peace.

Prayer—Dear God, help children everywhere to be friends of one another and help to be friendly to the children of all lands. May we remember that they are thy children, as we are, and so with us a part of God's family on earth. Teach us ways in which we may share our best with them, and in knowing them better, learn to love them more. This we ask in the spirit of Jesus, who came a little child to earth to reveal thy love to all peoples. Amen.—“The New Hymnal for American Youth.”

THOSE STORMY-DAY BLUES.

By IRMA DOVEY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. Jordan sank into a chair as the door closed on the last member of her family—some going off to school and some to work. What a morning! In spite of the hindrances they had had in finding the things they wanted to wear, most of them had been ready for breakfast before she had it on the table.

Bill couldn't find his Algebra and upset the house generally looking for it, although it was under his pillow all the time! Marjorie, who worked in an office, discovered at the last minute that her raincape was torn past all wearing and she would have to change to her suit. The twins grumbled and fussed all during breakfast: “Who is going to take us to school?” “Where are our rubbers?” “Do we have to go to school today?” It had finally descended to, “He hit me first,” and Mrs. Jordan had been obliged to take firm measures.

“Why,” she wondered, “doesn't someone invent an alarm clock that will ring a half-hour earlier on mornings when it is storming? With extra garments to be found and an unusually early start needed, due to crowded buses, stormy mornings require much more time, as well as more energy and more patience. Here I am worn out already, and the day has scarcely begun.”

She forgot her troubles for a few minutes in glancing through a new magazine; then she began washing the dishes. When they were done, there were dusting and sweeping to do. She put down extra rugs by the door for wiping muddy shoes. “These rugs are clearly visible to me, but they probably won't be them!” she thought.

As she worked, she considered what might be done about the problem of stormy days. She had tried a box of stormy-day games for the twins—beanbags, dominoes, and pictures to cut out—all the quiet games that seem less enticing on bright sunny days. That had helped somewhat, but it was hard to keep the contents of the box reserved for such times.

If she could only manage to awaken earlier on those mornings, so as to have time to prepare something extra special for breakfast; that would give the day an air of festivity and would help to soothe the ruffled feelings that came from hurry and the breaking of precious plans.

Perhaps everything now in the hall closet could be taken out and that entire space kept exclusively for bad-weather paraphernalia. If rubbers, umbrellas and raincoats had one special place, they might really be kept there. It would make it easier to check on their condition, too, and to make necessary replacements in time.

She was still planning when Bobby and Benny, all aglow with the pleasure of splashing through the puddles in their new rubber boots, came in for lunch.

“Well, how did school go?” she asked mechanically.

“Oh, only so-so,” answered Bobby. “We had to stay inside for recess.”

Mrs. Jordan remembered her own teaching days. That had always been a difficulty. Even with generous play-space, the children did not work off their energies in the school building as they did out-of-doors.

“Miss Johnson wore her red dress. Boy, is it pretty!” Benny contributed, over his bowl of soup.

In college, Mrs. Johnson recalled, prospective teachers had been advised to wear bright colors on stormy days. Perhaps gay colors were a tonic for everyone. Mothers might well take this advice, too, and not choose the old brown print because it is such a damp day and the pretty dress might get limp or soiled.

“I don't suppose I'll remember them all, nor put half of them into practice,” Mrs. Jordan told her husband that evening, “but I have made some good resolutions for the next stormy day.”

I know of no manner of speaking so offensive as that of giving praise, and closing it with an exception.

GRACE, COMFORT, HOPE, PEACE.

By REV. PETER YOUNG.

The Second Epistle of Paul to the Thessalonians is made up of three short chapters and it can be read in its entirety in fifteen minutes. It is one of the shortest letters Paul wrote. But in it we find such familiar words and phrases as these:

"Grace to you and peace from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." "Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God our Father who loved us, and gave us eternal comfort and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and establish them in every good work and word." "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patience of Christ." "Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace at all times." "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."

The whole epistle reads like one glorious benediction. Now why did the Apostle write a second letter to this church and take such great pains to emphasize over and over again such words as these: grace, comfort, hope, peace, patience, love? For two reasons mainly, and you find them as you read the letter.

First, the members of the church in Thessalonica were suffering persecution. This little band of the followers of Christ were being hounded to death because of their faith. Their faith stressed four great beliefs: a belief in God the Father, creator and sustainer of the universe; a belief in Christ the Son of God as saviour and redeemer of the world; a belief in purity as the way of life; and a belief in the resurrection. All this seemed strange in that day and the Christians were called heretics. They were punished with insults, thrust into jail, and some of them put to death.

Second, these church members suffered disappointment. They had thought life would go easier with them because of their new-found faith in Christ. They had expected God to stand by them in a miraculous way—"A thousand shall fall at thy side, but it shall not come nigh thee." When it didn't turn out that way they were sorely disappointed. We all expect a few special favors from God when we do his will. We experience some unusual trouble and we say, What have I done to deserve this? Nothing, very probably, but we needly only to realize that even the best of us have no inside hold on the mercy and goodness of God. Christ himself was given no special favors, and asked for none.

Yes, life was going hard for these Thessalonians in spite of their Christian loyalty, and because of it. Their pain was real enough. They had those terror-stricken eyes that look at you and want to know what sense life makes. They were persecuted and disappointed.

And Paul didn't give them anything light and merry to try to get them to stand up to their woe. He appealed to them in terms of the love of God, the patience of Christ, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the God of eternal comfort and good hope. He didn't promise them any easy relief from their troubles. He didn't hold out to them the hope of more peaceful days to come in this world, and the prospect of everlasting joy in the next. Paul simply reminded them of the power of high religion to hold them steadfast and true. Be loyal; be faithful. So he admonished them in tones of the spirit of heaven itself. And in the end, it was exactly as Paul said it would be. Grace, comfort, hope, peace came into their lives from the vast and powerful resources of Almighty God to bless them. Indeed, they became one of those little bands of early Christians of whom it was said, "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

O you Thessalonians, loyal followers of Christ under tribulation, how we need your example in these days on which we have fallen!

For we, too, live under the sense of great disappointment. No people can experience the tragedy of two world wars within the lifespan of one generation without coming to feel the sense of frustration and disappointment. What hopes we had for God's fair world only a few years ago! "The Kingdom of God on earth in one generation," was our slogan. It seemed as easy as that when I was a freshman in college. But instead of the Kingdom of God we have the devil's kingdom of ruin and suffering.

The resulting sense of frustration is doing something to us. We are like drowning men clutching at straws. Hoping to salvage something from the general wreckage, we look after our own physical comfort. There is a hurry and a strain and a stress about us, as we seek the security of this world. We are uncommonly excited most of the time. We can't even rest when we are supposed to be quiet. We finally break under the strain. Our psychiatrists have a story to tell us with respect to the mental sickness of our time.

Moreover, a lot of people are resorting to drink. Trying to get away from the awful sense of personal frustration in a world at sixes and sevens, they seek refuge in alcohol. They may find a momentary release, but the end is bitter indeed. Did you read in the February Reader's Digest the article about the increase of drinking among women? It is one of the saddest pieces of writing I've ever come across.

We need an Apostle Paul to send us a message from heaven—the love of God; the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; the patience of Christ; the God of eternal comfort and good hope!

In the year 1864, while our country was still in the throes of the War Between the States, Samuel Longfellow wrote a prayer-poem. It is found in most of our hymnals, though it is seldom sung. Listen to it:

I look to thee in every need,
And never look in vain;
I feel thy strong and tender love,
And all is well again;
The thought of thee is mightier far
Than sin and pain and sorrow are.

Discouraged in the work of life,
Disheartened by its load,
Shamed by its failures or its fears,
I sink beside the road;
But let me only think of thee,
And then new heart springs up in me.

Thy calmness bends serene above,
My restlessness to still;
Around me flows thy quickening life,
To nerve my faltering will;
Thy presence fills my solitude;
Thy providence turns all to good.

Embossed deep in thy dear love,
Held in thy law, I stand;
Thy hand in all things I behold,
And all things in thy hand;
Thou leadest me by unsought ways,
And turn'st my mourning into praise.

In these meaningful lines Samuel Longfellow was trying to make sense out of a way which was sorely afflicting the daily life of every American citizen. He went about it in the large manner of thinking in terms of the eternal God. Always in the face of the woes of earth, the spiritual leaders of humanity have rendered a similar service. Listen to this old-time prayer:

"Almighty and everlasting God, we who are frailty itself hail thine omnipotence. We whose breath is in Going Home.

Those who fear death will do well to ponder the words which are used in one sense or another in reference to the passing from this world of Jesus. For instance in today's lesson there are two such references within a few verses. "When Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father. . . ." He lived in intimate association with the Father here. He knew that he would be with the Father there. Nothing was to separate him from God, not death nor life. A couple of verses later we read "and Jesus knowing that he came from God and went to God. . . ." To use a homely phrase, and to put it in terms of a familiar and beloved song, death for Jesus was "going home." It is that for the Christian. He simply changes domains and dwelling places—he leaves the world of the seen and the temporal for the world of the unseen and the eternal, he moves from the earthly house of this tabernacle into the Father's house of many mansions, the building of God eternal in the heavens. One of the blessed ministries of Christ is to deliver those who through life are in bondage to the fear of death.

Shadows Over the Sacred.

They had gathered for the Passover, the most sacred of the Jewish feasts. It was a time of high privilege and spiritual possibilities. But darkness hung over it. The disciples in general, like petulant children, were squabbling over the places of preferment, and over the positions of prominence. And Judas in particular was there with a dark sin in his bosom, the determination to betray his Master. How subtle the devil is, how subversive are his tactics. He dares invade the holy of holies of life, he tries to defile the sanctities of the spirit. But even at that, one should bring these things into the presence of Christ, that they might be seen in their true light, and that, by grace they might be cast out. Those who habitually absent themselves from public or private worship thereby deny themselves of an experience that every man needs if he is to live at his best.

The Saviour, But the Servant.

"Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God . . . took a towel and girded himself . . . and began to wash the disciples' feet." That is one of the most remarkable and in some senses the most unbelievable event in history. Here was Jesus Christ, the Son of God, conscious of the fact that he had come from God and was going to God, humbling himself, taking upon himself the form of a servant, and doing the work of a slave or household servant. Here is a new ideal of greatness, a new insight into the grandeur of service. It was when he was most conscious of his divinity or his deity that he stooped most low. How this scene ought to humble us, and cause us to "pour contempt on all our pride." It was simply a dramatization of the statement of the Master that he that would be great must be the servant of all, and that even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many.

It Was Too Much for Simon Peter.

It was, of course, an embarrassing experience for the disciples—to see their Master and Teacher doing in such a fine spirit, what they because of false pride had refused to do. But none of them said anything, except Peter. It was just too much for the old fisherman. He cried out that he just could not stand for it. It must have broken the old fellow's heart to see his Lord on his knees washing his feet. But it must be so, and in characteristic fashion, when Peter found out that Jesus was minded to do just that, he cried out almost in agony, that he wanted Christ to wash not only his feet, but his hands and his head. There did not have to be any more object lessons on the greatness of service after this scene in the upper room.

Ye Ought Also To Wash One Another's Feet.

These are the words of Jesus, and they cannot easily be read out of the record. There are those who think that they are to be taken literally, and they still have a service of foot-washing in connection with their religious services. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. But Jesus was here stating a principle instead of merely giving a rule. He was saying that those who are his followers must be willing to lay aside their dignity—that is their false dignity—and be willing to do even the humblest tasks in the spirit of their Lord. If he, our Lord and Master had this spirit, how much more ought it to characterize our lives.

The Secret of Joy.

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." To be sure there is joy in knowledge. The scientist thrills with joy when he makes some new discovery, and the student is happy when he learns new truth. But ultimately joy comes from doing the things we know we ought to do. Most of us, indeed all of us, know better than we do. Our lack is not of knowledge, but of will. The emotion waits upon the performance. There are many folks who are waiting as they say until they feel like a Christian ought to feel, before they are willing to join the church. But that is not the divine order. If we would know the joy, we must do. If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them.

One of You Shall Betray Me.

He was talking to his disciples, not to the multitudes, to those who had been with him and those who had shared most intimately his life. But even one of these was to betray him and another was to deny him. We have this treasure in earthen vessels. Privilege involves peril. It is not how much privilege a man has, but what he does with his privileges. It is not how much a man knows about Christ, but how he responds to Christ that is determinative. Come to think of it life is pretty serious business after all. And the greatest disaster that can happen to the human soul is to be separated from God. Let no man idly speculate whether others will betray his Lord. Let every man search his own heart, and ask his Lord, "Is it I?"

The treatment of those who wrong us is a crucial problem in human relations. Jesus commands us to meet such situations by loving our enemies. This approach which can be simply phrased as returning good for evil, is either sentimentality or insight.

made martyrs of many of them, knew that God was "in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." And they were assured that no merely human figure could arouse such knowledge any more than such could have aroused a Thomas, his doubts stilled at last, to cry, "My Lord and my God."

The whole New Testament needs to be taken into account if Christianity is to be known—at least New Testament Christianity. The fact of Christ cannot be divorced from the interpretation of the fact. The two are inextricably bound together. To try to separate the one from the other is either to emasculate the Christ or to leave the interpretation of the Apostles hanging in mid-air. Unless the Apostles' interpretation is accepted, the central meaning of Christmas—Emmanuel, God with us—is lost. Unless the voice of Christ is more than that of a Prophet, however pre-eminent, the cross becomes solely a pathetic commentary on man's ethical myopia and the resurrection becomes little more than a fanciful parable of man's wishful thinking—a newer myth of Phoenix arising from the ashes—or a type for those recurrent renewals which are presumed to be natural to humanity. A truncated, synoptic Jesus cannot account for the Apostles nor can it adequately account for the rise and the persistence of the church.

Why, then, should there be so much apparent hesitancy when speaking of Jesus in any other terms than as Leader of Men, Exemplar of Noble Living? Even "divine" must be suggested in a qualified sense and forever printed with the initial letter from the lower case. Does one expect to broaden the appeal of Jesus by reducing him to the lowest common denominator? That was not the Apostles' way. That is not the way the New Testament presents Jesus. With whatever christology one attempts to explain it, the Apostles knew the immediacy of God in Christ, knew their redemption because He was their Redeemer. They knew the awful weight of guilt when searched by His eyes, God's eyes, and they knew the exultation of release from that guilt through God's grace given in Christ's act on Calvary. One thing was certain to the Apostles: when they had dealings with Christ, they had dealings with God.

It will be necessary for the new crosses and altars in the churches to revive a similar sureness of the God-Christ, Christ-God awareness if whole-souled worship is to be established. For there is nothing in Humanity-At-Its-Best, however capitalized, which can induce worship. An honest man cannot be struck to his knees by contemplation of the high potentialities which lie within himself, or within the human race, or within a Representative Man. There can be little worship when a man scorns his knees altogether as instruments of prayer and feels that true religion is properly expressed by standing erect, eyes open, searching for inspiration in those lofty achievements which mankind hopefully projects ahead of himself. With such a mental attitude worship can never be more than strained and unnatural. But put the cross and the altar back in the center. Renew or, if need be, come to ones own original discovery that "God is in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." Then one can—he must—worship. That is the way it happened to the Apostles. At first they did not understand. They followed afar off even to Calvary. But later they understood what the Cross meant, what Jesus is. They gloried in it, lived in it, died for it, and passed on their knowledge of their Redemptive Faith as the priceless gift to the world. Christianity remains at heart that same Redemptive Faith or it has little to offer which cannot be found elsewhere.

By all means the cross should be placed in the center of the church, much more, placed in the center of Christian consciousness. And, perhaps, some day even the steeples may be re-erected and Protestants be eager to place on them, confronting the world, a cross rather than a weather-vane.

A CHINESE AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

stand the meaning of the lamentations I now fully realized the loss of both mother and father. Alas! how pitiable, miserable, lonely an orphan was I! Therefore, all the burden of the family was put upon me. Just then there was peace in Mintsing, and I immediately came back to teach in the Mai Cing primary school for two years. Through frugality I had saved a good sum out of my scanty earnings and after estimating that it might be enough to cover the expenses of a semester, I started to study again at Union High School. But at the beginning of the next term, as I had used all my money and had no other source of income I decided to take nurses training at the Union Hospital. However, Principal Yang and Mr. Thelin considered me to be good in character and ability and worthy of further education, so I was given two scholarships, one from the Foochow Rotary Club and one from the school, and with extra work in the Dean's office. During my third year I was given a chance to teach in the primary school so there were no more financial difficulties until I graduated for which I gratefully thank God because He is gracious and kind to me. After graduation I taught chemistry and physics at the Uk Cing Girls Junior Middle School and was simultaneously head of the primary school of the same institution. This was very helpful in introducing me to engage in education work. Thus as the years passed, the need of marriage increased proportionately; so in 1937 I married Miss Lau Hua-Nguk. I now have two boys.

Once while teaching at Uk Cing, a friend asked me to do some important business for him. I rode a bicycle too hard, which brought on a very serious illness, which seriously affected my stomach. According to the report of the doctors there was much bleeding from my stomach, which several times made me fear it would end my life. For God's salvation by glory, majesty, thanksgiving to the only God our Saviour forever!

At the beginning of the Sino-Japanese war there was great danger along the coast. Because of the emergency the Union High School moved to Lutu where I had the opportunity to teach in this institution. After a short time the government ordered all schools to move inland. I followed the school to Tsiangloh where I continued my work for three and one half years. During this time a yearning for further study came over me. Being encouraged by friends and stimulated by the help of a scholarship from the school I began my college life at Fukien Christian University in the autumn of 1943. During the past three years I had the good fortune to obtain the International Scholarship and to be chosen as Model Student.

Now I am on tiptoe of expectation that my dear teachers may edify and polish me, a dullard, to fulfill my purpose to become a useful instrument for my country. It is my aim to carry out the instructions of my teachers in order that I may repay them for their kindness; so I write this autobiography to admonish and encourage myself.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt

Dear Friends:

On February 20 we had snow, rain and sleet falling at the same time. It made us feel that a real pinch of winter weather was here. It pinched us more from the fact that we had been enjoying such warm balmy days all winter. Except for about a week sometime ago when the thermometer dropped to twelve degrees one morning, we have had a very mild winter. But this morning, February 21, it is clear, with ice covering the trees and snow covering the ground; it is slick as glass. I drove my car out and started to the orphanage and got along all right until I got to the end of the driveway and could not turn in there. So I just left the car and walked in.

Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, our full-time pastor of our Elon Community Church, and his assistant, Miss Browne, are taking right much interest in the orphanage children. They have a service at the orphanage each Wednesday night at seven o'clock. The children from all the buildings gather in the old building where the service is held. The larger ones sit in chairs and the little tots sit on a large rug. It is a beautiful sight to watch, especially the little tots sitting there with their ears open in order to catch every word. Dr. Dollar reads an appropriate section of scripture and has prayer. Then he makes a suitable talk to the children. Then Miss Browne takes over with a beautiful Bible story, which the children enjoy very much. Miss Browne has a wonderful way in getting her story across to the children, and they get its meaning. We feel that Dr. Dollar and Miss Browne have a wonderful opportunity to do lots of good with our children here. The services they put on are inspiring as well as interesting, and are enjoyed by us older folks as well as the children. Dr. Dollar and Miss Browne have already won a very warm place in the hearts of the entire orphanage family, and we hope much good will be accomplished.

our nostrils, who are but passing shadows, hail thine everlastingness. Give us that faith, we beseech thee, that enables us to exalt in thine immeasurableness. We bless thee for deliverance from the thoughts of Deity that are like unto ourselves, and thank thee for the width, and the height, and the depth of the majesty of God."

Doesn't this old prayer give us the sense of God—good, powerful, eternal; in contrast to man—sinful, weak, limited in so many ways, doing the things he would not do, and leaving undone the things he would do, here today and gone tomorrow? In other words, this prayer, and the hymn of Samuel Longfellow, and this letter of Paul to the Thessalonians indicate that our chief business at all times, and particularly in a time of spiritual stress and strain, is to lay hold on God. For only so, do the great benedictions of life come—grace, comfort, hope, peace.

If religion means anything at all, it means that God can come into our lives and bless us. It is only necessary for us to adjust our ways to him, in whom we live and move and have our being. God never comes into a person's life in the way a stone is dropped into a basket. He has to do with our spirits. He comes to us through our love, our friendship, our loyalty, our devotion. You can't live an immoral life all your days, and then expect to be taken up by the everlasting arms on your death-bed. A legalistic religion may offer some such hope, but the moral aspirations of men are against it.

All Capone died last week-end. He was a notorious character, as we all know, wrapped up with every form of illicit business, including murder itself. The newspaper accounts of his death tell us that he received the sacraments of the Roman Catholic church a few days before he died. In terms of Roman Catholic logic, his spirit was thus prepared for an ultimate place in heaven.

Another world-famous person, Grace Moore, died last week-end also. She was a lovely singer, a beautiful character, and brought joy and happiness and life to millions of people through the ministry of song. In connection with her death, newspaper stories pointed out that she had expected soon to return to this country, and that upon her return she hoped to join the Roman Catholic Church. But Grace Moore never got back. She died before she received the ritual of the Roman Catholic Church which would have made her a member. Are we, therefore, to infer that her soul was not properly prepared for heaven? This must be the logical conclusion of a church which claims to hold exclusively "The Keys of the Kingdom." It seems that it makes no difference what kind of life a person lives; the important thing is to be lucky enough to receive the correct ritual.

But the religious aspirations of men are better emphasized in the scriptures: "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" Our own denominational leaders put it this way: "Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership," the implication being that it is also a sufficient test of heaven itself.

Paul told those Thessalonians simply to follow Christ. He would give them grace, comfort, hope, peace, in this world and in the next. For Christ himself knew the rewards of high religion. As a boy he committed to memory: "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." It was his custom to attend divine services on the Sabbath. He sang with the congregation: "Fret not thyself because of evil-doers; rest in the Lord; wait patiently for him, for he shall give thee thy heart's desire." God was not far away. The presence of the Father fell across the busy days of his life. He was the calmest soul that ever walked this earth. And how he steadied the souls of countless millions throughout life and death, and into eternity!

So he comes to each one of us in our disappointments and says: "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

No wonder the Apostle Paul ended his letter with the benediction: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Marriages

KLINE - EARLY.

A lovely wedding was solemnized on Thursday evening, January 30, at 7:30 o'clock at the Bethlehem Christian Church at Tenth Legion when Miss Jean Eloise Kline, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Kline, of Tenth Legion, became the bride of Mr. Kermit Early, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Early of Route 1, Harrisonburg, Va.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Guy H. Veazey before a candlelit altar of evergreens and palms, set off by two huge baskets of white lilies and snapdragons on either side.

During the ceremony, Charles Bazzle of Harrisonburg, played "Through the Years" and "O Perfect Love," and Mrs. Helen Early of Harrisonburg, sang "Always" and "I Love You Truly." "Liebestraum," "Intermezzo" and the traditional wedding marches were played.

The bridegroom had as his best man, Eldon Lineweaver, while the ushers were Lloyd Miller, and Elwood Kline, brother of the bride.

On their return from their wedding trip, the couple will make their home at Pure Village, south of Harrisonburg, Va.

The bride is a graduate of Broadway High School and Madison College, and is now employed as a receptionist at the offices of the Zigler Canning Co., Timberville. The bridegroom is a graduate of Bridgewater High School and served fifteen months in the Navy. He is now a senior at Bridgewater College.

In Memoriam

WRIGHT.

On September 7, 1946, God in His infinite wisdom took from Seagrove Christian Church one of our beloved members, Walter E. Wright.

He joined the church when a young man and served faithfully until his death at the age of sixty-five years.

He was always ready to lend a helping hand. We will greatly miss him in the church and community.

We extend to his family our sincere and heart-felt sympathy and commend them to the all-wise God who said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

COOK.

Evelyn Florence Newland was born September 27, 1893, near Edinburg, Virginia; spent her entire life in the same community and died February 5, 1947. She married Elmer W. Cook, June 3, 1911. To this union were born two children, Alfred and Helen, both of the home. She confessed faith in Christ at fifteen years of age and joined the Palmyra Christian Church and remained true and faithful for almost forty years. Funeral services were held from the Evangelical U. B. Church in Edinburg by her pastor, this writer, and the Rev. O. R. Kesner, pastor of the U. B. Church. Burial was in the Cedar Wood Cemetery, Edinburg. She was a good neighbor, a very faithful companion and mother. The Christ who was the source of her strength will bless and comfort those who mourn her passing.

MCCURDY.

In loving memory of our beloved sister, Mrs. Burdella McCurdy, many years a loyal and faithful member of the Winchester Church, and member of the Woman's Missionary Society, who passed from the earthly life to her eternal reward, November 25, 1946.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That while we shall miss her in the sweet fellowship of our work together, we will always cherish the memory of her friendship and her faithful service.

2. That to her loved ones we tender our heartfelt sympathy in the name of Him who is the Resurrection and the Life and who will comfort them in their sorrow.

3. That in humble resignation we bow to the will of our Heavenly Father who hath given us the assurance of Eternal Life through His Son, our blessed Savior, where those who trust in Him may dwell in His home of many mansions forever.

Respectfully submitted,

CATHER.

"Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." Such is the end of the Christian's earthly existence. Such, we believe, marked the end of the earthly life of our beloved sister, Mrs. E. W. Cather, charter member of the Winchester Church, many years a member of the Woman's Missionary Society, who died on December 6, 1946. She was patient in her suffering and with calm resignation, which reflected a firm faith, passed into the shadows, unafraid.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we rejoice in the triumph of her release from the burden of pain, to enter into the life more abundant, to be forever with the Lord.

2. That we share the sorrow of her loved ones, but comfort them with the hope which we have in Christ of meeting loved ones again in the land where flowers never fade and where sorrow and separation never come.

3. That while we shall miss her presence, we will be consoled by the thought that our loss is her eternal gain.

Respectfully submitted,
MARTHA SIRBAUGH,
FRANCES H. COOPER,
VIOLET PUGH,
Committee.

BRICKHOUSE.

Mrs. Lulu F. Brickhouse, widow of the late Edward J. Brickhouse, passed away Saturday, February 15, at her residence, 2 Greenwood Apartment, 623 W. Princess Anne Road, Norfolk, Va.

Mrs. Brickhouse, who was in her ninety-first year, was the daughter of the late William H. and Mary Frances K. Haynes. She was a life-long resident of Norfolk County and Norfolk.

Well known for her generosity to civic enterprises as well as the church and missionary interests, she was a devoted Christian. At an early age she united with the church, and throughout her long life her chief desire was to follow in the footsteps of her Master. Her many friends through the years have been impressed with her cheerfulness, her sweet smile so expressive of the radiant spirit within, and her great faith in prayer.

In recent years she had published four booklets of verse expressive of her Christian ideals and a book of Daily Texts and Prayers. Through these it was her earnest desire to help others find comfort, strength and inspiration.

She is survived by three daughters: Mrs. G. F. Birdsong, Miss Fanny Brickhouse, and Mrs. S. M. Atkinson; three sons: T. E. Brickhouse and Edward J. Brickhouse; five grandsons and one great-grandmother.

Christian Teaching for a New Day

By NEVIN C. HARNER*

Excerpts from an Address before the International Council of Religious Education

What are the emphases which should predominate if we are to prove equal to our responsibilities and our opportunities?

1. First, and perhaps foremost, we must ground children, youth and adults in the Christian faith more effectively than we have done heretofore. There is a Christian faith despite many diversities of interpretation. Was there ever a time when this faith was so sorely needed? People need it as a refuge in the face of personal and social disaster, actual and threatened. They need it equally as a touchstone in the manifold moral perplexities of life, and millions of them do not have it. And so a first claim upon our attention is the presentation of this faith in all its fullness with the aid of the finest methods we can devise, and out of hearts convinced that it is the pearl of great price for us and for all men. This is the first commandment with promise for Christian education.

2. We must undergird Christian family life and recapture the home as the primary agency of religious nurture. It is not news that the family as an institution has been increasingly beset by many trials in recent years. The result is not merely crowded divorce courts, but widespread unhappiness also, and millions of tomorrow's home makers with no memories of normal home life. Here is a ministry for Christian education that both challenges and staggers the imagination. We have forgotten, on occasion, that God made homes before He made churches, and that it is the home where the basic business of Christian nurture is transacted, or is not, as the case may be. It is safe to say that we shall see a new emphasis upon the home, not merely as an object of Christian education, but as the major instrument of Christian education. This is the second commandment with promise for the forces of Christian education.

3. We must fit people for effective corporate membership in the world-wide church of Christ. We who stand within the Christian education movement have not been very good at this. One of the finest things we can do for the individuals in our care is to make them "very members incorporate in the mystical body of Christ," and one of the finest things we can do for social betterment is to catch persons up in a revitalized Christian community from which they can work outward toward the social ills that surround them. And the world-wide church is looming before us with a new clarity. When a United States soldier writes home to a Chicago paper that he has been converted to vital Christianity by a South Seas native, the world-wide church is upon us. And so, the times call for a new teaching about the church—its past history and its present scope and reality. They call also for new strategies of introducing children helpfully to the church as they find it around them—its worship, its organization, its finances—but the first step is for us ourselves and the many teachers and leaders throughout the country to see the church, high and lifted up, as it is, and as it can be under God.

4. We must fit people of all ages for intelligent world citizenship. It has been a long time since a book title so readily slipped into the common speech as was the case with Wendell Willkie's "One World." The reason is that this title epitomized both the reality which we have seen taking shape around us, and our desperate hopes for what we feel must be. But this "one world" will not be realized automatically. And surely Christian education has a solemn responsibility to prepare people for one world under God with all its might, because we are the followers of the Prince of Peace and the original custodians of this very dream.

5. We must redouble our efforts to reach the millions who are untouched by any systematic Christian teaching. We need once more the old evangelistic fervor implemented by new methods suitable to the new day. We are called upon to put forth aggressive recruiting efforts in every church and church school, and to make full use of the weekday church school, and the vacation church school, which have proven themselves to be valuable evangelistic agencies. But it seems clear that we must go beyond all this and not rest content until we devise a formula for including religion in non-sectarian fashion within the public school itself. Surely this can not be done in terms of doctrine nor in separate courses in religion, but there are able minds which say it can be done as part and parcel of many courses. Here, indeed, is a major task which will require the maximum of Christian statesmanship, but until it is done, all efforts to Christianize our populace will remain partial and be only partially effective.

An Audience with the Emperor

By Miss Alice E. Cary

Some of you have seen accounts in the newspaper about the audience four of us had with the Emperor, and have asked about it. It all came from an idea of Dr. Kagawa who thought it would be a fine thing for the Christian movement here in Japan if a group of missionaries could have such an audience. It would have been such a new departure that I must say I did not take the suggestion very seriously, for I did not think it would ever happen. Imagine my surprise when the word came that four of us were to be ready to go to the palace the day after Christmas, and that I was to be one of the four. This can truly be counted a unique occasion: first, because we were missionaries and not members of any diplomatic corps; secondly, because women were included in the audience, for the first time except for Evangeline Booth, I am told, who was received because of her rank as a General; and lastly, because of the informality of the whole meeting, one at which we sat and talked to the Emperor in a most friendly and uninhibited sort of way. The entire lack of stiff formalism was a surprise and a pleasure. We were not even told how we should dress, nor when we got there, what to do or what to say. The only suggestion made at all came after we had been ushered into the room where the audience was to be held, and had been seated in the circle of chairs placed at the far end before a pair of gorgeous gold screens. The central chair, the same style as the ones we were sitting on, was left vacant, and the interpreter, Mr. Goto, quietly said we might rise when His Majesty entered. I think we would have known that anyway, but we appreciated being reminded.

We were not kept waiting at all, the Emperor coming in with two aides directly over to where we were standing, shaking hands with us each in turn, with a friendly word of welcome. Then we all sat down, something never done in the presence of the Emperor in the past, you may be sure. Turning from one to the other of us, he asked all sorts of questions through Mr. Goto, showing that he had acquainted himself with our work and our plans, and that he was interested in all we were doing. For about twenty minutes he wanted to know about the proposed Christian University, the work of the Commission of Six, and expressed appreciation for the long years of service of Mrs. Topping and her husband here in Japan. Mrs. Topping is a veteran missionary here who was one of the four. It was remarkable how much he knew of what we had done, and how eager he was to send messages of thanks and good will to the people of America, especially for the food that had saved the lives of his people this past summer. At the close he went out of his way to send a special word of congratulation to John R. Mott for being awarded the Nobel Prize. With that he rose, shook hands around once more with words of farewell, wishes for a safe trip to those soon returning to the States, and of hope for further meeting to the rest.

WHY GO TO CHURCH AND WORSHIP WITH OTHERS.

I. It is good for you. True. But that is the least reason. Would you say, "I love mother because it's good for me?" Self culture is a result of worship in the church; but that is only a by-product.

II. It is good for the church. True. But that's not the chief reason. Your neglect won't kill the church. Though you stay away, others will keep the church alive. But the church must say about any vagrant, absent member what Browning said in his poem, "The Lost Leader":

We shall march prospering—not through his presence;
Songs may inspirit us—not from his lyre;
Deeds will be done—while he boasts his quiescence,
Still bidding crouch whom the rest bade aspire.

If all able-bodied members, free to come, will do so, attendance will double; and such an assembly would attract and hold others. The growth of your church depends on your faithful, regular attendance.

III. Come for the sake of Christ. Worship is not addressed to the people in the pews but to God revealed in Christ. Worship is not provided so that folks can enjoy music or a sermon. Worship is not a lecture or a concert. The music, prayers and sermon are offered to God. Don't call the congregation an audience. God is the audience. Dr. Coffin's book, Christian Worship, says: "Worship is appreciation. It is the awed and glad spontaneous response of the spirit of man confronted by the God of Christian revelation. . . . Because worship is appreciation, we worship best in a devout assembly. In a Christian congregation are stored memories and a corporate devoutness which exceed the religious feeling of all its members. The ardor and the expectancy of the assembly augment the warmth and wistfulness of each worshipper."

"THE SECOND MILE" DRAMATIZED IN "THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD."

Christ's admonition, "If any man sue thee at law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him two," is the theme of the ninth episode—paranetically titled "The Second Mile" —in "The Greatest Story Ever Told" series to be heard Sunday, March 9, at 6:30 P. M., EST, over ABC.

As the story opens, young Daniel—son of an executed leader of the Hebrew's underground resistance to the Roman conquerors—reluctantly agrees to his poverty-stricken mother's plea that he seek employment from his wealthy but cowardly uncle. The latter desperately hopes that the vengeful youth will break his appointment for an interview and thus will keep from the uncle's door the stern eye of the legionnaires.

But the heedless youth, en route to his appointment, harangues a bullying Roman soldier and as a result is forced into service as the tyrant's batman. While he marches before the sadistic trooper, they come upon the Master speaking to the multitude. He singles out Daniel for his admonition to bear humbly the oppressor's burden. And the youth, inspired by the Master and remembering his father's plight, determines to be silent and to bear passively the Roman's taunts and jeers.

However, as the journey progresses, Daniel, goaded by outraged pride, desperately weighs his devotion to his mother and the desire to avenge his martyr father.

This modern language dramatization of the New Testament parable is faithfully translated in today's idiom by the noted editor, Fulton Oursler.

JUST ANOTHER CASE—WHOSE CHILD IS IT?

A nurse came out calling for boiled water, or boiling water. As I went into the hospital I saw Dr. Wang going into action. From Mr. T'ien, the accountant, I learned about it—an eight-year-old boy had just been carried in, his left hand blown off at the wrist and a big hole blown into his abdomen. Little chance of saving him. But if the hospital were open and equipped, if there were an adequate staff, if there were medicines on hand—sulpha drugs, anti-tetanus, etc.—maybe he could be saved. And maybe he would grow up to be of outstanding usefulness in the China-that-is-to-be. Who knows?

A familiar story in this part of the world—dry grass and weeds had been raked up for fuel. The grenade must have been raked up along with the rest. And when it was put into the fire, unnoticed, it exploded, and this tragic sufferer was carried in to what used to be our Fenchow Hospital. Only the opening of a dispensary has been authorized since we

WITH, OR WITHOUT, CHRIST.

Dear Fellow-Worker in Christ:

The choice is ours—to make—a happy, peaceful, friendly, victorious world in Christ, or a war-torn, starving, sinful, sick, and fearful world without Christ!

“Enlightened, rich, powerful, we Christians of the United States, possessors of the atomic bomb, are in a position either to save or destroy mankind!”

The Congregational Christian Church members of the Southern Convention must accept their share of that responsibility! What can we do? What we will, we can do!

You have charged your Mission Board with the responsibility of being your agency for extending the spirit of Christ to the world. We are committed by the Gospel and by tradition to the boundless mission of the Christian Church—the mission of redemption through Christ and good-will among men in Him.

Your Mission Board enters upon the Mission Period—March, April, May, June—with a concern for its grave responsibility to raise $27,000 with which to help make America Christian through Home Missions, and to share our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ on the Foreign Field. We are especially committed to strengthen our churches, to organize and build new churches where they are needed within the Convention. We are committed to support our missionary representatives in the Shaowu Mission, China.

Then, we have the larger missionary responsibility of helping carry the Gospel to more than forty million people without Christ in the areas of the world definitely committed to the Congregational Christians. If we fail, these people will be without Christ and we will be without victory—for the other denominations have their work to do as great or greater than ours. But we will not fail! We cannot fail!

The Mission Board asks the Congregational Christians of the Convention to contribute a penny-a-meal each day during March, April, May, June to help make a Christian world. Our people can and will respond to this opportunity if it is presented to them. We shall have to depend upon you to present it and lead the way.

After long and diligent search, we have been unable to find regular boxes or coin collectors for these gifts and we suggest that our people take a glass jar or a box, paste the Sticker on it, and place it upon the family table to receive the offerings for the extension of Christ's Kingdom throughout the whole world.

We are depending upon you to help make the penny-a-meal plan a success. You can and will help us succeed. Gifts should be sent to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, North Carolina.

Write to the Convention Office for Stickers and other information.

VALEDICTORY AT PORTSMOUTH.

With a Communion Service in the morning and a Consecration Service in the evening, a Sunday came to a close in Portsmouth, Virginia, and it marked the end of my three-year pastorate there.

For the Consecration Service I had tried to buy red roses, symbol of the blood of martyrs. The theme was: “Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin.” Those present who were willing to consecrate themselves to continue as faithful members of the church, whatever the sacrifice, were asked to come forward. Nearly everyone in the church did so, including two people who joined the church that night. All were given red carnations, substituted for the red roses, as a symbol of the degree of their consecration. It was an inspiring service and an inspiring day. It is my belief that they will remain as soldiers of Jesus Christ in that church.

These are they who, it may be through real tribulation, will yet cause that church to be the blessing to the community which it can be. It has had all of my life for the past three years. It will be in my heart always. I shall miss the church and its members and the whole community, for it became a part of me.

It was not necessary that anything else be done to cause me to have warm feelings toward them. Yet we could not help but be moved by the many cards and personal good wishes expressed. The young people prepared a paper which I shall always cherish which they read during Sunday school. As we drew near the Little Creek Ferry, hot coffee and home-made rolls were there to make our going a little easier. We enjoyed the eatables but how much more the 4:00 A. M. thoughtfulness which prompted it.

Before we left, the Ladies' Aid had a party for us. Herbert Council, a former pastor, was present and offered words of kindness. He and his wife, who are now at the Rosemont Church, helped to make the event a more honorable one.

At the party, a beautiful floor lamp was presented to us by the Ladies' Aid. The following Sunday the Official Board of the church presented me with one month's salary with their best wishes.

The young adult group of the church gave a most helpful check and there were several individuals who in like manner presented us with gifts, including a fine set of Bible dictionaries. This same group also gave a party which was well planned and most friendly.

On the previous Sunday night a delegation of more than one hundred from the HI-Y and the Tri-Hi-Y Clubs of Portsmouth were present. During the evening the president of the HI-Y Council brought the greetings of the members and also presented me with scrolls which were signed by the members of all the clubs and thus made me very happy once again in my association with these fine young people. The club of which I was religious adviser further presented me with a jeweled tie clasp.

While Mrs. Mason shared in all of these gifts, she was the particular recipient of a large woolen blanket which is even warm enough for New Jersey, yet light enough that she can hardly feel its weight.

To all of these things we could easily say, “That's just what we needed” and mean it literally. Yet an even greater blessing was the warmth of good feeling made known to us in so many less obvious ways.

We shall probably never be wealthy in a monetary way. But we shall always feel rich while we have so many fine friends, and this is especially true of Portsmouth. If the Lord leads, we shall someday be back in some church in the South. Meanwhile, we shall follow his guidance and do his will in the First Congregational Church of Paterson, New Jersey. The address is 461 Ellison Street, for those who may wish to write to us.

RANDALL C. MASON.

Knowledge of that Living Presence here and now is the essence of the Christian life. I don't know how you interpret the doctrine of the Second Advent—but never so emphasize the wonder of a future glorious day that you forget the thrill of the real presence of the Saviour with you in every moment of the present.—G. M. McAdam, in “Australian Baptist.”

ON THE SHOULDERS OF GIANTS.

"There were giants in the earth in those days . . . men of renown."—Genesis 6:4.

Our study of the Bible has shifted largely from anthropology to theology. We are more interested in the moral and intellectual stature than in the physical stature of those giants. And giants they were! Deprived of all modern educational paraphernalia, they forged mighty intellectual and moral precepts. With unaided powers they laid the enduring foundations of civilization. Men of imperishable renown they were!

"The dwarf sees farther than the giant when he has the giant's shoulders to mount on." This statement of Coleridge has great significance for all our generation. Dwarfs are we, but we have giants' shoulders to mount. Many of us do not mount easily, and since we are not mounted securely we do not remain mounted permanently. It is the task of religion and education to help us overcome our trepidation at high altitude and accustom our sight to the far view. Oh yes, there is standing room yet on those broad, lofty shoulders!

We, like the children of Israel, have been obsessed with the consciousness of our giant enemies, but our strength and our hope lies in our literary, political, financial and spiritual giants. Each century has had its giants, and we have the giants of the centuries. History provides a host of shoulders upon which we may stand for needed perspective. We should be able to see as no other generation has been able to see. Ours should be an age of vision. Like a colossus, we should stand astride giants and peer into the future. The wisdom of the centuries is ours, but atomic power must be matched by ethereal vision.

What do we see? Do we see the "peril of unlearned lessons?" Do we see that injustice leads invariably to violence? Do we see that sin is both personal and social? Do we see with the prophet that God requires "goodness and not sacrifice?" Do we see with St. Paul that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth?" Do we see with St. John that "the Kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever?" Vision is more important than television, for "where there is no vision the people perish."

GOD'S ETERNAL PURPOSE

"Man may deface it, but he can never permanently efface it," so declared Dr. Joseph R. Sizo at Union Seminary in Richmond last week.

"Man may deface it." How true! Through man's carelessness the lovely forest is burned. Through man's failure to live by the Golden Rule slums appear and remain. Through man's thoughtlessness fields are eroded and forests are denuded. Through man's recklessness the children of God are bruised and maimed. Through man's ignorance and laziness God's blueprint for the Kingdom is not realized. Through man's inhumanity to man God's earthly garden is turned into a battlefield and graveyard. Yes, man may and does efface God's plan, God's creation. The Cross is the crowning example of what man's worst does to God's best.

"But he can never permanently efface it." Hitler tried—desperately. He decried God's plan, defamed God's name and defaced God's creation. But "After the bomber comes the builder," we are reminded by Bishop Oxnam. Man's extremity is God's opportunity. This is the reiterated faith expressed in the Scriptures. After man has done his worst, "The Kingdom's of this world are become the Kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ."

CONTEMPORARY MARTYRS?

Yes, believe it or not, there are contemporary martyrs. It is a bit difficult to believe here in comfortable America where we are relatively free from persecution, where faith expresses itself too generally as intellectual assent than volitional commitment. Pastor Martyn Niemöller has been telling his American audiences about the Christian martyrs in Germany. Here is his sobering testimony:

"It is astonishing that 2,000 years after Christ, men should become martyrs for their religious faith. Pastors and laymen who were killed by the Nazi S. S. and the Gestapo died, not merely because they believed in Christ, but because they drew the consequences of that belief—they lived their faith.

"One of the earliest Christian leaders in Germany to be murdered for his Christian witness was Dr. Hans Weissler. He was a lawyer who was secretary of the Confessing Church in Germany. He was imprisoned in connection with a memorandum which the Confessing Church addressed to Adolf Hitler in 1936; protesting concentration camps, so-called mercy killings, persecution of the Jews, and the breakdown of justice in the German courts, and other matters rightly termed political by National Socialism. Weissler was charged with releasing the text of this protest to the Foreign Press. He was murdered at the Sachsenhausen concentration camp.

"Another martyr witness who gave his life was Pastor Paul Schneider of Dickensied. He was killed for protesting the murders practiced in concentration camps. From his cell window, every time the SS led a prisoner to the gallows, he cried out, 'The Word of God says, "Thou shalt not kill."'

"One of the most brilliant younger churchmen in Germany, Dr. Dietrich Bonhoeffer, was murdered for a prolonged opposition to war. Bonhoeffer, who was a graduate of Union Theological Seminary in New York, spent many years in underground activity against Hitler. He was arrested with the attempt to overthrow Hitler in July of 1944.

"Like these three martyrs who have been mentioned out a great number, every responsible person in Germany had to make a decision as to whose side he was on. Whether he was for Hitler with his doctrine of supermen and force, or whether he was for Christ and his teaching of righteousness and love. "No man can serve two masters."

Ours has not been an easy faith. "The blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church." During this Lenten season our minds should be saturated by the memory of those "who have come up out of great tribulation" and of him "who was perfected by the things which he suffered." Our comfortable living and fractional stewardship do not perpetuate the witness of the martyrs. The Cross has become an ornament rather than an experience for many of us. Our concerted willingness to suffer and sacrifice for Missions during Lent would help to heal the wounds of the world. Are we willing? Our Easter offering will tell the story.

The Judgment of Lent

By CARL HERMANN VOSS*

"The time has come for judgment to begin in the House of God." During the Lenten season that judgment traditionally has been of self: sackcloth and ashes, fasting and self-denial, the hermit's flagellence in the cave, the medieval monk scourging himself. The judgment begins with the self, but inevitably it includes society.

Today, the critique by religion must embrace the world. Today, during this Lenten season, we must throw the light of religion not only on self, but also on the nation and the society of the nations.

Such light reveals ugly areas at home. On the American scene there are at least four spheres in which judgment will be visited:

FIRST: There is abroad in respected circles an effort to create a Western bloc of nations under Anglo-American leadership—or its variant of a Union of Western European countries—to offset an Eastern bloc of nations within the Russian orbit of influence. These efforts, if successful, will split the world in two and make impossible for many generations the achievement of even an approximation of the One World idea. War, not peace, will ensue if we consent to suggestions which would parcel out the world to orbits of influence, either Soviet or American, British or any other national group. Against such easy but dangerous solutions we must be adamant. The UN is the internationally achieved and internationally acknowledged agency through which the world's peace is to be achieved. If we try to circumvent it, we run headlong into war.

SECOND: There is the danger that witch hunts against socially-minded men will, in the coming years, be the rule and not the exception. In back of the red-baiting heresy trial of the the effort of bigoted men to mold American policy along purely national lines. These individuals blithely disregard our international responsibilities.

THIRD, the reciprocal trade agreements have been opposed by profit-hungry men on both sides of the aisle in Congress. The painstaking work of razing trade barriers was started almost fifteen years ago and was carried on successfully in the 1930's to make possible the world trade so essential to world peace. That program was retarded by six years of war. Now it is jeopardized by the chauvinistic impulses of men who have not learned that America's prosperity is dependent up the world's prosperity.

FOURTH, there are isolationist-minded men at work seeking to sabotage the effectiveness of the International Trade Organization now in process of formation. To place crippling reservations on American membership in the ITO, as is the design of certain forces in this country, will undermine the entire structure of that organization and ultimately destroy it.

These are only four of the several areas in which we endanger the peace. They are sins of omission and sins of commission which impel us to say anew: the time has come for judgment to begin in the House of God.

If in the spirit of Lent, we plumb deep into our souls, we know that America is involved in a number of mortal sins—such sins as pride and envy, wrath and greed, sins which are opposed to the cardinal virtues.

In this hour, America faces the threat of these four dynamic dangers. If they are unrestrained, they may tend to make of America, paraphrasing Wordsworth:

" A fen
Of stagnant waters: altar sword, and pen,

Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and bower,
Have forfeited their ancient
. . . dower
. . . . We are selfish men."

The secret of Lent is this: the prophetic spirit is revived. Like an Isaiah and a Jeremiah, we are awed by the vision of God which helps to save us from our sins of the spirit. We are saved, by the grace of God, from such sins as a careless acceptance of the good or a callous acceptance of the bad.

Honest soul searching and condemnation of the base motives in both self and society would in the 1920's and 1930's have helped to avoid—or at least to postpone for many years—the tragedy of World War II. There is indeed a dismaying parallel between the post-war eras of World War I and World War II. If we are to avoid the debacle of a quarter of a century ago, we must submit our motives and our acts to rigorous scrutiny. Once again we must listen to the Biblical imperative: "Choose ye this day whom ye shall serve."

At the close of this second winter after World War II, the greater part of the world is still suffering desperately in the cruel aftermath of a titanic struggle. Much remains to be done. With the aid of an American leadership characterized by humility and understanding, a livable, tolerable world can be created. We have a reasonable chance under the aegis of the United Nations to banish war and want.

In the Lenten season the churches must create in the minds of men and women an honesty of mind and an integrity of spirit without which the peace will be jettisoned. The time has indeed come for judgment to begin in the House of God!

If we try to understand, we also must become living words. We refer to such a process when we say of a man that he is kindness itself. As we incarnate Christian virtue, we develop sensitivity to the inner drama of Holy Week. Meanings open to loving hearts which brilliant minds cannot understand.—Vere V. Loper.

Perhaps Jesus went before his bewildered followers to the city of his execution without feeling the impulse to flee to safety. We cannot know. At all events, the disciples who followed were afraid. We have a fellow-feeling for them and can even forgive them for deserting after the Last Supper, remembering that eventually they disciplined their fears and died the death of martyrs.—Vere V. Loper.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The sound of a very heavy pile driver by day, and the steady hum of an engine day and night, pumping water from some twenty wells driven more than twenty feet deep, keeps me quite conscious of the fact that a new telephone building is going up next door to the Suffolk Church. Much that goes on about us here now is novel and interesting. And being next door to us we can see it from the parsonage, and from scores of windows in the church and education building—and when we cannot see it we can hear it.

Before Christmas they began work on their lot which was covered, much of it, with young trees, bushes, briars, and a wilderness of vines and discarded bric-a-brac. It was something to see their mighty engines push away trees and topsoil as easily as a snowplow handles snow. Following such clearing came a giant machine that lifted nearly a cubic yard of solid clay like a boy eating icecream. Never had our quiet little city seen such might. An old peacan tree, fifty-two inches at the stump yielded to the onslaught, and in a little more than an hour's time tree, trunk and stump, were deposited in the valley in the rear, almost as easily as a gardener would have moved a shrub from his lawn. For several weeks while the fifteen foot basement foundation was being dug "sidewalk superintendents" were in abundance. At night when the machines were still I wrote a little verse I entitled: "Power"—

With great machines they dug the clay,
With power they pushed the trees away,
And those who watched were wont to say,
They'd never seen such might.

But when at last machines were still,
And silent stars obeyed His will,
A great power their hearts did fill
Than all man's toys at night.

The architects are demanding a strong foundation—cement piling fifty feet deep bound together with many cubic yards of cement, making a solid foundation of reinforced steel and cement. Then, too, I like to reflect on the fact that there is cooperation—precision-like in many ways—by civil engineers, architects, draftsmen, excavators, pile drivers, plumbers, metal workers, carpenters, bricklayers, roofers, machinists, electricians, cabinet-makers, and many other workers.

There is the demand for cooperation and patience and business integrity on the part of many. It is just a little birdseye view of modern construction but it has its lessons for those of us who would build a Christian society in our modern day. We, too need long hours of painstaking planning, the patient laying of solid foundations, and the close adherence to the commission and the blueprint. Each one on the lot next door does his part, and they work as though there was contentment and joy in the teamwork which they see accomplishing something more every day. Let us work even more patiently and steadily for the Master Builder and with a song in our hearts do every day's work as it comes.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING CLASSES CONDUCTED FOR ALAMANCE COUNTY CHURCHES.

The week of February 10-14 was one of outstanding value to some of our churches in Alamance County, North Carolina. During this week a group of Leadership Training Classes were conducted in the Burlington Church for Sunday school officers, and for church officers and members. All our churches in the county were invited to share in these classes, and eight churches sent representatives. About seventy-five were enrolled in the three classes, and about half of this number attended every one of the five sessions. The average attendance was about sixty.

The classes met for one hour each evening, Monday through Friday, and the full hour was given to instructions through lecture and discussion. The three classes conducted were: (1) "Teaching Children in the Sunday School;" (2) "Teaching Young People in the Sunday School;" and (3) "Churchmanship." The courses of teaching children was led by Miss Lula Browne of Elon College. Miss Browne is an instructor in Religious Education in Elon College and Director of Religious Education in the Elon Community Church. She is a very effective teacher with a good knowledge of her subject and an excellent Christian personality.

The course on teaching young people was led by Miss Elizabeth Chicoine of Elon College. Miss Chicoine is Field Director of the Southern Convention in the field of Young People's and Women's work. She is a very energetic and tireless worker with a love for young people and the church.

Dr. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, led the class on Churchmanship. Dr. Scott has an excellent understanding of, and love for, the work of the church and a zeal for the advancement of the Kingdom of God through the church.

The quality of the leadership in these classes made them an outstanding success. It is evident that those who attended these classes are better leaders because of them. At the close of the classes on Friday evening the group expressed the desire that similar classes be conducted each year.

One of the highlights of the week was on Tuesday evening when Dr. Albert W. Palmer, Moderator of the General Council, spoke to the entire group on Evangelism.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

At the close of worship services Sunday morning (February 16) at Timber Ridge Church, the congregation was again called to order by Mr. A. C. Oates, chairman of the Board of Trustees, and little Ruby Seldon marched up the isle and presented the pastor and wife with a beautiful basket decorated with silver paper. The basket contained fifty-one silver dollars, most of them dated 1922—the year of the pastor's wedding.

After services, the pastor and wife, together with Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Oates, were invited to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Larrick, (Mr. Larrick is the president of the Central Virginia Valley Conference) where they were again surprised with an anniversary dinner. The dining room was decorated with silver bells, the table was placed with beautiful crystal and silver. In the center was a large white cake with the wedding figurine, and lighted silver candles.

Mrs. A. C. Oates, whose birthday was also remembered, was presented with a fine box of stationery from Mr. and Mrs. Larrick. Mrs. Coulter was presented with a beautiful solid silver server as an anniversary gift.

Both pastor and wife were very pleasantly surprised, as no inkling of the church's intention had come to their ears. Many cards of congratulations from friends throughout this Conference helped to remind us of the good friends which the passing years have brought.

May God richly bless you, everyone! This is our prayer as the years go by.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

ELON COLLEGE PERIOD IN THE CHURCHES.

The purpose of January and February of each year being designated as the College Period is to give pastors and Sunday school superintendents an opportunity to talk to their people about the college, to acquaint them with the superior advantages in Christian higher education offered by their own church college, and to influence them to select Elon as their own college.

If our people could realize the benefits that will accrue to our church as a whole by having our own young people attend our college, they would be more concerned about this question. Our school is crowded at present, but our church is not sufficiently represented. I believe that parents are more capable of selecting a college for their children than are high school classmates. If you would sit down and talk with your son or daughter about the kind of education today needed for the opportunities and responsibilities of tomorrow and the type of school in which such training is available, I believe that you would render a fine service, not only to the ones about to enter college but to your church, your country and civilization as well.

It is a fine thing to be schooled in English, history, science and the like, but don't forget that the leader for the new day that is here will require character and wisdom as well as knowledge. Christian principles and Christian teachings are the forces that mold character necessary to stem the tides of selfishness and superficial philosophy that would undermine good government and a wholesome civilization. It stands to reason that this needed advantage in educational processes is to be found in our own church school. Here we employ only Christian men and women as professors. Our curriculum must include a study of the Bible and related subjects. Religious services for instruction, inspiration, and guidance are opened to and required of all. Here in our own college distinctive religious advantages as well as technical and scientific training equal to any are offered and required of every student who graduates.

Then, too, during this College Period all churches and Sunday schools are asked to acquaint their people with the financial needs of the College and receive offerings for the same. In this respect we have done reasonably well. As of February 14 we had received a total of 2,136.41, as compared with $1,246.76 received last year during the same period. If we could maintain this rate of giving, and I am sure that we could, we would have no difficulty in securing the college's full quota this conference year. Don't forget to acquaint your people with our college's needs.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Contributions from the churches on the college apportionment have been very good—much better than in previous years. A number of our churches have paid their apportionment in full. This is a great help to the college, and we are most appreciative. One thing, however, that we hoped to accomplish during the College Period was to interest a larger number of our Sunday schools and churches to make monthly contributions to the college. The college expenses, of course, are daily and bills must be paid at the end of each month. With the help of all of our Sunday schools and churches, we would have no difficulty in meeting our bills.

Appreciation is expressed to all that have contributed and an appeal is made to others to cooperate generously with the Convention's plan for the support of our college.

SCHOLARSHIP COMPETITION.

Elon Colonnades, the college literary magazine, has announced that it will this spring begin an unusual Writer's Workshop Competition for the Junior Colleges of the State of North Carolina with the winner of first place receiving a tuition scholarship from the college.

Authority for the entering of manuscripts will be sent to each Junior College in the state. Works to be submitted may be of three kinds: poetry, prose essay, or short story.

Final date for the acceptance of manuscripts to be entered in the contest will be April 1.

First place award will be given to the best work submitted, regardless of whether it is a poem, an essay, or a short story.

Additional awards of medals and certificates of merit will be presented to the authors of the best manuscripts of each class, exclusive of the work to which first honors are given.

Professor G. A. Johnson of the Department of Economics at the college will offer two of the three secondary prizes, and the college through another donor will sponsor a third.

Judges will be the senior editor of Colonnades, the chairman of the Department of English at Elon, and one guest authority to be selected by the college Publications Committee. Winning selections will be published in the spring number of Colonnades.

Criteria for judging entries submitted will include the rating of manuscripts as to originality, clarity, beauty of style, logic, imagistic qualities, melody or cadence of words, or use of humor and dialogue, depending upon the type of work entered.

PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY ESSENTIAL.

A Christian "shock treatment" to make American parents feel a real sense of responsibility for the problems of the home was urged by Dr. Earl F. Zeigler of Philadelphia, Pa., before the opening session of the Adult Work Section of the International Council of Religious Education. Dr. Zeigler spoke from the reports of the National Adult Work Planning Conference held at Lake Geneva, Wis., last summer.

Dr. Zeigler asked that adult workers and pastors give straight facts to parents in "sick families that they may recognize their condition, find out how they got that way, and what they must do to get well and keep well."

"The urgency of the situation is felt," Dr. Zigler said, "if it is remembered that today's juvenile delinquents will become tomorrow's parents, devoid of a sensitivity to our society."

Dr. Zeigler expressed optimism in the future of the American family despite the divorce rampage, and offered both immediate and long-range objectives which must be used in the education of all parents. Among them he listed a new sense of vocation in marriage to counter the claims of drudgery, deprivation, and monotony which many seek to avoid through childlessness. He asked that pre-marital and marital counseling stress the having of an adequate number of children as a goal in marriage.

THE PENNY-A-MEAL PLAN.

WHAT IS IT?

It is a plan by the Mission Board of the Southern Convention whereby each family (or member) may dedicate a special gift to our church during Mission Period—March, April, May, June—toward the goal of $27,000.00 for the relief of suffering mankind, and to help make a Christian world. The Mission Board needs $27,000.00 "Over and Above" the regular Conference Apportionments for Missions in order to meet the obligations and needs of the Board. (However, the Board will give Conference Apportionment credit where requested.)

The Penny-A-Meal plan is your opportunity to help answer Christ's prayers, and to help fulfil our Christian commission to give Christ to China, Japan, Africa, India, the Philippines, the Islands of the Seas, and the far flung stretches of our United States.

It is an opportunity for dedication of self and possessions to Christ. It is setting value on small things. . . . It is neither a dollar, nor ten dollars, but the smallest coin minted by our government—a penny—that each family (or member) is asked to help make a Christian world. Here the privilege and opportunity of giving to the support of the greatest undertaking of the church is brought within the reach of us all.

It is fulfilling the Spirit of our Lord, who set store by "small things": "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me;" "The giving of a cup of cold water," "The widow's mite cast into the treasury box," "The grain of mustard seed, smallest of all herbs"—even so, the copper penny, smallest of all our coins, will lead us forward with renewed faith, vision, and victory.

WHAT WILL IT DO?

It will deepen the spiritual life of members and families who participate in it. It is an act of partnership with God.

It will be a recognition of God's goodness: The very act of dropping in a coin for such a high purpose says

—"We are thankful to God, the Giver of every good and perfect gift, who has blessed us with a Saviour, with food, raiment, homes, friends. We acknowledge that it is not only blessed to receive but also it is a blessed thing to share what we have with others." It may be indeed a "blessing box."

It will bring joy: Any investment made in God's work is never lost. "What we give we have." Through our gift in the Penny-A-Meal plan we put our money into a bank of which God holds the key. All of us know folk who have put money elsewhere and are poor today. All those who invest in the enrichment of the world's life have the assurance and joy that they have shared in the greatest undertaking in the world. They have placed their treasure where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, nor can thieves break through nor steal therefrom.

It will enable us to fulfil our financial commitment:

1. To support Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson and the Shaowu Mission in China, where over two million souls are looking to us of the Southern Convention to help them to Christ and health.

2. To support the Mountain Mission in Carroll County, Virginia; and to help make America Christian.

3. To help organize, build, and maintain churches within the Southern Convention where our witness is needed.

There are 33,000 members of our churches within the Convention. Think what a penny-a-meal given by each member would mean. You are invited to join in this venture. Write the Convention Office.

HOW TO START IT AND MAKE IT A SUCCESS.

1. Make a public announcement of the need of funds for Missions; that we, as Christians, are under commission of Christ to carry the Gospel to the ends of the earth. Each Sunday during the Mission Period—March, April, May, June—give some missionary message in a public service of the church or Sunday school.

2. Emphasize that it is good for the soul to form the habit of giving some practical expression of gratitude and sharing; that in this act of giving regularly, each person is joining hands with Christians everywhere who thus express their faith in the necessity for the ultimate triumph of the Message of Jesus Christ.

3. Distribute the Stickers of the Penny-A-Meal plan, asking those who take them to place the Sticker on a glass jar or a box, placing upon the dining table or at some other convenient place the container, and at each meal drop in at least a panny.

4. Take the name of each person or family receiving a Sticker and furnish the Southern Convention Office a list of them.

5. In some churches the pastors will promote the plan; in others there will be a Penny-A-Meal Committee; and in others the promotion will be made by the Missionary Society or the Sunday School superintendent and teachers. Adopt the plan which will enlist your people in this worthy undertaking. By all means follow up the plan—keep it alive!

WHAT TO DO WITH YOUR GIFTS, AND WHEN?

On the last Sunday of Mission Period—June 29th—your gifts should be brought to the church in special envelopes which will be provided, when the gifts will be dedicated in a special service. The church treasurer, or individual contributors should send the gifts to Rev. Wm. T. Scott, Superintendent, c/o Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

NEW MISSION BOARD COMMITTEES

When the Mission Board of the Southern Convention met in Winston-Salem last September it set up committees for work. These are listed as: (1) Aids and Grants, (2) New Fields, and (3) Promotion.

Members of the board were divided into these committees, and additional members were coopted to work with the members of the board.

The Committee on Promotion, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, chairman, met in December and planned for its work. Specific tasks were given to the several members.

The work is now under way, and it is expected that during the Mission Period, which is now beginning, the churches will receive the benefits of the committee's efforts.

While the committee as a whole takes responsibility for whatever may be done, it is just possible that materials for this page will sometimes bear a personal stamp for which the committee should not share any blame.

BEGINNING AGAIN

This item is a bit personal. From time to time there will be information that is of far more value.

Writing for THE SUN has been a long-time habit for me. Four years of editorship, and many other years with a page or miscellaneous information to prepare, gave me the high privilege of writing much for this paper.

Since leaving the Convention Office last July, I have been doing a local church missionary job in Asheboro, North Carolina. There has seemed to be no time for writing for our church paper.

But it is good to live in the land of "Beginning Again," so one may return to old friends and familiar places. Such experiences enrich the soul, and make life delightful.

If you have read this far, then, greetings and good wishes. Let us meet again, and often.

F. C. LESTER.

It is easy to see that the board appropriated more money than is in the Convention budget of expected income. Even so, very urgent calls had to be denied.

THE WORK NEEDS TO BE DONE!

APPROPRIATIONS WERE MADE WITH THE FAITH THAT THE CHURCHES WILL RESPOND

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Friends:

Today, in Asheville, March came in with a rush. Rain against the window screens of our bedroom awoke me. When I went to put out the bottles for the milkman, the sleet was fast covering the street. All the while that we were eating breakfast Rebecca was watching the white snow flakes as they fell to earth. The sun shone a bit and melted the sleet and snow so that people could get up and down the street. Now a cold wind is blowing and it is cloudy.

Our postman brought us news of the "Cent-A-Meal" plan! Oliver was very eager to get the jar, get the blue strip of paper pasted on, and start putting the pennies in. We will have to just put a cent a meal for the family, I fear. But I hope that we can be faithful in that much. If you have not heard about it, and if you don't have a blue "To Help Make a Christian World—I will give at least a Penny - A - Meal—During Mission Period — March-April-May-June" Sticker in your family, be sure to ask your minister about it. He can get them for you from Superintendent Scott at Elon College, N. C. I want to appoint each child who reads this Children's Page to be a guardian of the "Penny-A-Meal" box or can. Remind your family to remember those of the world who are so needy. See that there is at least a penny for each meal during this Mission Period.

Two Sundays ago we had Mrs. Ruth Gage Colby from St. Paul, Minn., as a guest in our pulpit. Her husband is a doctor—a child specialist. All of their lives they have been interested in children and child welfare. During the war they kept two English children in their home. She and her husband are members of our Congregational Christian Church in St. Paul. Mrs. Colby has just returned from a six-month tour of Europe under our State Department. In her talk to us she told us about the things which she saw in Europe and which she could not forget. If you could have heard the pictures which she painted for us with words, you would be glad to share your pennies for the children of Europe. Tears filled the eyes of all who heard her as she told of the children of Europe who have suffered so much, seen such terrible sights, and are now living with the constant fear that there will not be any bread tomorrow! Children of America—you who have not heard the dreadful noises of war; you who have food to drive off hunger; you who have lovely clothes to warm your bodies! I know that you will give your pennies to help bring back Christ's love into those war-torn, war-weary childish hearts. Mrs. Colby says that everywhere she went National boundaries had melted away. People were the same; in the same great need; thinking the same thoughts. They all had two stark fears. First, that there would not be enough food to keep them alive until tomorrow. Second, that there might be another war.

Mrs. Colby was here to attend "The World Federalist Convention." She says that we must have a World Government to save the world for the world's children. This month she starts on a tour of forty-one cities of our Nation to give her message.

"All of our lives my husband and I have worked to make life safer and happier for children. But we realized unless some sort of World Government was brought into being that all of our work would be lost. So I have left my home to try to do my bit so that our world might continue to be a place where children might have happiness, and the lovely things of childhood."

I hope that some of you may be able to hear her while she is on her tour. She is one of the most challenging speakers I have ever heard.

WITHDRAWING HER APRON STRINGS.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"A few years ago I found my two children becoming much too deeply attached to me and too dependent on me. To make them more self-reliant, I deliberately planned a weaning process," a mother confided to me recently.

Knowing her tall, handsome Jim and her lovely Sally, I replied, "That must have been a difficult thing to do."

"Yes, it was. But since I had discovered that gradually a really too-binding relationship had developed, I was sure it must be done. We three—you know my husband died five years ago—had unintentionally formed a sort of closed corporation.

I learned that the children had been declining invitations to entertainments and little parties. 'We have a better time with you,' they told me when I asked about it. Although this was very flattering, it struck me as being not quite normal. I saw that their close attachment to me and to their home was psychologically crippling."

"How did you manage to loosen this tie?" I asked, deeply interested.

"Well, I was puzzled just how to go about it. Of course, I went to the library and secured many of the helpful books on child development that are available. Almost the first one I opened showed me I was right in my theory. I took notes from some of the books, and after much reading and thinking I called a family conference. Frankly and lovingly I explained just how I felt."

"What was the reaction?" I inquired.

"At first Jim and Sally looked hurt and mystified; they said little. The next day they came to me.

"'Mom,' said Jim, 'We've been talking together about what you told us last night; we think you're right.'"

"That helped a lot?" I asked.

"Yes, indeed! We all had the same viewpoint from that time forward. I insisted that Sally and Jim do more of their own shopping and that they start helping me with a few of the smaller financial problems. Of course, they always had done some of the work in the house and garden. Socially, they began to make many new friends and they 'polished up' some old friendships."

"And you?"

My charming neighbor smiled. "I had so much more time for myself. As you know, I met and married the children's 'other father,' as they call him.

"The chief difficulty of being a parent is that we mothers and fathers do not clearly understand our task. We all need to read and study more—yes—and to apply what we learn."

PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

The church was advised by Dr. Zeigler to turn its attention with greater care to the building of the Christian family, able to withstand the shocks of the day. This program should not only serve those within the parish, but must go beyond that circle to have a real concern for the spiritual illiteracy which is back of juvenile and parental delinquency, he said.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

MISS CHICOINE VISITS ROSEMONT.

About forty young people turned out to greet Miss Betty Chicoine on her visit to Rosemont, Tuesday night, February 25th. I call them all young people; there were two of us ministers there, and a few adult youth counsellors. But we were all just as young in spirit as the youngest boy or girl present. Nine people came over from Little Creek and the rest were Rosemont people.

The meeting opened with a worship service conducted by the young people of the host church under the leadership of Henry Hodges, president. Then the meeting was turned over to Miss Betty Chicoine, Field Director of Young People's Work in the Southern Convention. She brought a very informative and helpful message, speaking first of our denominational youth program, then presenting helpful materials available to youth leaders, and closing with some excellent suggestions about how best to conduct a successful youth program in the local church. This was followed by a period of recreation at which time Grace LaRock introduced the Play Party Game, "Captain Jinks." The youngsters were quick to catch on to the game and soon even the adults present were in on the game and everybody was having fun. This prepared us just right for the next and final course on the evening menu. After a few rounds of "Captain Jinks," we were a bit tired, a little thirsty, and somewhat hungry. Some mothers, under the direction of Mrs. T. F. Liverman, Rosemont's excellent Youth Counsellor, had prepared delicious refreshments consisting of hot cocoa, tuna fish sandwiches and potato chips. When these were brought out the young folks were quite willing to relax a bit and talk to one another while sipping their cocoa and eating their sandwiches.

By this time in the evening the clock had almost reached 10:30. The mothers and fathers present were putting on their coats, getting ready to go home, while the youngsters were clamoring for more of "Captain Jinks."

On the way home a boy who had attended the basketball game that night (Portlock was playing Wilson) found himself walking home behind a group of girls who had attended the youth meeting at church. He overheard them saying, "Gee, we had so much fun tonight." And he broke in by asking, "For Pete's sake, where were you, to have had so much?" The girls replied, "At church." He said, "Oh," as if to say, "Well, I didn't know it was possible."

PPAFFTOWN.

Back in November the Pfafttown Pilgrim Fellowship met and elected its officers for the new year. Those on whom the responsibility of the work rests, are: Bobby Jordan, president; William Dane Cline, vice-president; Mary Barr, secretary; Dorothy Rae Luper, treasurer; Rex Cline, program chairman; K. W. Long, social chairman.

YOUNG ADULTS AND THE CHURCH.

The failure of the church to give its young adults a responsibility in its program was scored by Dr. Richard E. Ulummer of Philadelphia at the Adult Work Section of the International Council of Religious Education annual meeting at Grand Rapids, Michigan.

"It is foolish of the church to try to make an assistant Sunday school secretary out of a twenty-year-old who has been trusted with a $200,000 bomber over Europe," said Dr. Plummer. "Instead, the church must demand that he be as expendable for Christ as he was for the government."

From his experience as director of adult work for the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., and from interdenominational sharing, Dr. Plummer stated that the movement among young adults is potentially one of the most stirring and gripping dramas in America. The return of the G. I., the growing family life consciousness and the hunger for decent fellowship were listed as reasons for this reaction.

That young adults look to the church for action is evidenced on every hand, according to Dr. Plummer. This is shown, he said in the desire to share in the management of the church and in the fruits of the church as expressed in personal, family, and vocational problems.

"Many veterans have returned with a definite sense of mission," he reported, "only to discover that the church is playing at the 'fringe' of life. They want the church to stand up and fight sinister forces instead of proving helpless."

In order to meet the challenge of this untapped source of service and leadership, Dr. Plummer stated, church leaders must lift their programs above mere fellowship, social activities, and recreation for young people. Instead, hard-hitting programs of vital concern to young adults, cutting across the interest and experience areas of their life must be shaped. These programs must be developed by the young adults themselves to merit their participation.

Countering the criticism of the young adults, Dr. Plummer pointed out that the church does ask that they assume responsibility and make available their resources for church work.

"Young people must recognize that they are the church. They should not stand on the balcony and toss bricks at the passing parade of the church."

Dr. Plummer asked that care be taken to root the new young adult movement in the church and in the fundamentals of the Christian faith, avoiding a separation of mutual interests of young adults and their church.

Speakers before the Young People's Section agreed that youth must INTIMATE WORDS WITH HIS DISCIPLES.

LESSON XI—MARCH 16, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Ye are my friends if ye do the things which I command you.—John 15:14.

LESSON: John 14-16.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Jn. 14:12-21.

Tender Words for Troubled Hearts.

Turn to the Bibles of older people, and especially those who have had their share of trouble and you will probably find that the pages are most worn around the fourteenth chapter of John. "Let not your heart be troubled"—how often and how repeatedly people have turned to these tender words in troubled times and under tension, and especially in the hour of bereavement.

"Ye believe in God, believe also in me." If God is like Christ then we can trust him. If Christ is the revelation of God then we can trust Him. Here is assurance that we may have a God we can trust, we can worship and we can love.

"In my Father's house are many mansions if it were not so I would have told you." It is a building of God, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. It is spacious—there is room for all. It is well-appointed, the Master went before us to prepare a place for us. It will be blessed with the presence of the Master himself—"that where I am there ye shall be also." Here are words that are spirit and life, these words as recorded in the opening verses of John 14.

The Way, the Truth, and the Life.

"I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life," not one of the ways, not a way, but the way. No man comes unto the Father but by Christ. There is salvation in none other. Christ is the way, walk it. He is the Truth; in Him there is no gulf or even rift between the ideal and the real. He is the truth, God's truth, revealed, the Word made flesh and dwelling among men. He is the Life, and that life is the light of men. He that hath the Son hath life and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. Jesus Christ is not an accessory of life; he is an absolute necessity.

Greater Works.

"And greater works than these shall ye do, because I go unto the Father." He hardly meant greater miracles—if He did the prophecy has not been fulfilled. But greater works than He was able to do in His earthly life have been done by His disciples. His Spirit has given to men the intelligence and skill to do things that Jesus himself did not do. The prophecy has found literal fulfilment in the lives of His followers through the centuries.

Prayer in His Name.

"And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do." It looks like a blank check and in one sense it is. But it must not be misunderstood. The things we are to ask are to be "in his name," in harmony with his will, in keeping with his character. We must abide in him, we must have his words abiding in us. But here is a great incentive to prayer.

The Comforter.

Christ promised not to leave his disciples, or us, comfortless or alone. He promised to come again to those who loved him. He used a word which means "one who is called to the aid of another." It is one who is called to one's side. But more, the Comforter was to be in as well as with Christ followers. God's living presence was to be with and in believers. Christianity is more than a set of rules and an order of service and a round of ceremonies; it is an intimate, living, personal relationship with a living and ever-present Lord. He is unseen by the world, but to a great host of Christians he is real and near.

Good for Something.

Christians are to be good, of course. Creed is to find expression in conduct. But faith is to find expression in fruitfulness. Christians are to be good for something. If Jesus spoke in a comforting way in the fourteenth chapter of John he spoke in a challenging way in the fifteenth chapter. His disciples are to bear fruit, more fruit, much fruit. Their fruit is to remain. By their fruits shall men know them, but more it is as they bear fruit that God is glorified. When a man begins to feel somewhat satisfied with himself and his goodness, let him examine himself as to his fruitfulness. That is the acid test.

The Test of Love.

"If ye love me ye will keep my commandments." "Ye are my friends if ye do the things I command you."

Not profession, but performance is the ultimate test. It is easy to honor God with our lips while our hearts are far from him, as all of us know from personal experience—we do not have to observe others to know that. We have the Master's own words for it that our love is shown by our obedience to his commandments.

Joy Not of This World.

"These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy may be in you, and that your joy may be made full." Strange and haunting words indeed. They were spoken on the very evening before he was betrayed and when he knew what awaited him on the morrow. He had none of the things on which men set so much store and to which they look for happiness and joy. And yet he talked about his joy, and about a joy which no man could take away from them. There were deep springs of reservoirs of joy in the Master's life which circumstances could not touch or taint. We need to tap these deep, inner resources if we are to live radiantly and joyously.

The Peace Which Passeth Understanding.

"My peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you." It is the peace of God which passeth all understanding.

"I STUDIED IN ROME."

Mr. Liu is chairman of the local Relief Committee, so he went with me to see the Catholic priest, Father T'ien. Father T'ien is treasurer of the committee, so we turned over to him the million-and-a-half dollars I brought for the committee from Tai-yuan. (It sounds like a lot, but it won't buy much in these parts today!)

Fenyang is the seat of a Bishop—the diocese covers, perhaps, about as much as our Fenchow Station "field"—maybe less. But I was told that they have forty-five priests and a bishop in this diocese. It gives one a little idea of the thorough way in which the Catholics are "set" to carry on their work in China today—a more thorough-going set-up than ever before, I judge.

Father T'ien told about his seven years of study in Rome, and other parts of the world, studying together, to carry forward a world-wide program. (Maybe we Protestants had better enlarge our thinking, and better do much more getting-together in a much better coordinated world-wide program.)

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK

With Emphasis on Missions
MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

THE WORLD DAY OF PRAYER IN WINSTON-SALEM.

I am glad that I have had the experience of helping with the World Day of Prayer service in Winston-Salem because that experience enables me now to pass on to other women some first-hand information. No doubt, many of you women have had this same opportunity, but I pass this on to you for whatever it may be worth.

First, I would like to say that I am extremely grateful to have had the privilege of working with the women of Winston-Salem and having such an excellent opportunity of knowing some of the fine church people here. Since I am rather new here, I didn't think I should undertake such a job, but the executive committee of the Council of Church Women pledged such wonderful support, I could hardly turn it down. Time and again I called upon them when I would be stuck, and they always came through with great help.

Of course, the first thing we did was to have a meeting of our committee and plan our program, listing people for different jobs. We tried to have the best people we could possibly get for each job and yet represent different denominations. For instance, we had the city supervisor of public school music as chairman of music for the program, one of the Bible teachers to give the inspirational interpretation, and a lady from the Little Theatre in charge of the readers. After deciding on the chairmen of different things such as promotion, publicity, music, arrangements, readers, offering, and so forth, it was my job to call each one and ask if she would do her part. I had only one refusal, so from the beginning I felt enthusiastic over the job.

One of the most helpful things we did in our planning was to have a retreat for all chairmen, musicians, readers, ushers, executive committee, and all who had any part with the actual program of the World Day of Prayer. We had about twenty women to leave the "Y" at 12:00, on Thursday, February 13, and drive out to Sunny Acres, about ten miles from Winston-Salem, for lunch. Sunny Acres is a lovely, large house owned by the Methodist Church and used for just such things as retreats. After a delightful lunch, we adjoined to the living room for our inspirational meeting. We were using as our guide a leaflet provided by the United Council of Church Women, letting each chairman take the part provided for her on the leaflet. Our President of the Council in Winston-Salem opened the service by making introductory remarks about this being our first retreat, what the program is all about, and something about our planning for the service on Friday, February 21. Following this, I, as General Chairman, led a meditation on the daily prayer for 1947 and ended with remarks on "Our Trust" this year. Then, the different chairmen: promotion, publicity, arrangements, music, made a summary of their plans. We tried to make the rough places plain" by open discussion of suggestions, questions, and so forth, including our decision to invite the Negro women. To conclude our service, a lady from the Episcopal Church led us in an inspirational interpretation of our program for the World Day of Prayer. The entire service lasted about an hour, and the total time spent on the retreat was about three hours. We felt it was time that was spent in a highly profitable manner.

On Wednesday, February 19, we met at the First Presbyterian Church at 4:00 P. M. for a rehearsal. This was the beginning of the snow and bad weather, but we had most everyone there for practice, and we do consider this an important part of the planning for your service.

In the meantime, our promotion and publicity chairmen had been busy at their jobs. The promotion chairman had distributed one hundred posters throughout the city, placing them in store windows, business places, and, of course, one in every church. Also, each church bulletin carried an announcement on Sunday the 16th, of our service on Friday, the 21st. Another part of her job was placing the Call to Prayer leaflets in hospitals and sanitariums to be used on trays on Friday.

The publicity chairman had been in charge of radio and newspaper. In addition to newspaper articles, she had succeeded in getting some very good radio publicity. Besides spot announcements, we had one feature announcing time, place, readers, musicians, etc. (fifteen minutes), on Wednesday at 9:45 A. M. A special children's program for the World Day of Prayer was given Thursday at 10:00 A. M. with children doing the reading and music. Incidentally, this went over so well it was repeated on Saturday for Brotherhood Week. We had a program of music and meditations on Thursday evening at 8:15. We had hoped to have a mayor's proclamation, but it didn't come through—maybe next year.

On Friday, the 21st, church bells rang at 11:30 and 12:00 for the service. We had First Presbyterian Church open at 9:00 A. M. and it stayed open until 6:00 P. M., with organ music all day. A Moravian minister's wife arranged for different organists in the city to play an hour each. Hostesses in the church took care of programs and offering during these hours. This was the day after our big sleet and snow and we knew the crowd would be small. However, when our service began at 12:00 o'clock, we were surprised to have about one hundred or more people, who stayed through the two-hour service, others coming and going at intervals. The program opened with the solo, "The Voice in the Wilderness," sung by a soprano soloist from the Presbyterian Church. The words were the exact words of our program, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make level in the desert the highway of our God." Just before beginning the first section of responsive reading, our Bible teacher in the city schools gave a very stirring exhortation to prayer. There were different readers for each section of the program. At the end of section one, a soloist from Centenary Methodist Church sang the solo, "My Hope Is Built On Nothing Less, Than Jesus' Blood and Righteousness." This lovely old hymn stirred the listeners as they joined in the chorus. When a section did not last thirty minutes, we finished out the time with organ music, so that business people could come in for a half hour and hear one section of program. To begin the third section, a high school girl sang in a sweet, lovely manner, "God Made a World," the very appropriate words telling of how God gave us a world and how we have misused it to destroy and mistreat people. The fourth section was conducted almost entirely by youth from the high schools. There were five readers and ten girls to sing. As each reader would finish, we had a period of silent meditation, followed by the girls singing one verse of "Spirit of

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Board of Trustees of the Christian Orphanage met in its regular annual meeting in its office at the Christian Orphanage on February 18, to hear the report of Charles D. Johnston, Superintendent, of activities of the orphanage during 1946.

The report showed that the orphanage gave 29,204 days of care to children during the year, and had rendered service to ninety-five children during the year. The report also showed that the farm and dairy produced more than any other one year in its history.

The Superintendent called the Board's attention to much needed repair work that needed to be done, but which we have not been able to do on account of not being able to get the necessary material. The Board instructed the Superintendent to have all necessary repairs made as rapidly as material could be bought.

The orphanage has never had any fire protection. The Town Board of Commissioners of the town of Elon College has made a contract to extend a six-inch water line to the Newman corner, close to the orphanage campus, and they agreed that the orphanage might connect with the town. The orphanage board voted to extend a six-inch water line up to the old building, which will then put all our buildings and barn within the 500-foot limit. This will not only give us fire protection, but will reduce our fire insurance rate, which will be quite a saving.

The Board voted to set aside $10,000, or as much of that amount as needed, to do all necessary repair work.

The board voted to place fire escapes on the baby home, so in case of fire, the children would have a better chance to get out. The other two buildings already comply with the state requirements. In these two buildings the children have two stairways to use—one in each end of the building which leads out to the ground.

The board voted to employ an executive secretary who will assist the Superintendent in his office work, and who will perform any other duties which she might be called up to do. This will relieve the Superintendent of much detail work, and will give him an opportunity to get out more and look after matters claiming his attention on the outside.

The board voted to have two meetings each year instead of one—one to be held in the month of February, and one in the fall of the year, probably in September.

Easter will soon be here and the good women have for many years been real good to us in sending in many beautiful dresses for the girls to wear on Easter Sunday, and also suits for the little boys. We know this year will be no exception to their rule, as we have had inquiries already as to sizes, etc. We have girls all ages from three to sixteen years, and boys from three to twelve years. So we can fit any size you see fit to send us on some child.

be challenged to be aggressive in their belief and action if they are to face a non-Christian world. They urged youth workers to recognize that adequate solutions of modern problems will not be found by turning back to the past.

Granting that hymns, creeds, and worship forms are important to the church's pattern, the speaker expressed the hope that youth would be given better preparation for Christian living in the face of deepening paganism.

Dr. James Smart of Philadelphia, editor-in-chief of the new curriculum of the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., stressed the need for the acceptance of a theological responsibility on the part of leaders of youth that doctrine may be clearly viewed as the content of teaching. He called for the end of negatives in approaching youth and pleaded for the teaching of the positives of God's purpose. Dr. Smart also asked that the Christian faith be defined for the knowledge and use of young people, and that it be buttressed by careful teaching of the Bible. He insisted that Bible study must be honest and thorough in the light of questions which the Bible raises.

Dr. Nevin C. Harner, president of Heidelberg College, Tiffin, Ohio, added to these principles by declaring that youth will find their faith not only in the affirmations of faith and Bible references, but also in the lives of the leaders of youth.

The Bible must be made understandable to youth and be injected into the daily experience of youth," Dr. Harner said. "It must be wrapped up in the lives of the Christian leaders with prayer and fasting."

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER IN WINSTON-SALEM.

God, Descend Upon My Heart." The reading and the words of the hymn blended, as "Lead Us, O Father, In the Paths of Right," "Lead Us, O Father In the Paths of Truth." After the audience had sung the final hymn, and the benediction had been said, the girls sang "The Lord's Prayer," ending a beautiful service and a deeply spiritual experience for us all.

We were disappointed in the crowd and particularly the ministers, since only two came. Maybe we women are to blame for not having men come. Let's invite them next year. Now, as a final act, we are planning an evaluation meeting soon, to see what we could have improved and what we can do next year to make our service better. I only wish that all our women could have been at the service on the World Day of Prayer. Our city would be an entirely different place in which to live.

In Memoriam

WEST.

In grateful appreciation of Colonel J. E. West, the one who organized and taught the Senior Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian Church for thirty-three years, the organization dating from October 13, 1913, with a charter membership of thirteen, seven of whom are now living.

In the minds of this class there was nothing in the church dearer to the heart of Col. West than the Senior Philathea. We so vividly recall, when a busy Statesman in Richmond, each Sunday, he returned to be with this class.

Even as the death angel was hovering over his couch he dictated letters of appreciation to members of this class for their kindly thought of him.

"He wielded the Sceptre of Love
'Love cannot die
Its holy flame forever burneth,
From Heaven it came To Heaven returneth.'"

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That his memory will ever be sacred to our hearts. That as we assemble in this classroom that we may be inspired to follow his leadership, that he may still be the shepherd of our souls.
2. That the Senior Philathea may continue through the years as a living memorial to our beloved teacher, Col. J. E. West.
3. That we need not eulogize on the virtues of Col. West, his life was an open book, read of all men, his zeal for Missions was outstanding.
4. That to his wife and daughter and brother, those to whom he was nearest and dearest, be the Sustaining Grace of God the Father.
5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread on the class record and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. C. B. DUKE,
Mrs. A. E. RAMSEY,
Mrs. A. A. TURNER,

BEALE.

We, the members of the Carrie Beale Bible Class of the Franklin Congregational Christian Church were saddened January 10 by the passing of our beloved teacher, Carrie Vaughan Beale.

The inspiration, devotion and consecration of her many years of active service will live on in the lives of those who knew and loved her.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we feel most keenly the loss of our faithful teacher.
2. That we hold in fond remembrance her Christian character and shall try to emulate her life.
3. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy and commend them to the Heavenly Father's care.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. M. H. MATTHEWS,
Mrs. J. H. DAUGHTREY,
Mrs. E. P. JONES,
Committee.

WORRELL.

On September 25, 1946, God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to call from our midst Mrs. Maria Byrd Worrell, widow of George E. Worrell. Mrs. Worrell was a faithful and loyal member of her Sunday school, church and missionary society, and was regular in attendance until failing health prevented her. She leaves to mourn her passing a daughter, Mrs. Jasper Gomer, Whaleyville, Va.; three sons, Harvey L. and Geo. Lee of Holland, Va., and Edward of Suffolk, Va.; eleven grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.
2. That we as Christians emulate the Christian spirit shown in her life and service and strive to be more Christlike in our daily living.
3. That we extend to her loved ones our sincere and heartfelt sympathy and pray God's blessings may rest upon them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and one to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. JUNE D. DAVIDSON,
Mrs. JOHN NORFLEET,

TURNER.

WHEREAS, Our Heavenly Father in His wisdom has seen fit to take unto Himself our friend, "Miss Mat" as she was affectionately known; and,

WHEREAS, Though she was blind for many years the light of Jesus shone on her countenance, and it can be said that she bore her afflictions as one who had faith in their God, who doeth all things well.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to her Master's will.
2. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy and earnest prayers that God's promises may give them comfort and consolation in their sorrow.

got the Japanese out last March. We are short of money in our North China work; and inflation makes the little money go only a sixth or an eighth as far. It will cost money—real money—and lots of it to get our hospital going again. But here is "just another case" which calls loudly for the help that is so obviously needed. And just a dispensary does not meet the need, for you just can't give the boy a pill or a salve and send him home! If that had been my boy, I would want a hospital here—a real hospital, well-equipped, as Fenchow Hospital used to be. If it had been your boy—well, you probably have a hospital or a choice of hospitals where you are!

"Oh, You've Come Back!"

By Laura B. Cross

Travel in China is not what it once was. Civil war has torn up the railways. The military has taken over the Chinese boats and the government has withdrawn the rights of foreign ships to ply between Chinese ports.

For a week we visited travel agencies, shipping companies, but everywhere we received the same answer, "No passage north, no guarantee for baggage. It might go within one month, or perhaps three." To our question, "But we're here, what can we do?" one man said a bit tartly, "All I can say is that you shouldn't have come here."

Then one day the unexpected happened. A friend agreed to let us two have a thousand pounds on the Lutheran plane going to Peiping. The Lutheran Mission had bought this C-47 because their work is scattered far and wide and their missionaries, often in inaccessible spots, have found this new way of travel a real boon. As we climbed into the Lutheran World, we felt that St. Paul certainly was starting on a 20th Century journey.

This was my first flight by air. Formerly I'd taken four days to get to Peiping, changing from boat to train. But this time we had lunch in Shanghai and dinner in Peiping with an hour at Tsingtao enroute. We flew over great cities like Shanghai, Tsingtao, and Tientsin, sometimes above the clouds, much of the way over the ocean. As we neared Peiping, familiar sights came into view—the old city walls, the Temple of Heaven, the golden tiled roofs of the Forbidden City. I shouted as I saw our own church steeple and school tower. Then out over Yenching and on we sailed over the Summer Palace, a gem of golden roofs on the hillside of green with the sunset lighting up the lake.

Then we came down and our bus and truck awaited to take us right to our gates. What a welcome we had! the old familiar gateman rubbed his shiny head, gazed at us, and then his whole face smiled with a smile worth coming across the Pacific to see. "Oh! you've come back!" he said, and rushed forward to help us with our baggage. And that has been the constant remark of teachers, pastors, students, and friends, "You've come back!" It's not so much that they think only of me, it's a symbol to them that we are returning, that life is going to take on new hope.

We've been picking up the news of people, some dead, some moved away, others still carrying on. For six years of silence have given time for great changes. Little girls we left are now college women. High school graduates are now mothers of several children. But Bridgman Academy is still one of the important educational institutions with nearly 900 girls cramming its doors. Peiping, one of the present areas of safety, must help in the training of women leaders. And so I'm glad I have come back after two months of travel to take up my part in this training.

Each one of us Americans out here will cost you at home far more than ever before, for our travel and living expenses have mounted. But our part in building for better understanding, helping enrich lives, and participating in training leaders seems more vital than ever. We will try to do our part if you at home will not let us down. Remember us in your prayers and support us through the American Board.

NEWS AND VIEWS

The SUN's Editor and Mrs. House were in Newport News this week due to the illness of Mrs. House's mother.

Rev. W. M. Lake, who now gives half-time service at Franklinton Center will become the full-time Director on June 1.

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, was a caller at the Office of Publications on Wednesday of this week.

Two hundred and seventeen Ohio churches gave $29,957.28 in 1946 to the Committee on War Victims and Reconstruction. The 1947 goal is $100,000 from 340 churches.

Rev. Thurman F. Bowers, pastor of Christ Temple (Interdenominational) of Greensboro, N. C., and an ordained minister of the North Carolina and Virginia Congregational Christian Conference, has accepted a call as supply pastor of Happy Home Church. Mr. Bowers served as chaplain in the United States Army for three years.

The Legion Post at Kittery Point, Maine, has taken the name Keith Harris Post. Keith was an Elon College student, the only son of Rev. Basil Harris who now preaches at Greenland, N. H., Federated Church. Keith was the first Kittery boy to give his life in the recent war. The Kittery Christian Church has an enrollment of over two hundred in the Sunday school. Rev. Elgin Green is the pastor.

Paul H. Veith, professor at Yale University Divinity School, has been appointed advisor on religious education to General MacArthur's general headquarters staff in Tokyo. Professor Veith, whose appointment is effective May 15 for one year, will assist in the "removal of military ideologies, development of research, and long-range plans for the undergirding of democratic religions in Japan."

More than one hundred men and women of the United States and Canada who have been in religious education work for twenty-five years or more were honored at the recent meeting of the International Council of Religious Education held during February in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Representing the Congregational Christian Churches were the following: Charles A. Butts, Lucy M. Eldredge, Ross W. Sanderson, Edwin L. Shaver, Paul H. Veith, Luther A. Weigle, and Sidney A. Weston.

Rev. B. J. Earp has presented his resignation as pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church, Albemarle, N. C., effective June 1, 1947, after a ministry of seven years. Under Mr. Earp's leadership the Albemarle Church has made much progress—including attaining self-support from missionary aid, payment of a church debt of $5,000, purchase of a parsonage paid for in full, installation of a furnace and heating plant, improvement on the Sunday school facilities, a growing church and Sunday school membership. Brother Earp is one of our most consecrated ministers. He will be available for services in a church or group of churches after June 1. Any interested should address him at 338 Concord Road, Albemarle, N. C.

REV. S. E. MADREN MOVES INTO NEW PARISH.

The group of churches consisting of Mt. Olivet (R), Mt. Olivet (G), and Bethel, are more than thankful to have in their parsonage now, the Rev. S. E. Madren and family, originally of North Carolina. Our group has been longing for a pastor to live in the parsonage and be a leader and guide to us in times of sickness or health, and we feel that we have a pastor that can truly fulfill all of our desires, and really be a "Shepherd to his Flock." Rev. Madren's sermons have been very inspiring so far, and have been enjoyed by everyone. We are indeed grateful to have as our minister a man that possesses such qualities as friendliness, sincerity, truthfulness, honesty, a God-like disposition and many others, that must qualify to make a true pastor to his people.

The churches have remodeled the parsonage and a new kitchen has been built. The bathroom equipment is to be installed this week, and there are some finishing touches to be done yet. There has been plastering, papering, painting, new closet built in each bedroom, and a new opening between the living room and dining room.

The outside of the parsonage is to be painted in the spring. The three churches have worked splendidly and very cooperatively in this work, and it is with this hope and expectation that we may be able to continue on as this, for we realize that unity and cooperation are very essential to any group and their pastor. So we are hoping that with God's help and our cooperation together, that we can always make our parsonage a comfortable and a desirable place for Rev. Madren and his family. We also are trusting that with our pastor's leadership and our working with him that we may be able to make our group a more Christlike group of churches and do more for the upbuilding of God's kingdom here on earth, than ever before.

So again we can say that we are thankful to our Heavenly Father for our new pastor, for his nice wife, who is a true Christian worker, and for his family.

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER SERVICE.

The two churches, Mt. Olivet (R) and Bethel met in a joint meeting in the home of Mrs. Joe Frazier and observed the World Day of Prayer service. This was an all-day service, with a bountiful and delicious dinner served with each one bringing a covered dish. The program in the morning was led by Mrs. Warren Good, the theme being, "Be Still and Know That I Am God." The pastor, Rev. Madren, gave a very interesting and inspiring talk on prayer, which was enjoyed by every one. During the service sentence prayers were offered by the group. The afternoon service was led by Mrs. Carroll Monger, the theme was on missions. We, indeed, felt that it was a day well spent, and pleasing in the sight of God. We learned from our pastor's talk the importance and necessity of prayer in our lives.

We are grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Joe Frazier for the use of their home and for the gracious hospitality that they extended to each one present.

In Lent, we must offer a life. Prayer and thought are good but not sufficient. Outward ritual and superficial self-denials can be no more than symbols and reminders. Will the giving up of certain foods and pleasures enable us to understand a man who surrendered life itself? Giving for the hungry of the world, a parent's self-denial for a child, moral fidelity at great cost—acts such as these will make real the fellowship of our Lord.

MARGIE. By Kenneth Irving Brown. New York. Association Press. 1946. 254 pp. $2.50.

This book records a very personal story. It is filled with the romance of youth is concerned that young men and women, especially when in a Christian college, shall devote themselves completely to the work of God's Kingdom.

I find myself wondering whether the letters of Margie and Dien have enough carrying power to appeal to college youth today. They are more likely, I believe, to want to discover their own way into the fullness of a love experience, even though both are fully committed to the Christian way of life. President Brown has done a beautiful editorial job.

BEYOND DARKNESS. By Roger L. Shinn. Association Press. $1.00.

The author of this little volume waived his ecclesiastical exemption while a student at Union Theological Seminary and became a soldier who, after Officers Training School, advanced to become a Captain of Infantry in the Battle of the Bulge. He became a prisoner of war, saw death and tasted hunger. Out of this he came haunted with a sense of living "on borrowed time." He has a new sensitivity about the privilege of living and a feeling of the burden to justify the good fortune of having come out alive. He witnesses to the types of faith that he saw and draws the conclusion of what should be the objective of those who returned.

"Those who died—almost all of them—had a faith of some sort. Varied and contradictory though the faiths were, they were usually related to an ideal of democracy and justice. We owe it to them to make democracy and justice as true and as real as we can. Our responsibility is to be true to the best of their faith."

Few books have as vital a sense of relationship between a dynamic Christian faith and the experiences of war and the hopes of peace.

KILVERT'S DIARY 1870-1879. Edited by William Plomer. Introduction by A. L. Rowse. Macmillan. New York. $3.00.

Who can resist a diary? This one is especially irresistible. It records the every-day happenings in central Wales and Radnorshire, as seen by Francis Kilvert. This young man was a minister who had a passionate love for beauty and a great capacity for living. He died while still in his thirties of an infection that is often cured in these days of enlightened medicine. Even though he died young, Kilvert lived richly and well because of his keen observation and his sensitive spirit.

"Escape literature" is the term that fits it perfectly. It is full of Victorian bric-a-brac and teas and leisure. He wrote: "In the afternoon as I was sitting under the shade of the acacia on the lawn enjoying the still warm sunshine of the holy autumn day it was positive luxury to be alive. A tender haze brooded melting over the beautiful landscape, and the peaceful silence was only broken by the chuckling and grumbling of a squirrel leaping among the acacia boughs overhead, and the clear sweet solitary notes of a robin singing from the copper beech." And later, "A brilliant white frost and hoary meadows sparkling with millions of rainbows and twinkling with diamonds."

And so the Diary depicts English country life. The writer filled twenty-two notebooks and the selections only give a fleeting look at his world described in poetic prose. It has been compared with other great diaries of English literature.

If some respite is desired from the world of the atomic bomb, read Kilvert's Diary.

COMFORT YE MY PEOPLE. Russell Dicks. Macmillan. New York. $1.50.

How would you pray for one who knows he is dying? What passage of Scripture would you use? Russell Dicks includes a prayer, a litany and a variety of Scripture passages for such an occasion. An Anointing Service is added for those who desire it.

How helpful have you been in dealing with the bereaved? Do you sense the need of more and better resource material in dealing with people during this critical period? This book will help supply that need. Scripture passages which point with assurance to the life eternal are included.

The average minister overlooks many opportunities for spiritual ministry. Prayers have been added for some of these neglected occasions: the New Member, New Home, Before and Following the Birth of a Child, the Anniversary of the Death of a Loved One. Prayers for the complete cycle of sickness are provided.

The convenient pocket size and the dark blue-binding facilitate its use not only as a source book, but also as a service book which may be used inconspicuously on many occasions.

KING JESUS. By Robert Graves. Creative Age. $3.00.

In comparing King Jesus with other lives of Jesus, one must bear in mind that this is a historical novel and not written from the viewpoint of a theologian. Robert Graves follows the same pattern here as he did in his analeptic novels, such as, "I, Claudius," "Count Belisarius," and "Wife to Mr. Milton." Liberal Christians will welcome this book, not so much because they agree with the underlying story, as because certain findings of critical research are for the first time put into popular form.

The fact of the polemic against Pharisees by the early Gentile Church and the resultant discrepancies in the Canonical Gospels, has long been recognized and taught in seminaries, but this is the first story of the life of Jesus that has attempted to make this clear to the general public. Ministers and students also know that certain sayings which have been attributed to Jesus were not original with him, but the laity has been denied this truth. It is also believed by liberal Christians and Jews that Jesus followed in the line of the great prophets and spoke as the mouthpiece of God, rather than for himself as is believed by the ultra-conservative; but this is the first popular novel on the life of Jesus that takes cognizance of this act. The illogical and clumsy editorial work done on the Gospel stories is pointed out and the correct versions, according to Graves, given. Although one may not agree with his interpretations, one is forced to admit that certain stories, such as the Good Samaritan, are made much clearer and more meaningful.

Naturally, the majority of the adverse criticisms will come from the traditionalists who think that it is blasphemous to doubt the Virgin Birth of Jesus. Viewed from the standpoint of its value as a novel, one must admit that Graves' answer to the problem of Jesus' birth is more logical than that given by many religionists, even those who disagree with the supernatural story. As to why Herod should have been so disturbed by the birth of Jesus as to kill all the babies in Bethlehem has never been satisfactorily explained by the traditionalists. Certainly the king would not have gone to such extremes if he had thought of Jesus merely as ADVERSARIES vs. OPEN DOORS.

St. Paul wrote to the Corinthians: "A great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." Fortunately, Paul was more concerned with the open door than with the adversaries. A pre-occupation with his adversaries, however real or numerous, would have frustrated his missionary program. His "many adversaries" were dealt with for the most part by the method of indirection: by recourse to the open door. That is to say, he solved his problems not by evading them, but by concentration on essentials, not by argument but by achievement.

Just the opposite is true so frequently with us. Being oppressed by and obsessed with our many adversaries, we become blind and oblivious of the open door. How true this is in the field of evangelism. We spend fruitless hours shadow-boxing with adversaries real and imaginary, but overlook open doors on every hand. We are hypnotized by adversaries in the field of church extension and while we tremble and procrastinate, others enter the open door which we overlooked. We have become addled by adversaries, paralyzed by problems, and spiritual myopia leaves us marking time on the very threshold of an open door.

The perspective of St. Paul is needed. He concentrated on the open door, entered it and obviated many of his adversaries. Every difficult situation has an open door through which order may be brought out of chaos. The open door must be found. Frustration must give way to fortitude, adversaries must give way to adventure and achievement.

THE OPEN DOOR IN JAPAN.

American Protestant churches are planning to send five hundred missionaries to Japan within the next three years, it has been announced by Dr. Luman J. Shafer, chairman of the Japan Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. The Conference represents 123 Protestant mission boards and agencies in this country and Canada.

The new missionaries, according to Dr. Shafer, will supplement the 65 Protestant workers already in Japan. Most of them, he explained, will be qualified, permanent missionaries; some will be specialists in medicine, agriculture, and science; and others will be short-term workers assigned to definite teaching tasks.

Dr. Shafer expressed the hope that during the same period 30 or 40 Japanese students might be permitted to come to the United States for advanced study in theology or other subjects.

Plans are under way, Dr. Shafer announced, for sending a deputation of at least eight North American Protestant church leaders to Japan this summer or early fall. Purpose of the visit, he said, will be to confer with Japanese Christians on details and procedures involved in sending the new missionaries and to discuss future projects.

"The opportunity for preaching Christianity in Japan is extraordinary," he declared, "but it will amount to nothing unless we move in aggressively to present the Gospel in a definite way. Japanese Christians are vigorously pushing an evangelistic campaign at this very moment. The missionary forces in this country must aid the impoverished Japanese Christians and at the same time send as many missionaries as can be trained and prepared for the work."

To assure living quarters for the new missionaries, Dr. Shafer pointed out that the Japan Committee has under consideration a plan to ship 100 quonset huts and prefabricated houses to Japan in cooperation with Church World Service, Protestant relief organization. Missionaries now in Japan, he said, are urging military government authorities to release for residence and worship purposes all buildings no longer needed by the Army.

The Committee is already financing, through its affiliated Protestant denominations in this country and Canada, the erection of 50 temporary church buildings in selected areas, he said.

Dr. Shafer also disclosed that Mr. John H. Reisner of Agricultural Missions, Inc., who is now on a nine-month tour of the Far East in the interest of rural rehabilitation, will go to Japan late this month to confer with church leaders regarding the proposed establishment of agricultural training institutes and demonstration centers in rural areas.

ANENT PROTESTANT WORSHIP AND RACE RELATIONS.

Protestantism faces a crucial hour in America. Alarming inroads are being made upon its historic domain. Competition within and without place it in a precarious position. Profound study, wide experience and fraternal treatment are essential to its salvation.

Dr. A. T. B. Haines, Director of Kay House, in Pittsburg, suggests an interesting and practical affinity between Protestant worship and race relations. His views are set forth in a letter to the editor, from which we quote:

"Two items in your issue of 'The Christian Sun' for February 27, impel me to drop a line to you. The items are your editorial on 'Southern Negro: Catholic or Protestant' and the article, 'Cross or Weathervane?'"

"I believe there is a close relation between these two, for my three years of experience as a missionary in the West Indies where I had the happiest relations with both white and colored people taught me that the latter are 'naturals' for light, color, music and pageantry and that much of our worship is too cold and lacking in imagination for them. The result is that they either veer to Roman Catholicism or to Pentecostal sects in both of which there is more warmth.

"They are attracted to the former by its mystical and sacramental qualities expressed in a colorful ritual, and to the latter by its fervor and its opportunities for oral and physical expression, rather than any love of the papacy on the one hand, or any deep affection for Protestant principles on the other.

"It is not necessary to adopt either of these extremes to win them, but it is necessary to make use of every possible sacramental and external expression of the faith, and to incorporate color, warmth, and ordered movement into our worship. Not only Negroes but other folks of all nationalities can benefit by symbolic expressions of the basic truths of Christianity to supplement our oral ministry, and as Pastor Besselievre points out we need to recover a balanced emphasis of the truths symbolized by the Cross and the Altar to replace the humanistic teaching which has weakened our churches.

"Work here has permitted me to conduct services and missions in various churches emphasizing these truths and it is amazing how eagerly people respond to the whole New Testament faith and to Cross-centered worship of the Redemptive Christ." R. L. H.

The Use of the Chancel

By DR. JOHN R. SCOTFORD.

This discussion of the proper way to conduct a service in a chancel is directed at three groups of people.

Some churches have installed chancels because it was "the thing to do" without any understanding of how they should be utilized.

Ministers who inherit chancels frequently need suggestions as to what their procedure should be.

There are those who shout "chancelitis" in a tone of scorn whenever they discover a pulpit which has been moved from the central position. If they will read what follows with patience and a will to understand we believe that we can convince them that the chancel is not an invention of the evil one.

Three considerations lie behind the current vogue of the chancel in the non-liturgical churches.

The first is psychological. It is mutually embarrassing for two groups of people to stare at each other. Where the minister and the choir face the congregation the worshippers tend to flee to the uttermost corners of the room. Anyone who has ever been beguiled into sitting down in front in the center knows why. The chancel has the great practical advantage of eliminating the self-consciousness which always results when two sets of eyes meet in direct collision. The smaller a church the more necessary is it that this be done.

The second consideration is religious. Our two most active senses are sight and sound. When we go to church our ears cannot displace our eyes. It can be argued that most of us see rather more than we hear. On the religious side the virtue of the chancel is that it places at the focal point of a church something which has both religious significance and beauty. Instead of merely surveying our fellow worshippers, the minister, choir, and organ pipes, a chancel gives us something to look at which affords a lift to the mind and heart.

The third argument for the chancel might be called the dramatic.

in an ordinary service. He usually occupies four positions.

When not actively engaged he should occupy an inconspicuous seat against the sidewall of the chancel on the same side as the lectern. His chair should not suggest a throne but rather a simple place of worship. It should be on the same level with the choir. When occupying it the minister should be visible to the congregation but in no way prominent. During the hymns, the responsive reading (if any), and other acts of worship in which the congregation shares he should stand facing the opposite side of the chancel. He should not turn toward the people. The reason is that his role is not that of master of ceremonies but rather that of leader of common worship.

The minister steps to the lectern to read the Scripture, to offer the pastoral prayer, and to give the chil-

THE CHANCEL LENDS WORSHIPFULNESS TO THE SERVICE.

Through the years the theatre has developed certain procedures which have their roots in common sense. One of these is that those who are not actively carrying forward the play should keep out of sight. The curtain never rises on the star; he always makes an entrance. When he relinquishes the center of attention he departs from the scene. One of the difficulties with the center pulpit is that the minister is always conspicuously displayed to the people whether he is doing anything or not. The chancel permits a minister to retire to relative obscurity when he is not actively participating in the worship.

With these principles in mind, let us chart the course of the minister dren's talk. If there must be notices or remarks they should be given from the lectern, but every effort should be made to prevent such intrusions.

For the offering the minister goes to the communion table to give and receive the plates and to offer an appropriate prayer.

Just before the sermon the minister crosses the chancel and enters the pulpit. This may be a dramatic way of setting apart the preaching from the remainder of the worship. The pulpit is used for this one purpose and for nothing else.

A common objection to chancels on the part of those who are unaccustomed to them is that they look com-

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Every pastor should have a growing prospect list. On his heart there should be many persons in his community whom he knows are not members of a church in the community. Let him write them down as one of his most important pieces of memoranda. The very fact that he has written them on a list makes them a part of his job from that day on. Suppose someone should walk into the study of the pastor and ask to see his prospect list. Would he be able to reach right over in some convenient place and hand it to him? These are the acres in his farm. These are the ore in his mines. These are the chances of his church growth and strength in the community today and tomorrow.

Has the pastor studied his Sunday school roll? Or does he have access to a really up-to-date roll? How does that roll compare with his church roll? Perhaps there are several men attending the men's class who are not members of his church. Write their names on the prospect list. Maybe there are a number of women attending a class, or even teaching in the school who are not members of the local church. Write their names on the prospect list. The choirs of the church I serve make a good hunting ground for the prospect list. So does the young people's department of the Sunday school and also the junior high, and junior departments. It is too much trouble! Not if you are anxious to increase the church, and to enlarge its power in the community and for the Christ.

Do your members know that you are eagerly seeking week after week to enlarge your prospect list? Today a young housewife called to tell me of two families including children whom she wished to see on my prospect list. Almost every week someone calls my attention to persons who are prospects for our church or Sunday school. But some will say, "Why not make a community survey, and then everything may be had." True, but the pastor and church which have not done much toward making their own prospect list will put off making the survey a long time, and will not use it much after it has been made. If you mean business just get busy right now and list down the two, or three, or thirteen, or thirty-eight, whom you now know that could be placed on the list, and then add to it.

The list fills a very large place in enlistment—a central place, but there must follow transforming that list into a daily prayer list, a work list, and a list of those who have been sought for the fellowship of church-membership, and a true and professed faith in Christ as their Savior. The prospect list is a genuinely good beginning—but only a beginning, for the pastor will want to find many ways and a few persons who will help him bring them in. Happy is the pastor and the church that will seek in such forthright manner to win others to the Christ. Let the pastor or member who reads this simple suggestion begin today to do his part about it.

MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

The choir of the Bay View Congregational Christian Church presented a Musical Appreciation Program Sunday night, March 2. Although there was snow on the ground and more still falling, the attendance was fair and those who attended were well paid for their effort in coming. These programs, arranged and directed by Mrs. H. J. Kivette, choir director, are a regular quarterly presentation by the choir. Their purpose is to create a greater appreciation for the large variety of church music and to acquaint the congregation with the history of the writing of the hymns of the church.

The following is the program presented Sunday night, March 2

MY FIRST FUNERAL.

An aged G. A. R. veteran had died in a mining town of south-central Illinois, where I was serving my first charge—a mission station. Since I happened to be the nearest clergyman, I was called upon to officiate at these services, which, being my first funeral, found me definitely uneasy. Though I have, since then, read the last rites for more than a thousand departed fellow-pilgrims of life's common way, I still cannot take the services lightly. But the first one was the hardest of all.

The young widow almost unnerved me by her demonstration of grief. She wailed aloud, she simulated fainting, she tried to jump into the grave, "to lie with my dear, darling husband," until I forgot the Lord's Prayer!

The sorrow of the broken-hearted widow weighed on my mind from the Sunday of the service until Tuesday, when I decided to pay a pastoral call in the hope of rendering spiritual ministrations. I was received very coldly, at the door: "My husband might be angry if I admitted a man in the house. And he is not home." My confusion cleared when the no longer grieving woman explained that on Monday, the day after the funeral, she had gone to the county seat to be remarried.

THE USE OF THE CHANCEL.

plicated and that they involve "a lot of running around." Actually the vista which greets the congregation in a chancel church is much simpler than with the communion table, pulpit, preacher, choir, and organ pipe combination to which our fathers were addicted. With a chancel the minister is both less seen and less heard than with a center pulpit. His cue is to remain inconspicuous except when he is seeking the undivided attention of the people. He does not open his mouth unless he has something of great importance to say. His necessary movements should be made in such a way as to attract a minimum of attention.

Many people associate the chancel with an elaborate, ritualistic mode of worship, but there is no necessary connection between the two. The number of words uttered in the course of a service is likely to be less in a chancel church than in one with a central pulpit. When the minister stands at the center of interest he is tempted to think that he can make himself impressive by his much speaking, while with the chancel arrangement the beauty of the setting makes unnecessary the multiplication of words. The writer is in many churches in the course of a year. He is unable to discern any tendency to use the chancel as an excuse for a fussy and over-elaborate service; rather is the trend toward simplicity.

The relationship of the choir to a chancel is often misunderstood. The governing principle is that the singers (including soloists) should not face the congregation. The psychological reason for this has already been explained. There is also a religious one. The function of the singers is not to give a concert or to otherwise impress their listeners; their task is to lead in worship. This is best done, not by beaming at the congregation, but by looking straight ahead and concentrating attention on the religious significance of the music.

Two objections will be raised to this arrangement.

Choirs often argue that they cannot be heard unless they face the congregation. This is largely an hallucination. It is true that the individual voice will not be as distinguishable with the choir standing sideways to the people, but the whole trend in church music is toward mass effects rather than solo performances. There may be a few churches where the quality of the plaster distorts the voices of a chancel choir, but they are rare.

A second objection has to do with the direction of the choir. It cannot be stated too emphatically that a competent leader does not need to stand out in front and beat time. This is usually either exhibitionism or inefficiency. If one will study the eyes of the singers he will discover that much of the time they pay little attention to such gesticulations.

In a chancel the proper way to direct a choir is from the organ console, which should be on one side and at the back. From this vantage point the organist, or the director (if they are two people), can look into the eyes of the singers facing him, and can control the others either through a mirror or by the action of those whom he can see. One of the great advantages of a divided choir over one that is strung out in a row is that the singers can see each other, which helps them to keep together and which makes of their singing a common effort.

The simple fact is that in those churches with the most highly developed musical taste and the amplest financial resources the choir faces it-

The World for Christ

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

Kienyang, China, (Still Enroute),
February 15, 1947.

Dear Friends:

This last delay is quite a tantalizing one; but we're thankful to be safe and among friends to pass the time to waiting.

While in Foochow we had much to do planning for this last lap of the journey. Everyone helped us and several influential Chinese gentlemen went out of their way to get us transportation.

So, early Monday morning in mist and rain (February 10), Dr. Ed Riggs started with two UNRRA trucks, full of medical supplies and some of our household equipment. That afternoon we started, on the launch that runs frequently from Foochow to Nanping (where there's a Methodist mission and hospital).

Miss Leona Burr and her Chinese girl servant (she is more like a daughter than a servant) are with us. Leona began her missionary career in Shaowu, 1919, and was there again from 1940-44. She's always wanted to be there, but even now cannot stay away, since Fukien University still needs her. She is a great help to us with her knowledge of the language and the country. And her girl helps us talk, too.

Our "staterooms" on the launch were a little larger than a Pullman section, so after we got our baggage in, we couldn't get in. But we finally piled things around enough to spread our sleeping bags on the cane bunks. No springs or mattresses, of course, but the woven cane bed has a little more "give" than plain old boards; so we were not uncomfortable. Once during the night the boat stopped so suddenly I was sure we must have hit a rock and were going to sink. Before I had awakened fully I was out of bed and yanking open the door. But by then I realized we had gotten stuck on a sandbar. By the sounds of the pilot blowing his horn, which he literally does with his mouth, I knew he was signalling and sure enough, we were already steaming ahead again. Soon we stopped completely for the night and the next day we understood why. The Min River is beautiful, winding among the mountains, but it is treacherous with rocks, shoals and rapids. Sometimes we wondered if the boat was turning around to go back or was pulling into shore as it twisted and turned so much to follow the channel.

The sun almost came out and the clouds lifted enough to show us the lumber loaders here and there, the crowded little villages located on the mountain streams that rush down the forested hills. It is good to see trees—China needs them badly. By the time we reached Nanping in the afternoon, it was pouring rain.

There we had a grand visit with the missionaries, refreshing ourselves with their home and company. We didn't mind waiting over a day when the rain became so hard. Next morning was still wet, but at least the rain was not coming down, so we took heart as we piled into the bus-truck, too full of our baggage (incidentally, some of which is still in Nanping). Our new friends mentioned bandits and bridges washing out, but this road is considered one of Fukien's best.

We stopped often for our driver and mechanic to make repairs. Once a terrible bump jerked off the exhaust. That bit of repair took longer. We were almost stuck in the mud a couple of time and once we got out and walked up a dangerous and slippery climb. Since the last repair job took over an hour we barely made it to this town before dark.

As we arranged to stay in a hostel and to find someone to guard the truck, we heard that about twenty miles farther on, a truck had gone down when a bridge gave way. Not until the next morning were we relieved to learn that it was not an UNRRA truck, so apparently Ed Riggs had gotten through safely and there was no word of anyone seriously hurt. That was Friday morning, and today, Sunday (I've been writing a bit every day), more bad news has come. There has been great difficulty in repairing the bridge and it will be next Wednesday before we can go.

But now we have moved in with the only foreign woman in town—a young woman of the British-Anglican Church. She is a very nice hostess and it has been interesting to see her work and attend their church service, all in Chinese, of course. But living and sleeping in the same clothes gets a bit uncomfortable after a week of it, especially when it is always cold and rainy. However, Saturday afternoon, the sun came forth and we walked out to a famous shrine to the philosopher, Ju, and our spirits and bodies got a lift they badly needed. We have been thinking of you all. Pray for us.

Your friends,

DICK & DOROTHY JACKSON.

P. S. Dick says he thought he had seen bad roads when driving the Waverly school bus, but this Chinese road far exceeds them all.

Our Home Mission Job within the Convention

Last week we considered the calls that came to the Mission Board in session. The calls were all legitimate. The churches need help, and in many cases they need more than was requested. Let us consider a few cases.

ASHEBORO.

For more than seven years a faithful group of Congregational Christian Church people have been meeting in a public school building. Rev. A. Lanson Granger called them together, instructed, inspired, and organized them into a church.

Now there are forty-seven resident and eleven non-resident members. In February the average attendance at church service was fifty-five, and the gifts of the worshippers amounted to more than $75.00 per Sunday. The Sunday school attendance reached eighty-four on one February Sunday.

This little group has invested $13,000 in a parsonage and land on which to build a church. They are not able to build the church for which plans had been drawn, the church which is sorely needed. Hence an architect is preparing plans for what may be within the financial reach of the group and their friends. The building program must begin soon, or we lose our third and last chance in this rapidly developing city in the heart of North Carolina where there are twenty churches of our faith and order within the county—churches with members constantly moving to Asheboro. If a building can be erected soon, we will have a permanent and growing church. Our people in Asheboro are doing their best, but they need help—much help.

BAY VIEW.

Our Bay View Church in Norfolk has made good progress in recent years. Few of our churches can match the giving record of Bay View. The church serves the community. The building is neat, attractive, and paid for, but it is inadequate.

The location is excellent. People live within walking distance—enough people to make a fine church. Our membership is not large, and they were not able to erect the building that was needed to serve the community or to attract the community. Additions need to be made soon.

Our church at Bay View is worthy of aid, and it needs help. It needs help now.

Weak Churches Need Help

New Churches to be Built

CARROLL COUNTY WORK.

Our one really missionary job within the Convention is in Carroll County, Virginia. For more than a quarter of a century our Convention has been serving the fine people of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Progress has been made. The situation today is quite different from what it was when we began the work.

There are no finer missionaries than the Gleasons who represent thirty thousand Congregational Christians at work in the mountains. They have the native ability, the training, and the religion that is necessary to do a superb job. They see the needs of the people, and hope for the time when a Christian doctor will minister to the sick, educational opportunities will be increased, and several churches will be established in communities that now have no church.

More workers are needed. New buildings are needed. Equipment is needed. All of this awaits money. The Mission Board is anxious to expand the work; but that takes money.

CHAPEL HILL.

North Carolina has one of America's greatest universities at Chapel Hill. To this ancient center of culture come people from all over the country, and from foreign lands. These men and women will be leaders of the nation. They are important.

Round about the university campus are Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches that are commodious, attractive, and aggressive. About a block from the west gate stands our little church supported faithfully by the few Christian Church people who live there. The larger churches have received, and do receive large sums from their denominations. If we want to have standing in these United States, it is important for us to have standing in Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

For us to fail in our support at Chapel Hill now when the church is taking on new life will hurt the church in Chapel Hill, but it will be even more tragic for our denomination.

AND SO WITH THE OTHERS.

In every case that a contribution is proposed by the Mission Board this year the need is urgent. This writer knows every one of them intimately, and is prepared to say that the askings were far too little, and the grants had to be made on the basis of income, and not according to the pressing needs.

NEW CHURCHES.

Nothing has been said either in this article or in appropriations concerning the needed new churches. There are a dozen places in our two states where new churches could be organized, if we had the men and the money. Baptists are organizing dozens of them. And they are building churches.

The future of our Church depends upon its growth. When we fail to grow, we begin to die. Ours is a choice of life or death. We can expand, build churches where they are needed, or we can take life easy and see our Church disintegrate.

A look at Christ as he moved towards Calvary and Easter compels us to say: THE NEEDS MUST BE MET! WE WILL ARISE AND BUILD THE CHURCH!

INTERDENOMINATIONAL COOPERATION.

At the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference last fall the Interdenominational Cooperation Department was adopted. I was asked to serve as the superintendent of this new department for our conference. In order for the women of this conference to know something of the plans for this department a meeting was recently held with the District Superintendents to discuss a plan or program of work. It is well for each president to introduce the idea of the United Council of Church Women to each society and wherever possible to become affiliated with the local Council. The suggestion to subscribe to the various magazines is for at least one copy to be in the hands of the standing committee which has been appointed in each group to carry out the projects sponsored by the United Council of Church women. We realize this program will not be adopted by each society but we feel it can serve as a goal toward which we may strive. This program is being printed for your information and if there is anything regarding it in which I can be of assistance I'll be happy to do so if you will write me.

LENTEN MEDITATION.

The Fellowship of Love: This is the message that we have heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God Whom he hath not seen? We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. Let us not love in word, neither in tongue but in deed and truth. Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend. There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear.

Now abideth faith, hope, love, these three: and the greatest of these is love.

A PRAYER.

O Lord, our God, thou art greater than the ocean, more beautiful than the sunset, more powerful than the earthquake, more tender than a mother's heart. Thy mercies unto us are countless, as the sands of the seashore, or the stars of a summer sky. Help us to feel our need and dependence upon thee. May we worship thee in the sanctuary, acknowledge thee in our work, enshrine thee in our homes and praise thee all of the day long. Amen.

HER NEW FRIEND.

By MARY STARKEY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Mother," said little Dale the other morning, "may I stay away from Sunday school tomorrow? Jean Wilcox wants me to come over to her house. She says her folks never go to church or Sunday school. They think it's old-fashioned."

"Well, dear," replied the mother, "you know Jean has never been to our Sunday school. The family has been here only a few weeks. Did you explain to Jean how much you like your Sunday school—how you enjoy the singing and the Bible stories and what a delightful person your teacher is?"

"Oh, Mother," answered Dale, "I was stupid! I should have told Jean that she would like our Sunday school. If I could only get her to come, I'm sure Miss Mitchell would make her glad she was there. It was wrong for me to forget how Miss Mitchell works to make us happy. I should have remembered to say that she took us all to the lake last summer and that every Christmas she has a party at her house for us."

"Yes, Dale," said her mother. "Miss Mitchell is an unusually devoted teacher. You are especially fortunate in being able to attend such a well-managed Sunday school and to have such a nice teacher as Miss Mitchell is. You will find that long after most of your other teachers have become faint memories she will still be your dear friend. I know, because I had a teacher much like her."

"An important lesson to learn, Dale, from what has occurred, is that we should be open-minded but not make snap decisions. Do you know what that means?"

"Yes, Daddy says things like that, doesn't he? It means listen, but take time to do your own thinking. Daddy explained it to me. I listened, but I didn't take enough time to think. I like Jean, Mother; she is my newest friend. If I could only get her to come to church and Sunday school with me once, I think she would like it. But perhaps her mother wouldn't let her come."

"There's no harm in trying," her mother suggested with a smile. "Put on your yellow dress and go over and ask Mrs. Wilcox if Jean may come to breakfast here tomorrow morning and go to church and Sunday school with you afterwards. If you say it very nicely, it is not likely she will refuse. If she does refuse, we may be able to think of some other way of gaining her consent later on. You try first, and if you succeed, it will be something you have done in return for all that has been done for you."

"All right, Mother," agreed Dale. "You are a perfect dear. Thank you ever so much."

THE USE OF THE CHANCEL.

self and sings without conspicuous direction.

A final objection to the chancel is that it constitutes a mile post on the road to Rome. The best answer to this argument is a personally conducted tour of the Roman Catholic churches of the vicinage. In this country our Catholic friends have nothing comparable to the Protestant chancel. The choirs are in the rear balcony, the pulpit (when there is one) is out in the body of the church, while the "sanctuary" is separated from the nave by an altar rail. Both the setting and the mode of worship differ radically from anything found in our churches.

Practically all new churches of our fellowship are being built with chancels, while hundreds of old ones are remodeled on the chancel plan each year. Some of the latter are makeshifts, while a few of the new churches have been planned by people who did not know what they were trying to do, but the common experience is that no congregation which really understands the advantage of a chancel will go back to a central pulpit.

a spiritual king. A convincing explanation of Pilate's secret interview and the superscription over the cross has never been given either. So, until the traditionalists have a more reasonable answer to these problems than has been given, we must credit Graves with the answer that he has given and respect his view, even though it may seem far-fetched to us who have been taught something so far different.

It is commendable that Graves has written with sincere and reverent admiration. Not once does he get light-hearted or frivolous in his treatment of Jesus; and he never questions the religious and moral integrity of Jesus.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP SPRING RALLY.

Here are the impressions of the North Carolina and Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship Spring Rally held at the Congregational Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., February 15 and 16, as received by one of the Pilgrim Fellowship members attending.

The Rally began with the opening worship, welcome, and response. Then the entire group was divided into four parts and given their schedule to follow in attending the workshops of the four Commissions of the young people—Missionary Action, led by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman and Melva Foster; Personal Action, led by Miss Lula Browne and Louise Sparks; Social Action, led by Rev. W. J. Andes and Jimmy Cates; and Interdenominational Action, led by Helen Cobb. There was much favorable comment from the young people regarding these workshops and the programs that were presented. The Commission Chairmen and their Advisers are to be highly commended on the fine work done.

After a general meeting Saturday afternoon, the visiting Pilgrim Fellowship members who were spending the night were introduced to their hostesses and given time to get acquainted and prepare for the evening's activities. These consisted of a wonderful supper prepared by the Burlington young people, followed by a song session and folk games. The group then met in the church sanctuary for the final service of the day, which was a story of those who have seen the Star through the ages and the effect it had on them, told by solo and choral readers.

Sunday morning, we were all at the church again for Sunday school. The main part of the worship service was a talk by Miss Mildred Kickline, Bible teacher in the Burlington schools on the subject of "Choosing Your Life's Work," who pointed out that everyone is given all the essential parts for making his life, but it is up to the individual as to how those gifts are used. The lesson was taught by Betty Chicoine concerning Brotherhood and being able to get along with people whom we are with daily.

This period was fittingly closed with the offering being given to the Milk Fund of the CWVR.

Following Sunday School we attended church together. Then came another good meal under the direction of John Graves and the young people of the Burlington church. A business meeting was held later in the afternoon and at two o'clock we again met in the sanctuary for our final meeting and the Communion Service. The worship was led by Baxter Twiddy, with Evelyn Moore, Catherine Cooper and Bill Scott joining him with some thoughts regarding interdenominational friendliness and cooperation. The Reverend Ernest Arnold, Executive Secretary of the North Carolina Council of Churches, spoke to us on the work that he is leading in and asked for our working together in making interdenominational work more successful. The Communion Service was led by Rev. W. Millard Stevens and Dr. H. A. Fesperman, pastor of the Evangelical and Reformed Church of Burlington. The young people of the Evangelical and Reformed Churches of the area were guests of ours at this time and shared Communion with us.

This is just a running account of the actual events which took place at the Rally. The inspiring and spiritually blessing messages and events, however, could not be described with words. That week-end of fun, fellowship, inspiration, and study made for a thought-stirring Rally which many of the Pilgrim Fellowship members will long remember.

JESUS' INTERCESSORY PRAYER.

LESSON XII—MARCH 23, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Holy Father, keep them in thy name which thou hast given me; that they may be one, even as we are.—John 17:11.

LESSON: John 17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Hebrews 7: 23-8:2.

The Lord's Prayer.

We usually refer to the prayer beginning, "Our Father, which art in heaven," as "The Lord's Prayer," and in a sense it might be so called. But that is the prayer which our Lord taught His disciples to say when they prayed, and it might well be called the "Disciples' Prayer." But here we have the true Lord's Prayer. Here we have the prayer which Jesus offered in the Upper Room after the Passover Supper and the institution of what we call "The Lord's Supper."

Intercessory Prayer.

Our Lord's Prayers, both the one which Jesus taught His disciples to say, and the one which He himself prayed, were intercessory prayers. "When ye pray say our," said Jesus, "our Father," "our daily bread," "our trespasses" and so on—thus would Jesus have us think of others and take others into the orbit of our prayers and our services. And in this closing prayer of the evening, Jesus prays for others. It is significant, for here He was our Example as elsewhere. It is a fact that can hardly be refuted that too much of our praying is self-centered, if not selfish. In some cases our prayer is like an umbrella which covers only ourselves; sometimes it is like the roof of our house, it covers the members of our family! again it is broader and is like a great tent which covers others; and occasionally there are great souls whose prayers are like the canopy of heaven, they take in all mankind. One's growth in the Christian life can be pretty accurately tested by the scope of one's prayers. It might be said, too, that one reason our prayers for ourselves are so often ineffective is because they are simply for ourselves. We ought to learn how to pray for one another. We ought to be enlarging the circumference and the contents of our prayers.

Christ Prays for Himself.

The first part of our Lord's Prayer actually centers around himself. He prays for himself. He even prays that he may be glorified. But he prays that the Father may be glorified in his own glory. "Glorify thy Son, that the Son may glorify Thee." He states simply and sincerely a fact that those who heard him, and millions since that day, know is true, "I glorified thee on the earth"—He lived and died to the glory of God. And He prayed that He might again have the glory which He had with the Father before He humbled himself and took upon himself the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of man and the flesh.

All of his prayer was not petition. He asserts that to know Him is to have eternal life—this is life eternal that they should know Thee, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. He asserts that He has glorified his Father, that He has accomplished the work that the Father gave him to do. He declares that He has manifested the Father's name, that is He declared it, He had made known the Father's character and nature, that He had kept those whom the Father had given unto him, except Judas the son of perdition. He says that He had given His friends and followers the words that God had given him to speak. And He claims all things as His, and an intimacy of relation between the Father and himself—all things that are mine are thine, and thine are mine.

Christ Prays for His Disciples.

He begins by praying for himself, but He does not end there. And as has been intimated the prayer although about himself, is not selfish. It finds its center and core in the Father's will and work. And then He branches out and prays for His disciples. He prays that God would keep them through his name, that is through his character and power. He prays that they might have his joy fulfilled in themselves. Strangely enough He prays, not that God would take them out of the world—that is no solution to the problem of temptation, but that God would keep them from evil. They are to be in the world, but not of the world. Christians are not deliberately to seek temptation—indeed Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "Lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil"—but they were not to retire from the world because of temptation or of evil. They were to overcome the evil, not ignore it or run away from it. Hermits do not have the answer to saving the world. The world is not going to be saved by a group of saints, no matter how many there are in the groups, who retire from the world, but by saints who are centers of redemptive love and power in the world. Jesus prays that his disciples might be "sanctified." The word means "set apart, consecrated." It did not mean that they would be perfect or sinless in this world, but it did mean that they would be consecrated, set apart to the will and work of God. It was to be done by God's word which was truth, reality. Thus set apart, they were to go into the world even as Jesus had been sent into the world—"as thou hast sent me into the world, even so send I them into the world." And to make their consecration effective, the Master himself set himself apart—"for their sakes I sanctify myself."

Christ Prays for the Church.

And then the circle widens and the circumference enlargens. His vision and his sympathies and his prayer and his love expands until He takes in those who in the coming centuries should believe on Him through the ministry of these His disciples and those should follow them. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." He so loved the world that He prayed for the world. And He prayed that they might be one, even as the Father and He were one. That is not for uniformity, but it is for spiritual unity. He prayed that they might be made perfect in one. He prayed that they might be with him where he was and that they, too, might behold his glory, the glory which God had given him from the foundation of the world. "That they may be one" that brotherhood might become a reality, that there might be a spiritual unity between all his followers, that there might be a united front against evil. Alas! how the Master's heart must be grieved by our divisions and divisiveness.

SUFFOLK REVIVAL MEETING.

The pastor and deacons of the Suffolk Church have invited Rev. Victor Murchison to be the visiting preacher for the Revival Meeting, and it is planned to have Mr. Murchison for the opening services Sunday, March 23.

"IN HIS NAME AND FOR THEIR SAKE."

A Missionary Sermon

By REV. HERBERT G. COUNCILL, JR.

Roemont's Sunday School Superintendent, Mr. W. H. Farrow, and its pastor, who happens to be the writer, received last Saturday a letter from the Mission Board of the Southern Convention signed by H. S. Harcastle, President of the Board, and Wm. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Convention.

This letter brought very forcefully to our attention the great need for world missions at this strategic moment in its existence.

As our Mission Board enters upon the Mission Period—March, April, May, June—there has been thrust upon it because of the great need throughout the world the task of raising $27,000 "Over and Above" the regular Conference apportionments for missions this year. This is our share of "going the second mile" for our fellow men in a war-torn, starving, sinful, sick, and fearful world both within and without the borders of these United States.

Let us think for a moment about this great need. It's hard for those of us who live here in Virginia and North Carolina in homes of comparative luxury, enjoying all the comforts necessary for our physical existence, and many that are not necessary, to even conceive (say nothing of understanding) the conditions of people in other parts of the world in this period of postwar disillusionment and disenchantment.

Norfolk's Virginian Pilot carries this morning, March 5, in big headlines, "Greek Plea for U. S. Help Asserts Nation on Brink of Economic Collapse." Prime Minister D. Maximos and Foreign Minister C. Tsaldaris are quoted as saying, "The need is great. The determination of the Greek people to do all in their power to restore Greece as a self-supporting, self-respecting democracy is also great; but the destruction in Greece has been so complete as to rob the Greek people of the power to meet the situation by themselves. It is because of these circumstances that they turn to America for aid." Secretary of State, General Marshall, is quoted assaying that this was a "transcendent" problem and that it was a matter of "primary importance to the United States."

We learn from other sources that "fifteen hundred villages were burned in northern Greece alone. In many villages every man from sixteen to sixty was killed. There are 60,000 orphans in northern Greece alone. We need animals—mules and donkeys. We must have looms and raw materials. We desperately need psychiatric facilities—the minds of thousands of people are injured. We need schools of nursing, kindergarten teachers, orthopedic hospitals, and orphanages."

Jan Masaryk, of Czechoslovakia, says, "You know the terrible destruction the enemy caused in Europe. The economic consequences are serious. Our educational and public health services were purposely wrecked and the most pitiful victims are our children—they are so pale. It will take a long time to restore normal milk and fat supplies, to reequip our hospitals and children's clinics. Our nation is hard at work and has already performed miracles. The greatest threat to our future is tuberculosis, which infects sixty per cent of our children. We depend on American relief for our country to send us milk, fats, medicines and hospital equipment which cannot be purchased anywhere in Europe. We admire and love America and I hope you will help to restore our plundered generation to health."

From a hospital in far-off China comes this message: "When finally the Japanese left our hospital in Tai-ku we returned. The charred walls of the administration building were a reminder of what had been happening. Our hospital car would not run under its own power but was drawn by two mules. Doorknobs were missing, glass broken, and many floors had holes burned through. Horses had been stabled in all of the staff homes. The hospital was looted. Medicines, instruments and most of the bedding and clothing used by patients was taken. Now that we are back we need instruments, money to rebuild the front building that burned, and all the houses must be repaired before they are ready for use. We know the churches in America will come to the front and help us."

Dr. Albert B. Coe, who has just recently returned from a world tour of inspection on behalf of our Congregational Christian Churches, tells this story: "One year ago in India, an Indian minister brought to a group of his brother ministers his story of hunger in his own parish. He said that six of his families went to the ration board for grain. Each family consisted of the father, the mother and six children. When they arrived there was only one measure (one quart) of rice for the six families—imagine it, one quart of rice to feed forty-eight people. The rice was cooked and given not to the adults but to the children of the six families while the adults 'went starving.' That is the story of our world. Men and women and children 'starve' for food, for warmth, for books, for medicine, for hope."

I say that it is hard for us to conceive of such conditions to say nothing of understanding them. We have not come in direct contact with such conditions and we hope that we never will. We are not going over there to find out first-hand if these reports are actually true. I, for one, am going to accept as a true picture of the situation what these people who have seen for themselves are reporting to us.

I don't feel that I have gone far enough, however, when I merely accept these reports as being true. I remember what Jesus said about that man who prayed, "Father, I thank Thee that I am not as other people." And I know what he had to say about those men who "passed by on the other side" when they came upon the man who had fallen upon thieves, and what it was that made the "Good Samaritan" good.

Now I think we are ready to say a few words about the response to this great need. And the first question that is going to pop up in the minds of most of us is this: "What can I do, as little and small and insignificant as I am, in the face of such a world catastrophe?" Let me ask you this question, "What did you do when the world became involved in this last terrible and devastating war?" You were called upon to give something far more precious to you than any amount of material possessions—your sons and daughters, or if you were the right age—even yourself. None of us was too small not to have a part in that world catastrophe (World War II) which brought on the global catastrophe now facing us today. So, it is now, none of us is too small not to have a part in setting the world right again.

The world is now facing a crisis so wide in scope, so universal in its possibilities, for good or for evil, that we might well call this the "Moment of

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our good friend, Mr. R. S. Crawford, the Fuller Brush man, paid us a very pleasant visit a few days ago. We were talking about giving, tithing, and church work in general, and during our conversation I related this story which was told to me first-hand. We had a good friend who lived in Burlington some years ago before Burlington had sidewalks all over town. This man lived on a dirt street. He said he met an old colored woman on the street in Burlington one day who had nursed him when he was a small child. She had grown old and feeble. He said to her: "How is your health, Auntie?" She said, "Marse John, I am all crippled up with rheumatism and my teeth give me a lot of trouble." He said, "If I will pay for a set of new teeth, will you go across the street and have the dentist put you in a set?" She said, "I sure will, Marse John, and thank you, too." He said he got a real joy out of giving the old woman the teeth, which cost him fifteen dollars back in that day. He gave because he just wanted to give. On his way home that day he was walking along on a dirt street and kicked a little turf of grass with the toe of his shoe, and kicked a twenty-dollar gold piece from under the grass. He said it called to mind the verse in St. Luke 6:38: "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over."

Then our conversation drifted to tithing and Mr. Crawford said he never had anything to give, or not much, until he decided to give a tenth of his income. Since he began to tithe his income, he always has something to give. He gave us a nice contribution last year near Thanksgiving, and said in looking over his tithing account he found he had fifty dollars more than he thought he had, so he presented the writer with fifty dollars for the Christian Orphanage. We truly hope that Mr. Crawford will visit us often.

If our people would give a tenth of their income for one year, what a boost it would give the college, missions, the orphanage, and all enterprises of the church.

When our government called on us several years ago to give twenty per cent of our income, we gave it. If we had been called on to give twenty per cent of our income to charity, we would have though we just could not do it.

Why can't we take God at His word? "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over."

The Easter season will soon be here, and all the girls are looking forward to getting a new dress and the little boys a new suit.

PROTESTANT FILMS.

The first seven films to be produced by the Protestant Film Commission, interdenominational motion picture agency of Protestant churches in this country, were announced recently by Paul F. Heard, executive secretary, following the second annual meeting of the commission in New York.

In addition to the seven films scheduled, Mr. Heard outlined five series of motion pictures which the commission is planning for future production. These include films on the church and world order; a human relations series designed to aid in making individual adjustments to marriage, family and business relationships; a democracy series to stimulate renewed appreciation of a democratic way of life, and a series on the spiritual insights of selected Bible passages as they are applied to modern life. The fifth series will be correlated to the curriculum of the International Council on Religious Education and will serve to implement churches' educational programs.

The seven pictures definitely scheduled will comprise the 147 production schedule. The first will be a film designed to stimulate the average churchgoer to more creative and aggressive Christian living. The second will be a film to promote Christian education by portraying the basic values of religion in an atomic era and emphasizing the moral values which play a part in family life. As a companion piece to this, another film will dramatize the importance of the church school teacher, to aid in recruitment of such teachers and stimulate community appreciation of his contribution.

One film to be produced very shortly will deal with the need for basic racial and religious tolerance. Instead of concentration on minority groups subject to prejudice, the drama will relate the origin and development of prejudice in the individual, its harmful effect on the individual himself and the spiritual dynamics which can help effect a cure.

Another film, designed primarily for exhibition in schools and colleges, will be a missionary recruitment picture to show the vocational opportunities in the modern missionary field, its spiritual rewards and qualifications needed for entering this service.

Two other pictures include the subject of the Christian ministry, to serve both as a recruitment film for the ministry as well as enhance the prestige of the minister, and another on Christianity in China.

The Protestant Film Commission was organized a year ago by the national boards of nineteen denominations and thirteen leading interdenominational agencies. The purposes of the commission are two-fold. The first is to produce and stimulate production of high quality dramatic and documentary films with a spiritual theme for distribution in 16mm to churches, clubs, schools and community groups. The other is to encourage the entertainment motion picture industry in the production of films of moral and artistic values, to encourage the production of films on positive religious themes, and to encourage greater depth and freedom of expression on the screen.

In Memoriam

McEWEN.
1894—1946.

James Henry McEwen lived devotedly and labored constructively. Measured in time, his life was comparatively short, but measured in accomplishments, it was rich and full. It is not possible for us to estimate his constructive contribution to society and to the Kingdom of God; through community institutions, through his business relationships, and through the Church and its enterprises.
He was an accomplished teacher, an outstanding business man of accomplishment and ability, a churchman of devotion and loyalty, a respected citizen and a trusted friend. Mr. McEwen was zealous for all enterprises which were for the good of humanity. His services to all the enterprises of his church were noteworthy.

His interest in and work in behalf of the Christian orphanage was outstanding. He gave generously of his time, his substance and of his abilities to the work of the Christian orphanage. As a friend to this institution and as a member of its Board of Trustees, he was always concerned with its welfare and the welfare of the children who are a part of the great family of this institution. It is with a great sense of loss that we record his passing.
We, the members of the Board of Trustees of the Christian orphanage, Elon College, North Carolina, wish to express our humble gratitude for the life, labors and influence of James Henry McEwen and express to the members of his family loving sympathy. May God's richest blessings rest upon them.

BAIRD.
In memory of a beloved mmeber of the "Acorn" Bible Class of the Waverly Congregational Christian Church, J. F. Baird, who passed away on the morning of February 26, 1947.

Be it therefore resolved:
1. That even though he was confined to his home on account of ill health for a long time, we will miss him, and will ever cherish the memory of his good fellowship and valuable contribution to the "Acorn" Bible Class as a most loyal and faithful member and teacher for many years.
2. That to the family and loved ones we extend deepest sympathy and earnest prayers that God's promises may give them comfort and consolation in their sorrow.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and to "The Christian Sun" for publication and another copy be placed on the records of the "Acorn" Bible Class.

JOYNER.
Our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well, has recently seen fit to remove from our midst Edward Thomas Joyner.
Be it, therefore, resolved:
1. That we bow in humble submission to our Father's will who doeth all things well.
2. That we extend anew, our sympathy to his family, praying that in their sorrow they may find the peace of God that passeth all understanding.

Destiny." The future history of the world depends upon its outcome. We are beginning to see with Prime Minister Attlee that, "We cannot make a heaven in our own country and leave a hell outside." The day has passed for that. And I think we are about ready to admit with Former Secretary of State Byrnes that, "There must be one world for all of us or there will be no world for any of us."

Now let us come straight to the point and ask, "What can I do in the face of this great crisis, this world catastrophe?" Here is where Dr. Hardecastle and Dr. Scott enter the picture again. They have already come to our rescue at this point. They have submitted a very good plan whereby we might, in our small way, have a part in demonstrating to the world the truth of that statement: "The hope of the world lies in Christianity." We can accept the Penny-A-Meal plan for Christ and His Church by securing a sticker with these words written on it, "To help make a Christian world I will give at least a penny-a-meal during Mission Period—March, April—May—June"—placing that sticker on a box or a glass jar, then putting the container on your kitchen or dining room table, and every time you sit down to eat remember your less fortunate fellow men by putting aside a penny for them.
On the last Sunday of the Mission Period—June 29—you should bring your gift to your church in a special envelope which will be provided. This money will be sent direct to the Mission Board at Elon College. And the Mission Board will use it to support the Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson and the Shaowul Mission in China, where over two millions of souls are looking toward the Southern Convention to help them to Christ and health. It will be used to support our mountain mission in Carroll County, Virginia; and to help make America Christian. It will also be used to help organize, build, and maintain churches within the Southern Convention where our witness is greatly needed.
A penny sounds like a very small amount of money. But think just what it would mean if we would all accept this plan. There are over 33,000 members of our churches within the Convention. Think what a penny-a-meal given by each member would mean.
Won't you join in this great venture today? Now is the time for our churches to rise to the occasion, to make a worthy response to this challenge of the hour. To fail would be tragic. To come to rescue would be doing just what Jesus would have us do for our Heavenly Father and our fellowmen.

A lie has no legs and cannot stand; but it has wings, and can fly far and wide.—Warburton.

What Your Gifts Will Do in Shaowu

"I was hungry and ye fed me." "I was sick and ye visited me."

"I was in prison and ye came unto me." "In as much as you did it unto one of the least of these."

- $5.00 will cure the average case of Relapsing Fever.
- $5.00 will buy enough medicine to treat ten average patients with sulpha drugs for pneumonia, bubonic plague, bacillary-dysentery, polio myelitis (infantile paralysis).
- $5.00 will send Dr. Edward C. Riggs, our Medical Missionary, over rough roads to a deserted village of 5,000 souls, that has no doctor in residence.
- $10.00 will buy diphtheria toxin, enough to cure one or two cases, depending upon their seriousness. Without treatment, however, diphtheria is usually fatal in China.
- $10.00 brings scattered village pastors together for a day of Christian fellowship with Rev. Richard L. Jackson. A day of conference and counseling with your missionary strengthens national Chinese Christian leadership.
- $25.00 will send a talented, consecrated, and promising young person from the rural districts of Shaowu to Union High School, Foochow, for a month. Could some class in your Sunday School adopt a youth for eight months? He will become a leader with Christian ideals in a part of the world that holds an important part in the destiny of world peace.
- $25.00 will help Mrs. Dorothy Jackson carry on a program of worship, hygiene, and Christian home making among the women of Shaowu.
- $25.00 will buy milk, eggs, and cod liver oil for the special diet of a tubercular patient for a year!
- $50.00 will provide a program of Leadership Training for Laymen. The strength of the local and universal church depends on the vitality of our laymen and women.
- $50.00 will give a Theological Scholarship for a student for the Christian Ministry in Shaowu. Shaowu is spiritually poverty stricken. It lacks Christian ministers.
- $100.00 will adopt a share in the support of Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson, formerly of our church at Waverly, Va., now our ambassadors of Christ in Shaowu, China. (Each Bible Class and Church that takes a full share will receive a special certificate.)
- $100.00 will adopt a share in the support of Miss Frances Whitaker, Registered Nurse, an angel of mercy and public health to the 2,000,000 of young people of Shaowu. (There are special certificates for these shares, too.)
- $100.00 will adopt a share in the support of Dr. Edward C. Riggs, Christian Doctor, and God's messenger of love and healing among our brethren in Shaowu. (There are special certificates for these shares, also.)

NUMBER 12.

It Must Be Applied

By REV. ANDREW SLABEY

A story goes that a soapmaker and a minister were walking together like good friends even though the soap manufacturer was not a church member nor professed to be a Christian. When the minister asked him the reason why, he replied:

"The gospel you people have preached for the last nineteen hundred years evidently hasn't done much good, for there is still a lot of wickedness and bad people in the world."

The minister was silent for awhile until the two men passed a number of dirty people and came upon some children making mud pies. The children were dirty from the mud. It was the preacher's turn, and so he remarked:

"Look at those children, Evidently soap hasn't done much good in the world. There is still so much dirt and dirty people in spite of the long centuries of soapmaking."

"Oh, yes, but remember, soap is useful only when it is applied," answered the manufacturer.

"True. That is exactly so with the gospel we proclaim," replied the minister, and the soapmaker saw the point.

Do we apply the gospel in our everyday lives? It does us little good unless we do. Jesus said: "If you do what I tell you, you shall be my disciples." St. James said: "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only."

There are so many opportunities where we can practice the gospel. Here is a neighbor in need. Here is the Red Cross drive, the Community Chest, the war refugees, and your own church with its many needs at home and abroad.

Those are some things we can do on the outside of us, but how about applying the gospel inside of us? The Word of God can change our hearts for the better. Apostle Paul says: "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." (II Corinthians 7:1.)

AN EASTER MEDITATION.

And Mary Magdalene and the other Mary were saying among themselves, Who shall roll the stone away from the tomb for us? And looking up they saw that the stone had been rolled away. For the Angels of the Lord descended from heaven, and rolled the stone away from the door and sat upon it. And the Angels answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye; for I know that ye sent Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here for he is risen, come see where the Lord lay.

DUKE UNIVERSITY CONFERENCE ON RELIGION.

Duke University students observed the fourteenth annual Duke University Conference on Religion last week with Bishop Ralph S. Cushman, Bishop of the St. Paul, Minn., area of the Methodist Church, as guest speaker.

In his opening address of the conference at the regular chapel services Sunday morning, Dr. Cushman spoke on "The Personal Quest for God." "The most important question facing any student or adult is that of making God real," he declared. "All of the great characters of history who have vitally affected the world's moral and intellectual life have been persons who came to have a vital experience of God as reality.

"This was true of Job," he continued. "What we learn out of this text is this: that all of us get our knowledge of God at the beginning by hearsay from our mothers or teachers or ministers. Blessed is the man who finally transforms his hearsay or second-hand religion into first-hand certainty of God through Jesus Christ."

The Hope of China

By LUCIA E. LYONS
Hopei, Tientsin, China

There is a large group of women who attend church and the women's society more or less regularly. Many are illiterate and they need much help such as a religious education director could give. Miss Chou, a young woman of outstanding character and training, divides her time among a number of places. She has spent some fruitful months here, but has now moved on, and the church is looking to me to carry on some of the work she has started.

We have another church, older than this but more in need of help, over two miles away across one of the rivers, in an outlying part of the city. The first work suggested for me was reorganizing their Sunday School and holding a training class for the teachers. So I go over there each Saturday and Sunday, usually on foot except for the brief crossing on the hand-propelled ferry. People in that part of town rarely see foreigners, so there is usually a bunch of curious children running along beside me, often calling out, "Da Lao May!" which is the nickname they give the American Marines. Sometimes I hear someone say, "She is not American, she is Russian," which is undoubtedly because I am walking and presumably can't afford to ride. There are about 150 children in Sunday school there, and some nice teachers, most of whom teach in the elementary school which the church people carry.

Work in the country fields around Tientsin is very difficult, for the whole district is either a border region in the present fighting or actually in the hands of the Communists. The workers do not complain of the dangers, however, but of the lack of men and women to do the job. It seems far easier to get money from home for the restoration of buildings than for the continuing adequate support of living men and women; yet, what is a building without leaders?

Refugees keep coming here from Shantung, and we hear much about the losses and sufferings in our Tehchow and Lintsing fields. No less than four of our trained religious workers have met violent deaths, some dating back to the Japanese occupation, while at least four others have died of illness under the difficult living conditions. All but one of our young unmarried women workers and Bible School students have been hastily married to give them security. This means that here is a crying need for funds to train both men and women as fast as we can find them. We hear much, also, of the limitations and prohibitions hedging about our Christ-work in Communist territory. The latest news from Tehchow is that the Communists are tearing down all our buildings there—residences, school and hospital—with the church due to follow according to rumor, as is also the smaller church of the Assemblies of God. This is not primarily anti-American or anti-Christian, for temples are also coming down, and any mercantile house of more than one story. Yet, our preachers work on as they can through all the difficulties.

As the few big cities fill up with refugees, many of them Christians, it is surely the time to strengthen our city work and cultivate intensively a strong nucleus of really devoted Christians who will be ready to rebuild in the rural regions when the time comes. Things look black at times, as one sits listening to the tales of the refugees. It makes one ask serious questions. The ever-recurrent one is, "What is the hope of China?" You are reading many answers to that question in newspapers and periodicals at home, and I will venture to give mine.

The hope of China is not one political party or another; it is not help from any other country. The hope of China is one with the hope of the world.

For not with sword's loud clashing or roll of stirring drums,
But with deeds of love and mercy the blessed kingdom comes.

If the church is really awake to its place in the world, now more than ever in history is destiny in its hands. It is a time for courage, a time for faith, a time for broad planning, deep thinking and devoted living, for the sacrifice of all lesser things, a time for all the forces of righteousness to stand together. In the dark ages it was the church that still kept a feeble flame burning in the monasteries. But now, confronted with undreamed-of possibilities for evil, the world needs more than a feeble flame; it needs a consuming fire, to purify first the church itself and then this unhappy world for which Christ died.

Many brave men and women are holding aloft a torch here in China, sometimes in the midst of incredible difficulties. They need your prayers. Many of you have given me sums of money to use where it is needed. But even more than the money we are thankful for your loving interest in all that we do.

VIRGINIA VALLEY MID-YEAR CONFERENCE.

The members and friends of the Virginia Valley Central Conference are looking forward to their mid-year session at Bethlehem Church, Thursday, March 27, at 10:00 A. M. Rev. Roy A. Larrick is the president of the Conference. A full program has been planned with excellent speakers for the occasion. At 11:00 A. M., there is to be an address by the Reverend Thomas Alfred Tripp of New York, Town and County Work Director for the Board of Home Missions and member of the faculty of the Atlanta Theological Foundation, Nashville, Tenn. Doctor Tripp is an authority on rural church work and we are fortunate to be able to have him at our Conference. His subject will be: "The Task of the Rural Church." During the afternoon session, Rev. William T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, will speak. Also, Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Field Director of Christian Education for Young People's organizations, will appear on the program. An important matter to be presented during the session will be the report of the apportionment committee and the adoption of an apportionment table for this Conference.

Lunch will be served by the ladies of the Bethlehem Church. Since there will be meetings for inspiration and training, both, Thursday and Friday nights at Bethlehem Church, the ladies of that church will also serve dinner at the church on Thursday in order that those attending conference may remain for the night session. It is the hope of the officers of the conference that a large number of people be present for all these additional meetings, and a full delegation present for the conference on Thursday.

Miss Chicoine will speak at the Leakesville Church, Sunday morning, March 30. At 1:30 P. M., a Rally will be held in the eLakesville Church when Doctor Tripp will speak.

Doctor Tripp has been scheduled to speak at Timber Ridge Church at 11:00 A. M., March 30, and at Winchester that evening at 7:30 o'clock.

There will be a special service in the Linville Church, Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock, when Doctor Scott will speak. This is a special service for the group including Linville, Antioch, New Hope and Beulah Churches.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

NO. 8511.

The store window bore the sign, "A. B. C. License No. 8511." That was all. The rest of the story is written in terms of profit and loss, financial profit and moral loss. Back of that sign is being written a story of human life, habit and destiny. That is simply one of the multiplied thousands of opportunities for the convenient purchase and consumption of alcoholic beverage. It is open by day and by night, week day and Lord's day. The 8,510 preceding permits, and all that have followed this particular one, are doing their part to stimulate and cultivate the appetite for alcohol. These schools of drink are found on every hand. While the opportunities already run into the thousands in one city, they run into the millions across the state and nation.

R. H. Martin, Chairman of the Committee Against Advertising, of the National Temperance and Prohibition Council, has examined the 1946 issues of Life, Time and Fortune and discovered that they contain 1,137 liquor advertisements which brought to Time, Inc., a gross revenue of $8,422,852.00. Mr. Martin says that this amount received by one concern is probably more than all the temperance forces in America spend in a year in opposing the liquor traffic. He goes on to say, "There is a rising tide of opposition to this advertising program of the liquor industry both on account of its magnitude and its false and misleading character. It is not truthful. It conceals the dangers connected with and the injuries resulting from the beverage use of alcohol liquors. By the use of beautiful settings, attractive pictures and the like, it makes false claims from their use. The liquor industry is spending $100,000,000 a year in advertising liquor, wine and beer in magazines, newspapers, over the radio and by other media. To what purpose? To stem the rising tide of opposition to their business, to glamorize, make popular and respectable the drinking of alcoholic liquors, to add to the already large army of drinkers, especially from American youth, and thus to increase the sale and consumption of their products and the profits of the liquor industry."

Those who take Christ seriously cannot take this matter lightly. We are confronted during this Lenten period by One who for our sake fasted forty days and forty nights. Abstinence is not an outmoded virtue. Spiritual discipline pays dividends. Christian character accrues. Energy and money are invested wisely and are no longer dissipated. The choice is before us: self-gratification or self-denial? The exercise of Christian abstinence and stewardship make it possible for us to exert an effective influence at home and abroad. Our Lenten habits will be reflected in our Easter Offering for Missions.

RECREATION IN THE CHURCH.

William H. Sharpe, a graduate student at the University of North Carolina, who is majoring in Physical Education, with a definite interest in church recreation, is endeavoring to find out what recreational activities our Congregational Christian Churches have and what attitudes and ideas the ministers have regarding recreation. The information secured through a questionnaire will form the basis of a thesis for the Master of Arts degree. Mr. Sharpe is a member of our church in Chapel Hill and has had experience as a Student Summer Service worker. His adviser in this study is Dr. Harold D. Meyer, Director of the North Carolina Recreation Commission and Professor of Sociology in the University.

Mr. Sharpe states: "Today as never before it is being realized that the church has a responsibility in seeing that its members use their leisure time wholesomely. By taking the leadership in planning leisure time activities the church can assure itself that the use of leisure time by its members will be wholesome and creative." The questionnaire boxes the compass of a recreational program in the church by its questions concerning the leadership, organization, finances, activities and facilities of the local church.

This timely study should arouse new interest in a widely neglected phase of our church program. Mr. Louis B. Nichols, assistant director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said recently, "Only by recognizing the competition being offered the young people can the church recruit youth." He advised pastors and church officials to visit honky tonks and see for themselves what their young people are being offered, and then go back to their churches and offer something better.

R. L. H.

THE BARRIER OF SPELLING.

As the world is drawn closer together by radio and by air travel, more people are thinking out loud about the need for a more universal idiom for spoken and written communications. The British government recently spent $92,000 of its precious funds for the copyright of Basic English, a simplified language designed to be learned as an auxiliary by people who speak some other tongue. The latest suggestion along this line comes from the World Language Foundation, in Washington, which thinks English spelling should be simplified.

Frank C. Laubach, a specialist in phonetic alphabets, says that if twenty per cent of all English words were spelled as they are pronounced, the learning of English could be greatly simplified. Such spellings as "tho," "tuf," "kawf," "plow," and "throo" would replace "though," "tough," "cough," "plough," and "through."

Like any suggestion for re-forming popular practice, this one would be difficult to put across. George Bernard Shaw has been hammering at it for years with little success. The crust of custom is hard to break, and unless the demand for change is supported by economic or military pressure, it is usually unavailing. Nevertheless, there have been instances of voluntary changes in customs affecting large numbers of people. Had it not been so, the civilized world would not be united today in its acceptance of the Gregorian calendar.

There is sense in the proposal to extend the use of English throughout the world. If there is to be a universally understood language, a logical choice seems to be that one which is already spoken by more than 400,- 000,000 people, including two of the world's great nations. But we concede that present spellings could be made less formidable for Senegalese or Icelandic learners.

Mr. Laubach says English should be "eeze enouf for enibodi. Rite now, it's too tuf for furriners to plow throo.—Editorial in the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Post War Japan

By MISS FRANCES B. CLAPP*

I left the First Congregational Church in Portland, where I had been working the past four year, and had a delightful visit with my brother's family at his Gibson Island home in Chesapeake Bay. Later I visited my second brother in Dan Diego. Changes in schedule and several strikes delayed sailings and changed ports till we finally sailed, not from San Francisco, where my baggage was loaded, nor from Seattle as scheduled, but from Vancouver, B. C. The state of uncertainty can be imagined when we received notice September 30 in Seattle that we were to take a local boat the next morning for Vancouver. Passengers and all hand luggage were again transferred at Victoria, and late that evening we boarded the Marine Falcon in Vancouver. She is a troop ship, and most of us were in large dormitories, no port-holes, public lavatories, etc. However, the ventilation was good and they did all they could to make us comfortable. For a poor sailor on a rough sea, however, it was not too good; and to my humiliation I landed finally in the ship's hospital, an incident best forgotten. Our splendid Dr. Yuasa, former president of the Doshisha, who spent the war years in America, was a fellow passenger and also Mrs. Vining, the new American tutor of the Crown Prince. She is a very charming and gracious lady and an excellent choice for the position. Several groups of Catholic sisters also proved friendly travelling companions. The twenty women in our room were largely Protestant workers returning to Japan.

Landing in Yokohama, we went up to Tokyo for the several days necessary to get our papers, registration and money in order, and stayed at the pleasant home set up in the former "Walser" house by the Committee of Six sent out last spring to survey the situation here. We found three of them, including Alice Cary, absent, attending the national convention of the United Church, held in Kyoto at our own Doshisha. It was a great loss to us that we were not able to be there ourselves. We saw in Tokyo something of the terrible destruction. About eighty-five per cent of the homes were destroyed, it is said. One surprising thing is the small vegetable gardens growing everywhere amid ruins and over rubble, and always somewhere on the border a flower or two, perhaps only a single cosmos plant or a gay cock's-comb. The stories that the people tell, even those who barely escaped with their lives and lost everything, also contain this note of beauty; "It was the most beautiful thing I ever saw, flowers of fire from heaven;" "We used to go out to watch the American planes fly by in formation"—over Kyoto—"eight, and eight and eight together. It was like a picture. We knew we might be killed any time but it was as safe outside as in our little houses and it was beautiful to watch."

The presence of our army of occupation everywhere, in the hotels, office buildings, leading apartment houses and about the trains and docks seems fantastic to those of us who knew the old Japan. To see former American acquaintances deciding on educational policies, the status of the Shinto shrines, and handling transportation, seems equally incredible.

Sarah Field and myself were the American Board representatives on the Falcon, and after three days in Tokyo we took a night train, she for Kobe College, and I for Kyoto. I was still too weak from the trip to have any great enthusiasm about the return to Kyoto until I got up the following morning at sunrise near Maibara. Providentially there has been a fine rice crop this year and that beautiful valley surrounded by blue hills, edged with the lace of pine trees, and golden with the drooping heads of ripe rice touched by the morning sun, looked like the "Promised Land." This was real joy after the sadness of destruction we had seen about Tokyo. Doshisha friends were at the station, and they took me up to the house formerly occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Warren, just around the corner from our old Muromachi home. It was already a "going concern" with our former fine housekeeper, Terachi San, in charge. She had been taking care of the six Americans present at the church council for the past week, and I acted as hostess for lunch the day of my arrival! Those of you who have heard me say that we would not be able to entertain this year will laugh, for friends are constantly coming and going. After years of no social life at all, all are eager to get together for companionship again. We may have no tea or wafers to serve, but they come anyway. Sweet potatoes are now abundant on the market; and at meals and parties they are served, sliced, mashed, cold boiled and baked. A welcome party given us by the teachers today served baked sweet potatoes for refreshments and cold boiled slices were served at another meeting last Saturday. Our friends have been bringing in gifts of their precious fruit, and so many articles which we gave away upon leaving have been brought back, often to our distress.

Perhaps this is the place to give you who have lived in Japan before, some idea of present prices. Mikan (tangerines) are Y5 apiece; apples, Y6-Y7; eggs, once 7 sen apiece, are now 7 yen; stamps on local letters are 30 instead of 3 sen, and it might be added that the sheets of stamps are neither perforated nor gummed! In general, prices range from ten to a hundred times former prices, with an average of seventy or eighty times. Wages, of course, are higher, but not all proportionately, and as usual it comes hardest upon the professional class. The poorest shoes sell for Y400 and any kind of shoe fit for an adult ranges from Y900 to Y1200. Many of our teachers here tell me that they never buy anything except food, for that takes every penny. Ministers and teachers are about the hardest hit, for they have little or no way of adding much to their income. If any of you would be interested in having the name of some faculty family here in Doshisha, send me a card and I will send a name and a little information about the family. Among the most welcome articles are food,

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

One of the most important pages to be printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN for some time is page nine in the March 6 number: "Our World-Wide Mission." There is set forth in plain view what is hoped and what is proposed by the Mission Board of our Convention. There is set down in black and white what is expected as contributions from our 33,000 members for our missionary work at home and abroad—$51,000. For our regular foreign mission work, $12,000 is needed; for our new additional Shao-wu Mission, in China, $10,000; and for our share in World-Wide Reconstruction, $7,000—a total of $51,000.

Then follows the proposed distribution of the $51,000, and in that section I notice $18,700 to constructive church building right here in our Convention. There also is set forth for all to see exactly what churches are now receiving aid, so every reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN can see where our home mission money is being expended, and can feel that we all have a share in doing the work being done at those places: Ashboro, Bay View, Carroll County, Chapel Hill, Damascus, Elon College Church, High Point, Lynchburg, Valley Churches, and Winston-Salem. There are ten of those stations. Let us finish several of them up, and get on to new ones. Many of our sister denominations are having the thrill of beginning and developing new churches in needy places. Look at the names listed above. How long have those names been before us! Let us get some of them on the self-supporting column soon; and go on into new fields. But before we leave them we must all put our hands together and give them the lift that is needed.

Have you studied that page nine in the March 6 number carefully? I see back of the lines there Dick and Dorothy Jackson's faces among the fellow Christians in China. Our very own fellow-workers they are! They are bright, happy, courageous faces! They are out there now! They believe we—their friends—here in our churches are going to receive sufficient offerings to make them proud to represent us, and to keep those charming smiles on their faces and that sunshine in their souls. Yes, back of those lines are our folks here at home, too, noble, hard-working, consecrated persons setting forth day after day at their tasks for us in fields here which have selected and to which we have called them. Let's see it all achieved for the Christ.

Quite some figure—$51,000! Have you set it down beside your own local church, and in some way asked yourself the question: How can we do our share? Begin by counting up how much you did on it last year. How much did you give to foreign missions? How many reading this line can tell how much their church gave last year through all channels to foreign missions? Good! Now how much did you give through all channels to our own home missions? And finally, how much did your church give to War Victims and Reconstruction last year? Add these three together. Let that total send you on to better things this year. Beat your last year's record. A cent-a-meal for the four-month Mission Period, namely, $3.66 is a minimum goal for each of us. Multiply that by everyone who eats at your table, and be so thankful that you have a table and some food on it, and so anxious that it may continue to be so for many years to come that a penny a piece seems easy to give!

seeds, and soap; thread, needles, yarn, towels and wash cloths, also any material are equally welcome. I brought out over a hundred packets of vegetable seeds but could use several times as many.

Doshisha came through as well as any school in Japan. No destruction and most of the plumbing and metal work undisturbed. Our Fowler Hall had no losses, and the pipe organ functions beautifully. We have a fine Japanese organist now, a man trained in France. He has also been made organist for MacArthur, so is in Tokyo much of the time. He says without any question ours is the best pipe organ in Japan. He begins today a series of five historical organ recitals. During the war all music had to stop, so the grade of students has fallen off greatly, but I am amazed at how well some have kept up without any help or instruction. There has never been such interest in English, Bible, and the outside world. Almost boundless opportunities open for service.

To us the stories of our personal friends here offer the greatest interest. Few were prepared for the final surrender, as they had had little idea how things were going the last months. They so often use the phrases "We were in despair" or "We were all prepared to perish." Two, quite independently, said that their first reaction to the proclamation was neither one of joy nor sorrow, but simply "At last I can get a night's sleep," for most of them were utterly exhausted by long days of factory work, and nights of gardening, hunting food, and constant disturbances of air raids. Kyoto was so darkened when Osaka burned that it was like late twilight, the sun a small red ball casting red shadows, and ashes falling everywhere, though they saw no smoke. Some of them thought the end of the world had come.

One of our teachers, a D.Ed. from an American University, was drafted and sent to Burma. He told of his nine months' walk, three months to the front, only to be sent back the very day he arrived, a six months' return over mountain trails at night because the roads were so swept by airplanes. For three months they were constantly wet because of the rains, and less than a tenth of them returned. He was one of six commissioned officers to get back alive. Later he was made liaison officer when they were taken prisoners by the British. It was there he says he had the greatest and most interesting opportunity of his life, when finally his colonel allowed him to speak openly to the men and explain the western viewpoint and democracy. Although a shadow of his former self and still suffering from malaria, he was one of the active force at the Doshisha summer school, held for three hundred of the elementary school teachers of Kyoto to help them get started again in the new ways. Another fine young man, a Doshisha graduate, and son, grandson and great-grandson of Doshisha alumni, was sent to the Philippines. After the surrender he, too, because of his excellent English, was used as an American patrol officer to help get word to the Japanese in the mountains that the war was over. He was shot at many times but came out unscathed. He was given his freedom, and when he found there was only one other Christian, a Catholic, among the two thousand Japanese prisoners of war, he decided to hold services. There was so much interest that finally the American chaplain had a chapel built for him, and he preached and taught there regularly. Before he was sent back to Japan this past summer, he had a group of twelve men ready for bap-

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

HOW MUCH DO YOU OWE?

A group of alumni was in my office last evening. The topic of conversation was Elon College in general and the proposed new gymnasium in particular. The alumni by vote have assumed the responsibility of raising $250,000 with which to build a new gymnasium. We have about $40,000 in cash and pledges to be applied on this obligation. Some were optimistic and some were pessimistic. This was to be expected. Finally, John Smith, who was present, spoke up and said, "The trouble with us is we have forgotten Elon College. I know I have. I owe more to Elon College than I do to anybody or anything else in the world. It took me when I didn't know anything. I was nineteen years old. I had not been to school more than one year in my whole life. It took me, and not only gave me a chance, but it gave me an opportunity and helped me to improve that opportunity. I would play football in the afternoon; the professors would pass me around to their homes in the evening and instruct me. I would go to class in the mornings. I kept that up for four years. I started in the preparatory department and at the bottom. I left when I reached my junior year. I owed the college so much money that I was ashamed to stay longer. When I left, the first dollar I made I sent back to Elon College. Not only have I forgotten the college, but the college has forgotten me. I live right here in Greensboro and no one has asked me for money for the college. If anyone had called on me before Christmas, I would have given him a good donation." "Brother," he said, "we have the greatest opportunity in this world, but before we can cash in on it, we have got to sell Elon College to the public. We have got the greatest faculty, the greatest student body, the greatest college in this country. Let's tell the world about it. Let's get out and sell it."

You are wondering who this alumnus is. I wondered the same thing as he was talking. He is a good, successful business man in Greensboro, N. C. He is aware of what the college has done for him and of his obligations to the college. What do you owe the college? Anything? You paid your bills when you were in college, paid all you were asked to pay.

What further debt do you owe? You are not billed for all you owe. The debt you owe Elon College can't be tabulated in figures and placed on a bill ad. Elon College put something in your character, in your soul, that you can't sum up in dollars and cents. It's a part of you. If you had not gone to college, you would have gone through life without it. Define that something. Analyze it. Take it to pieces so that we can see it. You can't. It is impossible. It is a part of you. It is always with you. It is you. Acquaintances, friendship, comradeship (husband or wife), principle, ideals, ambition, a sense of worthwhileness to your fellowman, to society, and to the world. What would you be worth without the contributions that Elon College has made to you? Oh, you can think of a bigger and better college to which you might have gone, but the fact remains that you didn't. Elon College is your college, and you are what you are because of what Elon College did for you. What are you worth? How much do you owe? What are you going to do about it? When you were a student, Elon College gave you her best—gave it generously and freely. The college is in need. It needs your help. It is your Alma Mater. You have an obligation. Contribute to the welfare of the college in proportion to the contributions received from the college. The college made an investment in our. That investment was worthwhile. We have an opportunity of making an investment in the college—an investment that will bear dividends in the years to come, dividends in human character, in human life, and the on-going of the civilization that we have inherited and to which we owe a debt to ourselves, our generation, and the generations that are to follow. Together let's pay it. How much is your share? How much is my share?

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We have all heard that it does not pay to put things off. We get along much better if we take things as they come and do them the best we can.

The church recognizes its obligation to the college. It is proud of this obligation and is seeking in every way possible to discharge it to the fullest extent. In providing for the financial support of Elon College it has asked through the several conferences each individual church for a definite amount. This is not a law. No church or individual is compelled to give other than through a sense of obligation. A compelling obligation is about as inexorable as anything could be. Anyone who thinks, knows that no liberal arts college is self-supporting; that is, it could not be supported adequately only through tuition and fees paid by patrons. These amounts must be supplemented if there are to be buildings, equipment and instructors. These colleges are supported either through taxation or through voluntary gifts—gifts for permanent funds and current demands. The purpose of this column is to inspire and influence the members of our Sunday schools and churches to contribute to the current needs of our college. The church, through the Convention, requests that these contributions be made weekly, certainly as often as quarterly. To contribute regularly will insure larger sums with less inconvenience by the time the end of the year has arrived. We have a number of Sunday schools and churches that follow this plan. Does your church and Sunday school follow this or a similar plan? If not, why not join with those who do that the college may receive its support regularly? Its expenses cannot be deferred to the end of the year and contributions, as the Convention has planned, will be of material assistance.

We have an accumulation of reports this week, for which the college is grateful.

SHALL WE TRY TO SAVE THE WORLD?

President Harry Truman recently pointed out to the Congress that the time has come for the United States to make an effort to save the world from economic, political, and social destruction. This is a new national policy for peace-time. For 158 years the Government has sought to save the United States, sometimes without much regard to what happened elsewhere.

But for 137 years our Church has been trying to save the world. In 1810 there were a few daring souls who set out across the seas to bring health, hope, and brotherhood to peoples of all nations and races. Today there are more than 350 men and women of our Church seeking to save Africa, China, India, Japan, Mexico, the Near East, the Philippines and other islands of the Pacific. These Church people know that if one nation suffers, all nations suffer; that sin is a reproach to any people; and that the only hope for the world is for people everywhere to be united in brotherhood because they are sons of God.

Our Church has known all along that Greece and Turkey needed help. That is why people like Rev. and Mrs. J. Riggs Brewster, Dr. Ruth A. Parmelee, President Katherine L. McElroy, and Dr. Hazel Barnes are in Athens, and have been there during the hardships of the past two years. That explains why a long list of excellent educators have been in Turkey through the war period, and why a still longer list of educated religious leaders have been at work in the Near East since 1820.

We know that the Near East needs saving. And we know that it is the people that are worthy of help. Governments may come and go, but the people go on forever. They are the people for whom Christ died. Christians face the necessity of telling them about that Christ.

HUMAN NEEDS.

Reports coming from Europe and the Near East tell of starvation, of vanished educational opportunities, of destroyed churches, of homeless people, of decadent morality, of human needs beyond words to describe. Disputed and changing boundary lines, prisoners of war, slave labor, exorbitant prices, scarce foods and clothes, children in gangs fighting for food, war trials that kill leaders who lost, civil wars, robbery, elections in which free choice is impossible, corrupt government—these are some of the phrases we read until we forget that they will mean human misery and death.

As church people we are aware that human needs reach into all corners of the earth, that people of all nations and races are plagued with similar tortures. We know, also, that the greatest needs are not for bread, clothes, and shelter. The human needs of our world run far deeper than that.

Fear still drives men mad. And fear fills our earth. There is the fear of the atomic bomb which may destroy civilization within a few minutes, and doubtless will unless men become good enough not to use atomic energy for destruction. There is the fear of starvation which millions face, and the results of inadequate food for children. Deeper still, there is the fear that God will not protect the peoples of the earth from their own folly—that even as God did not prevent the crucifixion of Jesus, so He may permit mass destruction in our time because of the evil men do to each other.

It is the business of the Church to broadcast everywhere the words of the Crucified: "Forgive them, for they know not what they do." If in the heart of God there is willingness to forgive, then men can look beyond the tortures of the times and be assured that eventually all will be well. This is not merely insurance against the long future, it is the one thing that makes the present endurable. Parents can suffer hunger if they are sure that their children will be bountifully supplied. Christianity assures all that God is always near trying to help man overcome his sinfulness that constantly keeps him in trouble. This is why missionaries go all over the earth, risking physical life and forsaking the comforts that might be theirs. They are trying to make it clear that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." and that He is still busy whispering into the hearts of those who will listen: "Be not afraid."

HOW ARE WE DOING?

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the first foreign mission board in America, reports that on August 31, 1946, it had in its working budget $1,338,331.82. In addition to this there were investments—donations from people living and dead, mostly dead—in the sum of $8,838,544.80.

This board further reports an income for the year ending on the above date of $1,361,411.91. Of this amount $665,399.56 came from the churches, and $117,474.92 from individuals.

Such an income made it possible for the board to support its 348 missionaries and its 5,103 native workers in its 2,278 places of work among 16,678,612 people for whom the board is responsible.

During the past year forty-four new missionaries were appointed—seventeen go to China, eight to India, four to the Near East, six to Africa, four to the Philippines, three to Japan, and two to Mexico.

"Our thirteen Missions are calling for 176 more missionaries," says the report. "The cost of maintaining our work in other lands has increased so much during and since the war that the American Board will be unable to support the full quota requested, but we are determined to secure and send as many as our budget will allow." Hence a search is being made for fifty-one new missionaries in 1947.

Please note the reason for fifty-one instead of the 176—"support."

"ONE INVISIBLE GUEST."

The women of the Winchester Church have just made a gift of $175 to the War Victims and Reconstruction Fund of our church through the plan of selling these tickets:

"Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these"

Overseas Relief

War Victims and Reconstruction

ONE INVISIBLE GUEST

and for CHRIST'S SAKE

50 Cents

Ladies Aid Society

Woman's Missionary Society

Congregational - Christian Church

Winchester, Virginia

"I was hungry and ye fed me, naked and ye clothed me"

Rather than furnishing the purchaser with a fine meal, the money was to go to help feed "one invisible guest" across the sea. The missionary society and the ladies' aid society cooperated in the venture to bring relief to the need, and to raise some money for their church's share in our Southern Convention offering for War Victims and Reconstruction. It may be that some other group could sponsor a similar "meal."

At the Sunday night service on March 2, a table on the platform was set with places for three: Rev. R. A. Whitten, the speaker of the evening; Mrs. R. A. Whitten, the president of the missionary society; and, between them, a place for the "invisible guest." When the committee chairman, Mrs. T. F. Trenary, gave her report, she placed the check on the guest's plate. Mrs. Grover Daugherty, Mrs. Cecil Whitlock, Miss Catherine Carter, Mrs. Albert Clark and Miss Betty Cather were others who had a share in the service. Mr. Whitten spoke on "Ministering in His Name." The following poem by him was read by Mrs. Whitten as the check was presented:

"Hungry and Ye Fed Me."

We cannot see them with our eyes,
But we can feel them with our heart.
For every hungry child that dies
Might live if we would do our part.

I cannot see their bony hands
Outstretched, in hunger, calling me,
The destitute from many lands,
But I can help to set them free.

A cup of water in His name
Will keep its freshness 'cross the sea;
A loaf of bread will do the same -
Bless both the hungry soul and me.

Still they call by day and night
For food that we should gladly give,
To make tomorrow for them bright,
By giving them a chance to live.

Invisible guests across the sea!
We send our gifts and prayers for thee;
And may the bread which we now send
Be blessed and multiplied by Him
Who is the Bread of Life to all
Of those who will upon Him call.
So in His name—and for His sake
We share His bread—that you partake.

BAY VIEW PUBLISHES COOK BOOK.

According to word received from Mrs. L. F. Todd, the women of the Bay View Church are publishing a cook book containing their favorite recipes. Proofs have come from the printer and it looks as though the cook book is going to be a big help to anyone who will purchase and use it.

They are for sale at $1.00 each and may be purchased from Mrs. Todd, 205 Atlans Street, Norfolk 3, Virginia, or any member of the missionary society of the Bay View Church. They hope to raise $1,000 for the Building Fund of their church from the sale of these cook books and hope to furnish a permanent kitchen for their church.

Sever years ago the women of our Winter Park, Florida, Church, published a similar cook book and its sale was a huge success. Our best wishes go to the women of Bay View as they start out on this project.

ANGIE RETURNS TO JAPAN.

Miss Angie Crew is on her way to Japan. She left her home in West Milton, Ohio, Sunday, March 10 for San Francisco, where she boarded the steamship General Meigs and set sail on Friday, March 14. Within a short time she will be back among her friends at Kobe College, Nishinomiya, Japan. For seventeen years she worked in Japan. It has been her constant hope while in America and the Near East that she could return to Japan. Kobe College managed to keep going through the war period, although some of the buildings were bombed by American fliers, and when the first opportunity came, its president requested the return of Angie Crew, among others, to the teaching staff of that excellent institution.

Many people in the Southern Convention will, in imagination and prayer, sail the Pacific this week and next with Angie. And when Easter comes they will give a little extra for Angie.

VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE ENTERTAINED.

The Woman's Missionary and Ladies' Aid Societies of the Congregational Christian Church, Virgilina, Virginia, sponsored a party on Thursday evening during Youth Fellowship Week, for the members of the young adult, junior and intermediate Sunday school classes. Hostesses were the teachers of the classes, Mrs. C. E. Newman, Mrs. William Tuck, and Miss Marguerite Daniel, respectively, with Mrs. Reams Long substituting for Mrs. Newman.

Mrs. P. P. Morrow, also a teacher in the Sunday school, assisted with the amusements, and during the evening many lively games, old and new, were enjoyed by the group. Following, Mrs. Newman gave an interesting talk on "The Importance of Sunday School Attendance in a Young Person's Life." Refreshments were served by the hostesses.

The classes entertained were well represented, and all present expressed themselves as having spent a delightful evening. There was a noticeable increase in Sunday school attendance the following Sunday, and the women's societies plan to sponsor more of these social gatherings for the young people of the church from time to time.

Mrs. W. S. DANIEL,
Secretary.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

Night has come with its star-lit silence. I am very tired from doing the many Saturday chores which a mother must do to be ready for the Sabbath. As I rest myself in the quiet of the night shadows I think of you who read this page:

Are you tired and glad for rest also? Day's end! Does it find you enjoying the story hour with your father? Or does it find you already in bed because of flu or an illness? As I think of you I try to imagine what things you like best in a Children's Page. Do you like puzzles? Stories? Just plain letters? It would help me so much if you would write once in a while and tell me what you like best in our page. Sometime soon I hope to get another cut for a croosword puzzle and have a puzzle each week for you during the summer months.

Have you seen signs of Spring at your home yet? "The time of the singing of birds has come" here in Asheville, but the winter is still with us as well! The weatherman promised below freezing weather for us and possible snow flurries. At present the stars have won out over the clouds. At the southeast corner of our house bright yellow jonquils have opened up their faces to the sunlight. Today as I was dusting the bedroom on that side I saw Mr. Welch who lives up at the top of our hill, stop to smile at the jonquils. He was bundled in his overcoat with his faithful cane that helps him up and down the hill. Mr. Welch of Larchmont Road is a retired lawyer. He is very tall. He lives alone with his wife. Mrs. Welch is very small. When she walks with her husband she doesn't even come to his shoulder. I went out to shake my duster and they were coming up the hill together. He was carrying a bag of groceries and she was gently scolding him for coming down to meet her. "You know that your time is limited! Every breath is precious. You shouldn't have come!" They are so interesting! All the children of our street love them and like to go to see them. I wish that you could know them also.

Didn't you enjoy reading the letter from Dorothy and Dick Jackson in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN? I've thought of them so often since reading it. Their request for prayer from us seemed so urgent that it brought tears to my eyes. I'm sure that you'll remember them in your prayers. I hope that you are keeping the "cents" climbing up the glass in your jars!

PRAYER.

Father in Heaven, lover of all children, we have no words with which to thank Thee for the great good which comes into our lives: but we pray that we may glorify Thee with cheerful hearts, and by lives which reveal Thy goodness to others. Keep all those who seek to serve Thee on Foreign Mission Fields in Thy kind care. Gird them with Thy great love and patient courage. Help us as we seek to share our goodness, our love, our food and clothing with Thy needy children of our world. Amen.

TRUTH IS A CHILD'S SECURITY.

By PHYLLIS JACOBY CALKINS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

One evening Mrs. Parker, an acquaintance living across the street, came in for a little visit.

"Where is Helen?" I asked, knowing that Mr. Parker could not be at home, as he would be working late that night. Helen was their seven-year-old daughter.

"Oh, she is in bed and asleep—at least, I hope she is asleep. She made me promise to stay in the house because her father isn't home," said Mrs. Parker. "I can't understand what makes her so afraid lately to stay alone.

"That isn't all that's been troubling me with regard to Helen," her mother continued. She's been telling me so many untrue stories. She must know she is lying, and so is doing it deliberately. What would you do about it?"

Before I could answer, we heard a frightened cry, "Mother! Mother! Where are you?"

The next moment there was the sound of footsteps on the porch. I opened the door before Helen reached it. She wore only her thin pajamas, and one slipper was soaked from stepping into a puddle.

"Is my mother here?" she asked between sobs, as I led her into the house.

"Helen, what in the world is the matter with you? Why did you come over here?" asked Mrs. Parker crossly.

"Mother, you promised you would not leave! You said you'd stay in the house with me."

Mrs. Parker glanced at me and said rather guiltily, "Oh, I said that to get you to go to sleep. I knew I wouldn't be away long and that you'd be all right. I didn't suppose you'd wake up."

Helen's sobs subsided, but when her mother tried to put her arm around her the child shrank away and climbed into the corner of a big chair.

"I called you. I woke up and called you, and you weren't there. I heard a noise and I was afraid. And you weren't there. You promised, Mother, and you broke your promise. You told a lie!" she added accusingly.

Helen finally became quiet enough to be wrapped up and taken home, and the next morning Mrs. Parker came over to return the coat that she borrowed.

"I had such a time after we reached home," she said, "getting Helen to sleep. She insisted that I should stay by her bed and hold her hand."

"Margaret, have you found the answer to the question you were considering just before Helen came in last night?" I asked.

She was silent a moment, then said thoughtfully, "Yes, I expect I'm to blame, Phyllis. I'm afraid I haven't been sufficiently careful with regard to keeping many of the promises I've made to Helen. I've often agreed to what she's asked, as I did yesterday, to stop her from teasing or to calm her fears. It never occurred to me that she would notice my failure to keep my word and feel that I had lied to her, but this may be the reason she has started to tell untruths."

"It would make a difference," I answered. "A child copies his parents, both consciously and unconsciously, and I have always felt that if you make any kind of promise to a child you should keep that promise. It seems to me that the only way to make sure a child will be trustworthy in every way is to convince him that he can trust others. Once you have lost his faith it is generally hard to regain it."

"I think I have discovered that in time," said Mrs. Parker. "I have learned my lesson. I'm going to talk frankly with Helen and let her know that she need never doubt me again. She is mature enough, now that she has had this experience, to appreciate the value of confidence, and I think it will be easy for her to understand that it ought to be mutual."

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

As Easter draws near your Editor would like to know what the young people of our churches are planning. Perhaps, it is a Special Easter program; or an Easter Pageant or a Sunrise Service. Whatever it is, drop me a line and let us all know about it. Do it now before you forget it!

BY WAY OF SUGGESTION.

I have know young people's groups to do something extra special at Easter time. It need not be something elaborate, but something different. Something that appeals especially to the young people. This "something different" has taken various forms. In New England the young of my parish there always had an Easter Sunday morning breakfast at the church followed by a worship service. One year they went to a hillside ahead of time and prepared a worship center and went there at sunrise on Easter morning for their service.

Another way by which you young people can participate in the Easter program is to form yourself into a choir to sing at the Sunrise Service or the morning worship service. Then, too, you can hold a Sunrise Service of your own. Plan now to do something extra special at Easter. It will help your church and it will help you, spiritually.

:: :: ::

Your Editor has been hearing "bits" here and there about the "Teams" working in the North Carolina and Virginia and the Western North Carolina Conferences assisting youth groups in getting started and making practical suggestions to other groups. If such a "Team" has visited your youth organization, let's hear about it. I would, also, like to receive a few words from the leaders of these "Teams" as to your plans and procedure.

JOY IN SERVICE.

Christians are a little mad! The world does not understand the free service men and women render to others and to the world because of the love they know in Jesus Christ. The world would call the Livingstons, the Grenfells, and the George Washington Carvers fools. But they are people who have found the secret of happy and successful living. They are people who, because they share in God's love, must share themselves with others.

The happy and secure individual is one who looks beyond the bounds of his own life and finds his joy in service. The true Christian is moved into concern for others, and finds joy in that service, because of his love for the Master. In helpful living he bears witness to Christ's way to the people he serves.

Christian service need not be spectacular. It is often dull. But in that experience in sharing life—moved simply by love—there is healthful living and joy.—Taken from Lenten Devotions for Young People, 1947.

tism. He now plans to enter the ministry, and has already formed a band of over a hundred Christian young men and women here in Kyoto.

Esther Hibbard left America the same day that our ship sailed, but she came via Houston, Texas, and the Panama Canal. Hers was a slow freighter, and took a whole month en route, so she arrived just two weeks after we did. It is fine to have her here. Several of the men the Civil Information and Education offices here (with the army of occupation) are former students of hers in Japanese. On the whole we have a very fine group of American men here, and the Japanese like and admire many of them. Many of the fine young Japanese, graduates of Christian schools, are working in the army offices or with the related activities, and the relationship of courtesy and consideration is having a very great effect here. It is a strange situation in a strange world but holds more seeds of hope than I would have thought possible. May the Christian ideals of love and service prove their strength in this significant testing ground.

With Frank and Alice Cary back, Sarah Field, Esther Hibbard and myself, we had a little mission conference at Kobe College a week ago Sunday; Bill Woodard, still a Lt.-

Commander in the Navy, also got down. Even with so few, it is good to see the forces gathering. How we long for the old members back and a lot of young "new blood" as well! Under God's guidance it is "the opportunity of a lifetime."

RESPONDING TO DR. COE'S REQUEST.

Winchester, Va.,
March 5, 1947.

Rev. W. T. Scott, Supt.,
Southern Convention,
Elon College, N. C.
Dear Dr. Scott:

Under date of January 30, 1947, Doctor Albert Buckner Coe, chairman of the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction, requested that we make war victims a special item of interest during Lent. Mrs. Whitten presented this urgent appeal before the Ladies Aid, and the Woman's Missionary Societies of our church with the result that the women adopted the idea of an "Invisible Guest" campaign. Tickets were printed and the "Invisible Guest" service, as the climax of the campaign was conducted in the church last Sunday night. A table was spread before the Altar on which were placed two burning tapers, a fruit basket for a centerpiece, china and cutlery, etc., for three places, one at either end and the other, with a vacant chair facing the audience. The pastor was seated at one end of the table, and Mrs. Whitten, who directed the service, at the other. The vacant place and chair represented the hungry, starving people of our world. During the service, the chairman of the campaign, Mrs. T. F. Trenary, placed in the plate of the invisible guest a check for $175.00, the amount raised for emergency relief for people of other lands.

Herewith check for the $175.00 which we will thank you to forward to forward to Dr. Coe as our answer to the appeal and to keep faith with our friends here who contributed this money for the specific purpose of helping to save lives by providing food in this hour of such desperate need.

Fraternally,
ROBERT A. WHITTEN,
Pastor.

JESUS LAYS DOWN HIS LIFE.

LESSON XIII—MARCH 30, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life.—John 3:16.

LESSON: John 18, 19.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isa. 53:1-11a.

Betrayed By One of His Disciples.

Our Lord was betrayed by one of the Twelve, by one who had accompanied with him, who had heard his gracious words, who had seen his great works, who had shared his great personality, who had enjoyed his glorious friendship. Environment is not enough to save one, else Judas would not have been lost. One must respond to the highest and best if he is to be saved. Even Christ cannot save one who does not respond to his appeal. It is a sobering fact that the one who should betray him was "one of the twelve." Then as now, and now as then, Christ is betrayed by his friends, by those who are his disciples and followers. Let every man take heed lest he fall.

Tried By Pilate.

The artist, Muncasky, has painted a picture, a superb thing, which is entitled "Christ Before Pilate." That is, of course, true—the shrewd Jewish leaders desiring the death sentence and knowing that they could not pronounce it, by a shrewd trick of legal gymnastics, took Christ before Pilate, the Roman governor, who did have the power to sentence him to death. There was a sense, then, in which Christ was tried by Pilate. But in all legal history there was perhaps never a more flagrant instance of perverted justice or a more unfair trial. It was a "mock trial" if ever there was one.

But it would be truer to the facts to refer to this scene as "Pilate Before Christ." That greedy, vacillating, unscrupulous, time-serving, favor-seeking, conscience-hardened politician stood forth in all his naked wickedness, although he was clothed in his royal robes. Indeed although one feels contempt for the man, one also feels sympathy in a way. Because of indecision, lack of will power, refusal to listen to the best in him, and to the suggestion of his wife's finer sensibilities, he delivered Jesus over to be crucified. And today his name is still associated with infamy and is kept alive by thousands and millions who week after week, in repeating the Creed repeat, "suffered under Pontius Pilate." But let us not be too harsh in our judgment of this man. Let us not forget that all too often by our indecision and moral turpitude we deliver the Son of God to be crucified afresh and bring his blood again upon our heads.

Mocked By Soldiers.

It was a crude, rude, cruel horse-play in which those soldiers indulged. They took of our Lord's robe and put on him a purple robe—it was a cynical gesture as to his role as a king—put on a crown of thorns, gave him a slender reed for a scepter, slapped him, spit on him, chided him because he would not or could not tell them who it was that smote him while he was blindfolded. It is not a very attractive picture of human nature. But they were the children of their time. And it is not so far removed from our day. This tragedy and this travesty has been reenacted in our day by Hitler, who spurned the gentler arts and sought to enthrone sheer might and power as ultimate right. And all too many modern men think that security rests in military might. In every war we try to put our robes on Christ, but somehow or other he just does not look right in the accoutrements of war.

Crucified By His Enemies.

The Jews would deny that they crucified Jesus; they say that Rome did it. Rome would probably pass the buck by saying that they were simply carrying out the sentence of the Jewish hierarchy. It is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. Pride, bigotry, prejudice, special privilege, greed, envy, hate, selfishness, the forces of evil crucified our Lord. The central fact is that Jesus Christ was crucified. That is the pivotal point in history. The Cross lies at the heart of Christianity.

Now wiser men than the writer of these Notes have tried to explain the meaning of the Cross. And they have succeeded to some degree. They have made known to us that this is a revelation of what sin really is like and what it will do, of the great love wherewith God in Christ loved us, of the voluntary taking upon himself on the part of God in Christ the sorrows and sufferings and sins of the world, of the power of vicarious suffering and sacrifice, and of the ultimate triumph of love. It is all there and more. But central in evangelical Christianity is the thought that what was done on the Cross was vitally related to us as sinners. "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures"—this was the central theme of the preaching of Paul. "Who loved us and gave himself for us"—that was the triumphant song of the writers of the New Testament. "By his stripes are we healed"—that is the feeling of legions of humble Christians who cannot explain the Cross but who have experienced that which the Cross brings about.

Buried By His Friends.

Jesus died on the Cross. He did not merely swoon, as some critics and cynics would have us believe. As the Creed says, and as the Bible confirms, "He was crucified, dead, and buried." He came back alive from the dead, not merely from unconsciousness. And according to John's gospel the last ministrations of love were performed by his friends. Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus saw to it that the body of their friend was properly cared for and laid away in the tomb in the garden. We should appreciate this. But in one way it is a parable of how all too often we wait until our friends are dead to minister to them by loving acts that could mean so much.

Given Up By All.

Friends and foes alike thought that that was the end of Jesus. To be sure the Jews told Pilate that "that deceiver" had said that he would rise again the third day, but they did not take much store by it, although they did ask a watch for the tomb, and thus all unconsciously gave added evidence to the fact of the resurrection. And the friends of Jesus also thought it was the end of him. In fact they were convinced almost against their wills that he had come alive from the grave. The only way to account for Christianity and the Christian Church is the marvelous change in the minds and hearts of Christ's disciples. Easter is true. Wherefore let us be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

Utmost decency, in all our dealings with the other fellow, is the greatest need of the hour. Isn't he just you and me? Besides, being the proper thing, in the long run, it pays handsome dividends.—Albert B. Lord.

"WHAT CAN WE DO FOR MISSIONS?"

REV. ROBERT M. KIMBALL,
Franklin, Va.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15.

"But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost of the earth."—Acts 1:8.

These are the two great missionary texts in the Bible. The first is called the Great Commission, and in response to these words thousands have gone forth in every generation to preach the Gospel of Good News.

The second text is both a commission and a prophecy. Jesus said, you are to begin witnessing for me right where you are in Jerusalem, but that is not enough, you must carry my message into all Judea, then you must go to Samaria. That was harder, for the Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans, but the gospel was to know no barriers of race or creed, it was to be carried to all. They were to go to the most difficult and undesirable places—even unto Samaria, and then, more than that, it was to be carried to the uttermost parts of the earth.

As Jesus spoke these words and gave this challenge, it was really prophetic. He must have seen Peter on the Day of Pentecost, standing up and preaching in Jerusalem so that 3,000 souls were added to the followers of Christ. He must have seen His disciples going about "gossiping the Gospel," as one writer has put it, in the towns and countryside around Jerusalem. He must have seen the day when Peter would have the vision that would cause him to realize that the message of Jesus was not only for the Jews, but for the Gentiles. He must have seen Paul who would carry the Light of Truth on to Rome and throughout most of the then known world. He must have seen the hundreds of thousands who, coming after, would spread the Gospel to all the dark places of the earth, so that no land would be so remote that some brave soul would not dare to go there preaching the Gospel of Salvation. No doubt Jesus saw all these things as He spoke the words, "And ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

These words have just as much meaning and just as great a challenge for us today as they had almost 2,000 years ago. They are the very foundation and basis of our Church. One of the greatest responsibilities of Christians today is to spread the Gospel. The Christian Church has no other reason for being, except that it is the medium through which the Gospel of Jesus Christ is spread. Any church that has lost its missionary motive is no longer Christian, for the Christian religion is first of all a missionary religion. So long as there is a single person in the world without the saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, the Christian Church is under obligation to go out and to seek and to save that individual. A religion that has not the power to make a man uncomfortable and dissatisfied with conditions that leave millions of his fellowmen in spiritual darkness and without Christ and God, is a dead religion and unworthy of the name!

The question that I would like us to think about is: "What is our responsibility today, how can we carry on the missionary enterprise of our Church?" We can't all go out into the world as missionaries, but we have a responsibility for all those who have gone out, we must share their work, and we must do our part here at home. We should try to find specific things that we can do, and do them to the best of our ability; then our Church will be alive, it will be vital it will be Christian.

Let me suggest three things that every one of us can do for Missions:

First of all, we can pray. Do you believe in prayer? Do you honestly believe that prayer changes things? I have seldom read a letter from a missionary that did not say somewhere, "Pray for us." Missionaries believe in the power of prayer. They need our prayers. Are you familiar with the poem by Grace Noll Crowell, "Someone Had Prayed?"

The day was long, the burden I had borne Seemed heavier than I could longer bear,
And then it lifted—but I did not know
Someone had knelt in prayer.

Had taken me to God that very hour.
And asked the easing of the load, and He
In infinite compassion, had stooped down
And taken it from me.

We cannot tell how often as we pray
For some bewildered one, hurt and distressed,
The answer comes—but many times those hearts
Find sudden peace and rest.

Someone had prayed, and Faith, a reaching hand,
Took hold of God, and brought Him down that day!
So many, many hearts have need of prayer—
Oh, let us pray.

This morning I say to you, "Oh, let us pray!"

Now we must remember that prayer is never a command to God. We can't get God to do what we want Him to do, just because we pray. We can't, by our prayer, direct the activities of our missionaries. But there is one thing we can do. Do you remember after Jesus was taken up into heaven the disciples went to Jerusalem and spent seven days in prayer, praying that the Holy Spirit, or Power, would be given to them. We can pray that Power will be given to our missionaries that through them the Will of God may be carried out. And more than that, we can pray that God will show us what He would have us to do. There may be ways that we can help. Through earnest prayer that way may be opened to us. We can't put all the work on the missionaries and on God, we must do some things ourselves. To Pray, is the first thing we can all do.

In the second place, we can give. Our interest in missions and the sincerity of our desire to help spread the Gospel of Christ may be tested by our willingness to give to missions. Someone has said, "You can test the sincerity of a man's interest in anything by the way he puts his money into it."

The story is told that one day Stephen Girard was walking down Broad Street in Philadelphia and he saw a group of people standing around a man whose horse had just been shot because his leg was broken, and the crowd was sympathizing with the man because of his loss. Stephen Girard put his hand in his pocket and took a five dollar bill and gave it to the man and said, "I'm sorry five dollars worth, how sorry are you?"

Our interest in missions cannot be truly tested by the number of missionary meetings we attend, or how much we say in favor of missions, we must give to the missionary cause, and give as the Lord has prospered us. We cannot all go out and be missionaries, but we can help pay the way for those who do go. Only then can we feel that we are fulfilling the command of Christ.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Easter dresses are already coming in. Our Burlington Church ladies have sent in quite a lot of beautiful dresses. The good ladies of our Burlington Church have been very much interested in the orphanage for many years and are generally the first to send in dresses for Easter. They seem to get a real joy out of making the children happy. It certainly was nice and good of the ladies in our Burlington Church to send us the nice dresses and suits to help make our children happy at Easter. The good women throughout the Convention have been real good to us through the years in sending us many nice and beautiful dresses at Easter. It is a happy occasion to watch the children march off to Sunday school and church on Easter Sunday morning, the girls dressed up in new spring dresses and the little boys in new suits, all with a happy smile on their faces.

The repair work has already been started on the building known as "The Baby Home." The Board requested that we recondition it first. All the lower part has been painted. One new floor has been put in one of the dormitory rooms, and the floor in the other dormitory has been repaired. Two of the floors will have to be sanded down smooth and finished. New chairs have been added to the dining room, and they add much to its appearance. New furniture has been added to all the rooms. To make them more attractive we need quite a lot of pretty pictures to hang on the walls. A picture of about ten by twelve inches would add much to the beauty of the rooms, or larger ones if you would like to donate some. If all our Ladies Missionary Societies would send us two or three, how much it would help the rooms. I think it would help largely in eliminating pictures of "movie stars" by giving them something better to look at.

We have had two men putting up screen wire, which was badly needed. The tinner has been making gutter for a week, but the weather has been too cold to put it up. We hope that within a week we will have the Baby Home in a good state of repair, if only the weather will permit.

The old original building is next in the line of repairs. All three porches are badly in need of repair, which will take a lot of timber, brick, concrete, and carpenter work. This building was started in 1905 and has weathered the storms forty-one years. It has been painted a number of times on the outside and inside, and the inside has been kept in pretty good shape all the while. But the time has come when the outside calls for some work to be done, which will be done as soon as we can get the lumber to do it with.

MISSIONS.

THAT MEANS US.
The support comes, or fails to come, from us, the members of the churches called Congregational Christian. Here are some figures concerning the way we did it, according to our last printed reports, that is in 1945.

The Southern Convention asked our 33,000 members to give $12,000 to our world mission—thirty-six cents per year from each church member to save the world. Conferences apportioned amounts to be raised to the churches, and 132 of the 192 churches received an apportionment of $25.00 or less. Only ten churches were asked to give $100.00 or more to save the world outside the United States. Fourteen churches reported more than 400 members, and seven of them had more than 500 members.

But that is not the worst. Twenty-six churches gave nothing at all to save the world outside the United States. One of the larger churches was in this group, and another of the larger ones reported an average of twenty-five cents per member during a year of great prosperity and with many supposed missionary enthusiasts in its membership. Our total income for the regular foreign missionary work averaged about thirty-five cents per member.

It is no wonder that our Board cannot send the needed missionaries to save the world, and that President Truman must call for three dollars from every man, woman, and child in America to save just a little portion of the world. Suppose we had spent that much as a Church to save Greece and Turkey. Military personnel would not be needed now.

Our annual contribution of thirty-five cents per year will never save the world.

The Easter Offering will give us a chance to rise above the regular.

SUN'S PULPIT.

We can Pray and Give. What else can we do?

In the third place, we can work. We can't pay to have someone else do our work. There are some things which we as Christians can and must do ourselves. We can be missionaries right at home. We can be witnesses "In Jerusalem," so to speak.

In most communities it is doubtful if fifty per cent of the people attend Church regularly. Do you know how many persons there are in your neighborhood who ought to be in Church on Sunday morning, but are not? Do you ever ask them to come? Do you ever stop and bring their children to Sunday School? There is a missionary work to be done in every community, and each one of us could and should do something about it. Christ laid down His life for you. Give some of your time and talent and energy to share His love with others.

I don't know when, but sometime the world is going to be won for Christ. It would be a wonderful thing if each one of us could have a share in that glorious task.

There is a story told of Henry IV of France who had fought and won the battle of Arcques, and Crillon, a captain of one of the regiments, had not arrived in time. Next day Crillon appeared and Henry IV met him and said: "Go hang yourself, brave Crillon; we fought at Arcques and you were not there." God forbid that the day should come when the Captain of our Salvation should meet us and say, "We fought and won and you were not there."

How can we help the cause of Christian Missions? We can Pray, we can Give, and we can Work.

The great need today in every phase of our social, economic, and political life is understanding. It has always been so, but today the need is even greater.—Chas R. Hook.

In Memoriam

HARRELL.

In memory of a beloved member of the Waverly Congregational Christian Church, Sunday School, "Acorn" Bible Class, and the "We-Mens" Club, Cannie B. Harrell, who was for many years a most loyal and faithful member. He passed away on the morning of February 20, 1947.

Therefore be it resolved:

- 1. That while we shall miss his presence and good fellowship in the church, Sunday school, "Acorn" Bible Class, and "We-Mens" Club, we will always cherish the memory of his good fellowship, cooperation, loyal support, and faithful service.
- 2. That to his family and loved ones we tender our most sincere and heartfelt sympathies in the name of Him who will comfort them in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, another be placed on record with the church, Sunday school, the "We-Mens" Club and the "Acorn" Bible Class, and another copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

BRYANT.

On January 13, 1947, God in His infinite love and compassion took from our midst our dear friend and fellow member, Wallace Bryant. It can be said that a Godly man has been called home.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we feel keenly his absence, as his passing has left vacant a place in our church and community, and we are saddened thereby.

2. That we will long remember his fine character and strive to emulate his life so that in spirit he may live on.

3. That we extend to his family our deepest sympathy and pray God's blessing on them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one preserved in our church record and one be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

was held, was decorated with baskets of spring flowers, evergreens and red candles.

Mrs. W. A. Daughtrey, president of the society, had charge of the business session. She explained the rules of the attendance contest which commenced with the February meeting and will extend through April. Mrs. R. L. Smith was appointed captain of the Red Team, and Mrs. J. C. Philhower, assisted by Mrs. Ervin C. Wilkins, will lead the Blue Team. The Red Team led the contest by twenty-two points.

Mrs. J. C. Ramsey, Jr., spoke on the Friendly Service Projects for the year. The society voted to accept as its project, "To increase attendance at Sunday school in our community." A committee was appointed, with Mrs. John G. Truitt as chairman, to make plans for this undertaking.

A devotional program was conducted by Mrs. Ray Gordon, who also told the story of St. Valentine. Prayer was offered by Mrs. C. C. Rawles.

After the business session a valentine program was presented by Miss Ruthanna Foard. A vocal trio was sung by Shirley Richardson, Dianne Holland, and Mrs. Alice Harrell, accompanied by June Gray. Each member took part in making valentines, which were to be sent to local hospitals and used as favors on the patients' trays. Mrs. Mervin Whitley and Mrs. Roy Richardson received prizes for making the loveliest valentines. In other contests, prizes were won by Mrs. George Wells and Mrs. Marvin Whitley.

The birthday cake was cut by Mrs. W. A. Daughtrey, assisted by Mrs. J. C. Webb. The table was laid with a lace cloth and had for a centerpiece a two-tiered cake iced in red and white, surrounded by a garland of flowers, with red candles in crystal holders. An evening of fun and Christian fellowship was enjoyed by everyone.

Corresponding Secretary.

HENDERSON SOCIETY MEETS.

On February 21, the Missionary Society of our Congregational Christian Church in Henderson, N. C., was host to the city churches at the World Day of Prayer Service.

Mrs. T. A. Parks, the president of the Society, had charge of arrangement of program. Mrs. Parks used the prepared program put out by the United Council of Church Women. The different parts on the program were taken by ladies of various churches. A group of young girls also took part in the program.

One of the most outstanding parts of the program was the music. Mrs. Sally Weldon was at the organ. Mrs. Smith Young of the Methodist Church very beautifully sang: "The Perfect Prayer."

This program was well attended, and was a great inspiration to all.

LENT FOR PROTESTANTS

By REV. WILLIAM E. McCORMACK, D. D.
Springfield, Massachusetts

The Protestant Christian is a man of responsible and dependable behavior. The basis of his religious life is his own desire. He awaits no compulsion from either ecclesiastical or lay leadership. His commission to serve the high and holy cause of Christian living is from within his own soul through the promptings of the Holy Spirit. He is a volunteer!

Lent for the Protestant is not a period of negations with their emphasis upon what he shall not do. It is a period of great affirmations and positive expressions of faith.

To be sure the Lenten period is subjective. Humility and penitence are the watchwords. From the lowly ashes of Ash Wednesday through the bright lilies of Easter he is a seeker after the forgiveness of God and of men. He is not without his grateful moments for the privilege of God's grace, but he is always aware that whatever his just desserts, he does not merit anything from God. In his frailty and humanity he is the recipient of God's goodness just because God is good and cannot help being merciful and piteous to his creatures.

When a sincere man sees his own responsibility in this light he cries, "What shall I do, wretched man than I am?"

The only answer which can be discovered in history is that this penitent should join the Christian fellowship in a specific church, bear the burden of the woe among his fellows, do his part and pray for the ability to follow meekly the will of God.

There is no substitute for church membership. It is basic. However, getting a name on the roster is hardly what is meant. Membership of a church is like membership on a football team where each member is expected to do his best for the good of the whole team.

Lent is a period when we re-examine our mutual relationships critically and lovingly. Our hope must be for the greater glory of God and the more beatific service of man.

Dull, indifferent, lazy, cynical and careless Christians can hardly be expected to inherit the abiding values of Christ's fellowship. Angered, embittered, grudge-holding, non-cooperating church members need to remember that the goal of life is not the church itself but the good life. It should make no difference to them whether anyone else is Christian so long as they strive to be.

In the spirit of this honorable dealing with God let us come before Him in true humility, offer ourselves for his service and pray for his forgiveness.

A DECLARATION of the United Church of Christ in Japan

We, the people of Japan, feel deeply responsible for this great war just ended. Especially we who profess the Gospel of Peace do hereby express our profound reflection, confession and repentance. We believe, however, our Heavenly Father of infinite love and forgiveness will grant us sufficient grace to find a new way of life and the revival of faith.

Confronting the immediate and unspeakable suffering and loss of our compatriots by this war, we are fully conscious of the new meaning of the Cross pressing upon us. Whereby we have determined for the reconstruction of New Japan founded upon the Cross of Jesus, to look forward to a day of a moral order to be realized on this earth.

We pray that the All-Japan Christian Convention being held on this Day of Pentecost may become the dawn of a new day for the forward movement of our Churches, and the revival of our faith.

Through the consolidation of all Christian forces in Japan and taking upon ourselves the burden and agony of our war-stricken compatriots, we have firmly resolved to give ourselves in service to them by sharing their hunger, their bewilderment and their sorrow, and to give them hope, faith and love in Christ.

Therefore, we hereby inaugurate a three-year nation-wide evangelistic campaign for the reconstruction of New Japan, and solemnly resolve and declare:

1. To Christianize Japan based upon the Cross of Christ.
2. To do our uttermost to save eight million compatriots from the menace of impending starvation.
3. To maintain our integrity and moral standards whatever may come.

REVIVAL SERVICES AT SUFFOLK.

Rev. Victor Murchison preached twice Sunday to large congregations in the opening services of a revival meeting being held this week at the Suffolk Christian Church. In the morning he spoke on "Thy speech betrayeth thee," and held that one gave out the secret of their interest in life by their talk, urged his hearers to indicate by their speech that they were interested in Christian faith and growth both for themselves and for others, and reminded them that by one's words one is to be judged according to the scriptures.

At the evening service Mr. Murchison chose as his text the prophet Nathan's words to David: "Thou art the man," and emphasized the fact that this pre-Easter preaching mission was designed for repentance and renewal of life in all connected with the church, asserting that all of his hearers had need of repentance and renewal of their covenant of faith, and stating that only ill could result from efforts to hide ones sins from God.

At the Sunday School hour, Mr. Murchison appeared before the young people's department and appealed to them to give their lives to the Christ. At 6:30 he spoke to the youth fellowship, and brought them greetings from the young people of the Friends Meeting in Winston-Salem, N. C., where he is pastor. The young people's choir sang Olsten's anthem: "Close to the Heart of God." At the morning service the senior church choir with Mrs. J. Augustus Rawles, soloist, sang Hammond's "Awake and Sing."

Monday evening at 8:00 the Twentieth Century Baraca Class attended in a body, as also did the Junior Philathea Class on Sunday evening. Mr. Murchison led in the singing, and brought the first of his week-night messages. The public is cordially invited to attend all these services.

THE LUMINOUS TRAIL. Rufus M. Jones. Macmillan. New York, N. Y. $2.

What is a saint? Who are the saints? Are there saints in the world today? Are there Protestant saints? Read this "Luminous" book for the answers. "I am not concerned here with canonized saints," the author states. "There have always been persons in our world, a succession of them," he continues, "who have been open-windowed to God. It does not mean usually that they were born geniuses, though some times they were such. More often they belonged to the rank and file level, sinned like other persons, fumbled at the gates of life as so many do, and then came wide awake, often shaken aware by some event, and set themselves positively, definitely to travel on the rightly fashioned life." Dr. Jones reminds his readers that St. Paul called all the members of his churches "Saints," and then adds this wise observation: "He did not mean that they were perfect; they were in most cases far from it. It was a tender, gentle, hopeful word."

This exposition of sainthood includes St. Paul, St. John, Clement of Alexandra, Hugh of St. Victor, Francis of Assisi, Catherine of Siena, Hans Denck, Erasmus, and William Law. And in this noble procession of the saints, there is a chapter on Horace Bushnell, Congregational minister and educator of the last generation. Bushnell's now neglected book, "God in Christ," is described as "epoch-making," equal in importance with his "Christian Nurture."

The biographical material utilized in this book should be of interest to a wide variety of readers. Protestants who sense the fact that we have neglected the Biblical emphasis on sainthood will welcome the publication of this book. Any who enjoy the literature of devotion, the lives of the saints, the study of first-hand religious experience, will want and enjoy the book.

Rufus Jones is a trustworthy guide in the realm of the spirit. A pupil of Royce, Palmer and Santayana, a friend and student of the mystics, he has been a recognized mouth of mysticism for a generation. This beloved Quaker is known and loved by a host of readers, for he has been a prolific writer. If, perchance, there are those who are not acquainted with this spiritual seer, this is the time and the book with which to begin. Parents who have lost a child will find comfort in the tender and moving chapter on Rufus Jones' own son.

THE SELF YOU HAVE TO LIVE WITH. Winfred Rhoades. J. B. Lippincott. $2.

In 1938 a book by this author appeared, called The Self You Have to Live With, which received wide attention. After running through thirteen editions it ran out of print. So many demands continued to come to the publishers that they requested the author to provide a revised edition.

The author is an experienced and most successful counsellor of Boston. This enlarged edition is just issued from the press. I have read it, and am impressed with its greater value. It appeals to every human being, unless there be one who believes that he has already developed a personality perfect as God is perfect. It makes clear undreamed-of possibilities of personal development of any thinking person in such a world as we have today. In the words of the author, it is written to help the reader to develop "mental poise and emotional stability" in an atmosphere of confusion. It aims to put an end to worry in your life and a new sense of power for you; a creation in you of loftier desires than you now possess, and how to realize their fulfillment; to realize a wider service to your fellowmen in your community and everywhere in your world. It shows you how you can become an important element in the solution of every problem that troubles humanity today. No one could read thoughtfully this great helpful volume without becoming a more perfect and happy self to live with.

LIFE'S GOLDEN HOURS. Rev. Hobart D. McKeehan. Fleming H. Revell Co. $2.

This book of sermons and addresses by a prominent leader in the Evangelical and Reformed Church fellowship will be of great interest to the ministers and laity of the Congregational Christian Churches because of the anticipated merger of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Churches, and because of the fact that it offers an introduction to the thinking of one who worthily represents the view-point of the Evangelical and Reformed Church clergy.

I have personally known the author since my own seminary days, and have always greatly appreciated his worth as a minister because of his gracious personality, his studious habits, his ability in public address and as a writer and leader in interdenominational groups. He, along with thousands of his fellow ministers of his denomination, has long been a member of our Fellowship in thought and in spirit. All our ministers should secure this book of timely messages of insight, inspiration and challenge by this minister of this sister denomination, with which, many of us sincerely hope our denomination may soon unite.

The author has been the unusually successful pastor of the celebrated Abbey Church in Huntington, Pa., for more than a quarter of a century, and is still a young man in spirit and in years. He knows people; he knows God, and he knows the need of the times in which we are now living. Dr. Ralph W. Sockman says of the author: "Hobart D. McKeehan represents the American pulpit at its best." Here are four of the ten thought-provoking subjects presented in the volume: "Life's Golden Hours" (which gives the book its title), "The Fidelity of God," "The Sacrament of Friendship," "The Evil That Good Men Do," "Deathless Dreams," etc.

THE AFFIRMATION OF IMMORTALITY. John Haynes Holmes. The Macmillan Co. $1.50.

This book is the Ingersoll Lecture on the Immortality of Man for 1946, delivered at Harvard College. The author is the pastor of the Community Church of New York City, where he has conducted a notable ministry for forty years. Dr. Holmes states that the annual Ingersoll Lecture "given by a varied succession of men, scientists, theologians, philosophers, and ministers of religion—has sustained, through more than a half century, a continuous discussion of the great problem of death and life. If it has not solved this problem, it has clarified it, and brought conviction to many minds." The present lecture does precisely this. The immortal hope is interpreted as an aspect of spirituality which fits human nature and the universe: "It is an answer to the challenge of the outward as well as of inward realities of being." Here is a book to conclude and climax one's Lenten reading.

SENESCENCE AND STEWARDSHIP.

People naturally expect to find articles on stewardship in the church press. It is a bit unusual to find such an article in the daily press. Here is the story of a man, seventy-eight years old, who exercises a vigorous and lucrative stewardship. The story of George M. Bartley, steward by precept and example, has found its way into the secular press.

Ten years ago, when dollars came harder and lasted longer, the congregation of the McAllister Presbyterian Church in Covington, West Virginia, was asked to collect waste paper. The paper was to be sold and the proceeds used to build a new wing on the church. The congregation responded enthusiastically and, in time, the church had its new addition.

The collection by the congregation ceased long ago, except for George Bartley. He continues his daily tour of Covington. Through the years he has built up a string of customers, among them many housewives who save their newspapers and magazines. All his daylight time when he is not working his shift in the pulp mill is spent collecting paper. He is not content to give a tenth of the proceeds; the entire amount goes to the church.

Reports indicate that in nine months of the current fiscal year Mr. Bartley's paper collections have netted the church $1,119.95. That is an average of $125 per month. It took fifty-five tons, two hundred and ninety pounds of paper to raise that much money. His philosophy, or theology, is found in the simple statement: "People ought to live their religion instead of talking it."

Here is convincing evidence that old age does not exhaust the possibilities of stewardship. Every member of our church, both young and old, should find some way of increasing his stewardship resources. Lent is the time to begin this new adventure in stewardship.

STUDENTS OF CHURCH UNION.

The current, widespread study of church union should have a salutary influence on Protestantism. Hitherto our compartmentalized Protestantism has given us exceedingly narrow horizons. Now the contemporary Children of Israel, having wandered too long in the wilderness of separation and isolation, are moving resolutely toward a United Land of Promise.

The last issue of the Chicago Theological Seminary Register is devoted to the study of the E. & R. Merger. Articles for and against the Merger are published. Professor Wilhelm Panck rightly insists that the revised "Basis of Union" should be studied in detail by all churches and individual church members before they vote on the proposed union. He adds that "It should be made the subject of intensive discussion in local churches, associations, and conferences. These studies and discussions should be inspired by certain concerns to which the document specifically alludes but which it does not explain in detail because it presupposes them." The ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference will hear both sides of the question presented at their June meeting.

Bishop Henry K. Sherrill has intimated the possibility of union of the Episcopal and Methodist Churches. The two major groups of Presbyterians—split by issues of the Civil War—are renewing their efforts to effect a union of their 8,500,000 members. A joint committee has been meeting this month in Philadelphia and has worked out an agreement which will be recommended to general assemblies of the Northern and Southern branches of the Church.

Dr. Truman B. Douglass introduced a resolution at the Grinnell Council which petitioned the Federal Council to call "a plenary conference of representatives of American churches to consider the immediate possibility of closer unity." Two months after this resolution was passed, the Disciples of Christ joined in the overture. In response to this action, the Federal Council has formerly issued invitations to all denominations that are related to the Federal Council to participate in such a convocation. The Christian Century states editorially that "It will be evident at once that when so many as the minimal number of five or six denominations accept the Federal Council's invitation, the holding of such a plenary conference will prove to be the most history of non-Roman Christianity in this country."

HOLLYWOOD'S BEST.

"The Best Years of Our Lives," a film produced by Samuel Goldwyn, has accumulated nine Academy Awards, has been named the best picture of the year by New York Film Critics and by the two separate organizations of the Foreign Correspondent's Association in New York and Los Angeles, and it has received the Page One Award of the New York Newspaper Guild. The screen play was written by Robert Sherwood as an adaptation of MacKinlay Kantor's novel.

Press reports indicate that the acclaim is "unanimous." That may be true officially, but here is one protest against the overwhelming verdict. Hollywood's and America's best is one which includes a divorce and constant drinking. To our youngsters and to the world this acclaimed as "Our Best." What a disappointment!

This does not mean that the picture is without its good points. The playing of Harold Russell, an ex-paratrooper, who lost both hands and acquired considerable skill in the use of his hook, is praiseworthy. The rest is mediocre—for almost three hours!

No new light is thrown on the problems of rehabilitation. Hollywood's best will be accepted naively by the masses, but it unsatisfactory from a religious point of view. The popular standards of America are decadent. The offering of 1946 leaves much to be desired. The prospect for 1947 is not assuring. Education is sacrificed on the altar of entertainment.

GOOD FRIDAY

By ALBERT W. PALMER

Moderator of the General Council

Good Friday is the day on which all Christendom remembers the crucifixion of our Lord. Why call it Good Friday? Since it was a day so fraught with pain and suffering, the climax of betrayal and the ruthless and unscrupulous plotting of evil men, why not call it Bad Friday? And yet we call it Good Friday because, whatever our theological explanation may be, (and there are many theories about it), all Christians are united in believing that somehow, under the providence of God, good did come out of all that suffering and evil, that Jesus' death upon the cross does, in some way, contribute to our salvation as individuals and to the salvation of the world.

And so, all over the world men will look to that heroic figure on the cross and say, in one language or another: "In the cross of Christ, I glory towering o'er the wrecks of time," or "He bore his sufferings, he'll help me to bear mine."

There was a life situation for you! Consider what the crucifixion meant to Jesus, and what he did about it. Too much of the preaching and theologizing about the cross has been from the viewpoint that what happened on Calvary was a forensic transaction, even a sort of bargain, by which Jesus endured so much suffering in order to pay for men's sins and thus to change God's attitude toward men and make him willing to forgive. That conception I would like to replace by what I feel is a very much better and more valuable one. I think Jesus died on the cross not to change God's mind but to reveal it. He died not to change God's mind but to change ours. God has always been willing to forgive. He didn't need any sacrifice on Calvary to change Him from a stern, implacable Judge into a loving Father. The trouble has never been with God, but with us. We are the ones who need to look at the cross and have our minds changed by that tragic spectacle.

Jesus on the cross met one of the great universal life situations common to all of us—the situation of suffering, defeat, betrayal, neglect, frustration, misunderstanding, death. As Frederick Lawrence Knowles, the poet, has said:

Our crosses are hewn from different trees
But we all must have our Calvaries.
Each climbs the hill from a different side;
But we all go up to be crucified.

One of the supreme questions in determining our destiny is: "What do you do with a life situation like that? How do you react to suffering, defeat, betrayal, neglect, frustration, misunderstanding, death?"

And Jesus can actually help us here. He can become our savior, not by some mysterious transaction in the skies by which so much blood is bartered with God for so much forgiveness, but by the definite, practical, vital help that comes from his example as one who was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," and who himself has trod the straight hard pathway of defeat and suffering.

Now, how did Jesus actually meet this dark life situation in his supreme hour on the cross? Perhaps, as we pause reverently to contemplate his sufferings, we can learn better how to bear our own.

This is important because suffering, sorrow and defeat can wreck our lives and involve others in the wreckage, unless we learn how to meet them courageously. If your lesser Calvary leaves you bitter, morose, gloomy, resentful, spiritless and shattered in hope and courage, then your soul will suffer damage, and also the souls of others with whom your life inevitably is linked. If, on the other hand, we can look at the cross and learn from Jesus how to meet and overcome life's tragedies we shall be saved, and find light still shining on our darkened pathway.

Jesus did three things on the cross, three things that we, and all the world, also must learn to do if we are to accept our crosses and follow him.

1. First of all, he forgave! Even as the nails pierced his hands, he cried out: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

"It didn't do any good," you may say, "they only drove the nails the harder." Yes, but by it Jesus maintained the integrity of his own soul and kept himself from bitterness. And it might save the world if it could induce more of us to drop our hatreds and resentments, our remembered injuries and festering grievances, and just forgive.

It is a very dangerous thing to any one's soul to cherish a sense of having been wronged. An unforgiven injury may warp one's whole personality. A desire to punish the offender and achieve revenge may act like a subtle spiritual poison. It may even have grave physical reactions upon one's bodily health.

On the other hand, to forgive, to meet injury and wrong with patient understanding, forbearance and love, does something indescribably beautiful to the soul. This was one of the secrets of the greatness of Abraham Lincoln. As someone has said of him: "The heart of Abraham Lincoln was large enough to take in all mankind—but there was no room in it for the memory of a wrong."

Someone may say, almost with a sour, "Well, it's plain you have never suffered as I have." My friend, we all suffer. And within such experience as I have had, and out of my experience of forty years as a minister sharing the life problems of all sorts of people, I know that forgiveness is always a blessing and a sacrament and that hidden grievances and unforgiven injuries always blight the soul.

Or someone else may say: "I don't hate any one person. I just feel disillusioned about life itself. I feel the universe hasn't given me a square deal."

May I answer this by quoting one of the wisest paragraphs I know from the pen of Dr. James Gordon Gilkey, a Congregational pastor in Springfield, Mass. Dr. Gilkey says: "Make a deliberate effort to drop your grudges. Grudges against people, and grudges against life itself—all of them must be quietly and resolutely put aside. Until this is done, there will be a constant and almost fatal strain within the personality. This undoubtedly explains why Jesus, the Master of the human soul, laid such emphasis on the simple duty of forgiveness. He knew human nature well enough to realize that, as long as a trace of personal resentment remains in a man's heart, there is a possibility of secret infection and outward defeat. There must be literally no limit to forgiveness. No one can explain your misfortunes. No one can tell you why they came on you rather than on someone else. Those questions belong to the larger mystery of life itself, a mystery no one has ever solved. Suppose you do the natural thing. Suppose you bear a personal grudge against existence. That inward bitterness will infect your home, your children and everyone who comes in contact with you. That is not the solution of your problem. What is? Jesus found the way to live. Drop your grudges. Forgive everything and everybody. Forgive life itself. As soon as you do that, the new days of quietness and power will begin."

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference really have a good time at their monthly meetings. Most of them come early in order to enjoy the handshakes and greetings, and they are really joyous. As different as we are, something about the spirit of group gets ahold of us, and whether we agree on polity, theology, or world problems we all like each other and that in itself makes us happy. Dr. I. W. Johnson, and Rev. R. E. Brittle, and Rev. Herbert G. Council, Jr., and Rev. Jesse M. Roberts, and Rev. Carroll H. Beale, belong here. They were born and reared in Eastern Virginia, but they have had the Revs. Frank Morgan, and O. D. Poythress, and H. S. Harcastle, and Robert Lee House with them so long that they, too, seem a part of the Eastern Virginia pattern. Five of the above have been serving in this Conference more than a quarter of a century.

Newest in our fellowship is the Rev. Shannon C. Morgan, who has completed his theological course at Duke University, and is serving the Windsor - Isle of Wight - Mt. Carmel-Antioch pastorate. The Rev. M. A. Carson is assisting Dr. Frank H. Lewis at Shelton Memorial in Portsmouth and looks toward being received into full ministerial fellowship at the next session of Conference. Then there are two retired former Eastern Virginia pastors—Dr. N. G. Newman, and Rev. L. L. Lassiter—both born and reared in the bounds of this Conference.

Then there is that Holland combination—Dr. Will B. O'Neill (Irish and proud of it—and sometimes we are!), and Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, with his several years of experience as a chaplain in the army. And there are Rev. D. D. Nash (only minister in our Conference with "D. D." before his name!) and the Rev. Andrew P. Slabey, who speaks three languages (and who of us who would not like to at times!), the one serving at Hopewell, and the other at Disputanta, and the Rev. J. E. McCauley at Waverly. And there are Revs. J. Everette Neese and M. E. Taylor, the one in Ocean View and the other at Little Creek. And the dignified president of our Ministers' Association is the Rev. Ben H. Watkins, of Great Bridge, and Rev. Peter Young, scholarly pastor of the Christian Temple, and "Dick" and Dorothy Jackson are unseen but graciously felt partners in our team (and in the whole Southern Convention and General Council teams).

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN would see a jolly, goodly group of real friends if they could attend one of our monthly meetings. They would feel the sweet influence of a minister leading his fellow ministers in a lovely worship service; and they would hear an inspiring address on some practical phase of our work delivered by someone of the group selected for that purpose. Then they laugh and eat together. And it is good, for everyone of those pastors will go back to his work with the feeling that somebody else cares.

A MESSAGE FROM THE SURVEY COMMITTEE OF THE GENERAL COUNCIL.

The Survey Committee, enlarged by the presence of additional Conference superintendents, spent Wednesday and Thursday, February 5 and 6, in a careful study of the Post-war Emergency Program to date. We made some adjustments within the budget so as to meet critical emergency needs that have developed since the program was first formulated. We considered seriously enlarging the budget, but finally voted to do this which we have now undertaken first, then move on to other things.

We now strongly re-affirm the whole purpose underlying the Post-war Emergency Program. We believe that the basic methods now employed should be maintained and enhanced.

We call upon our ministers, churches, conference superintendents and board members to cooperate fully in the promotional plans that have been formulated to the end that not one single church fail to participate strongly and with due measure of sacrifice. In particular we urge each minister to present to his people the Sacrificial Giving Plan for gifts to be administered through the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction, and to conduct this year a re-vitalized Every Member Canvass for the Increased Apportionment Giving, to be administered through our Boards and our Conferences; then to supplement these with special offerings and individual gifts.

But the needs confronting our Boards are so compelling and so urgent that it is not enough for us merely to attain our present goal of approximately six and one-quarter million dollars. We are deeply impressed with the inadequacy of our budget to meet the many strategic post-war opportunities that are before us as a denomination. We need to over subscribe our goal quickly so that we can then turn our attention to other pressing needs awaiting us.

If in this year 1947, we who are adult members of the Congregational Christian Churches could each contribute an extra $10 over and above all other giving, we could underwrite this total undertaking in this one year. These gifts should be clearly marked for "Postwar Emergency Program" and be sent in to the Conference office of the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction. Our young people through Pilgrim Fellowship have undertaken to increase their gifts in 1947 and 1948 by 900%. Cannot we match their faith and their zeal in building a more Christian world for our children and children's children?

LENT OR LUXURY?

With the Lenten Season traditionally one of sacrifice among Christians, these weeks should see increased interest in the work of overseas relief throughout the state and the nation, Rev. Henry Lee Robison, executive secretary of the Virginia Council of Churches, declared in announcing the totals of relief goods sent through Church World Service from Virginia during February—44,465 pounds of relief materials, mostly clothing, shoes and bedding were collected in the state and shipped or trucked to the Church World Service Center at New Windsor, Md.

Discussing the custom of foregoing small luxuries during Lent, Mr. Robison reminded Virginians that the price of these luxuries can mean life to someone abroad. When you give up, he urged, give. Save the dimes, nickels, and quarters you don't spend on yourself and give them to relieve the hunger, cold and illness of helpless people in war torn lands abroad. Send your contributions to your own church headquarters morked for overseas relief.

Although spring is drawing nearer, the cold in Europe and Asia continues, Mr. Robison observed, and will go on for some time after warm weather has reached the United States. The need for clothing, shoes, (Continued on page 7.)

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

WHICH ONE OR HOW MANY?

A few days ago I received a letter from a friend who is in a professional position asking if I would please send her the names and addresses of a limited number of Elon College alumni who had made or are making outstanding contributions to Church and State. A request of this kind instantly brings before you those who were good students in college and who have made worthwhile records out in life.

Elon College has more than 10,000 alumni. We do not have the correct addresses of all but we do have their names. They have been here for one semester or more. Some made good records in college and some not so good. That is to be expected. Who are the most outstanding alumni, or who is the most outstanding alumnus of Elon College, is an arresting question—a question that is difficult to answer. You could turn to the records and determine the highest marks that have been made by students in college but to ascertain who has made the most outstanding record after leaving college is an entirely different question.

It was necessary for me to answer this question. I am afraid that I “stalled” for time. I simply did not know. As I thought, a great sea of faces stood out before me. I was more puzzled than ever. I simply jotted down a few names and let it go at that.

I am glad that is difficult to answer such a question. If it were otherwise, it would be a reflection on the college and the work it does. It is the business of the college to take good students and make them better students. It is the business of the college to take poor students and make good ones out of them. It might not be a reflection on the college to fail in the first instance, but it certainly would be a reflection to fail in the second. It is the business of Elon College to educate—not simply to guide in the processes of acquiring an education but to educate an individual who is not able to educate himself.

When you have an individual student with imagination and abilities and you arouse that imagination and stir up his abilities, there is no way of telling what that individual will do; no way to determine the extent of the impact that individual will make on the society of his day. No college can give an individual what he hasn’t got, but any college should help him to discover what he has and direct him in the wise uses of his abilities.

I trust that the students in Elon College will make it more and more difficult for me or any one else to select the one who has made the most outstanding contribution to his day and generation. It is certainly a worthy ambition for any student to aspire to such achievements in college that in the field of scholarship, he shall stand out and above all others, but somebody else makes the task more difficult when he has the same ambition. Competition in scholarship makes the task more pressing and more interesting.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Sunday, March 30, is the fifth Sunday. It is the plan of the Convention to have all Sunday schools to receive an offering for the college on each fifth Sunday. Will your Sunday school cooperate in this plan? Will you following the instructions of our Convention? If you will, perhaps your neighboring Sunday school would follow your example and someone else will follow the example set by your neighbor, and on and on until all of our Sunday schools join in this plan of support for our college. It means but little to you as an individual, and not much more to your Sunday school as an individual school, to receive and forward this contribution. It will mean a very great deal to the college if all of our Sunday schools would join their contributions in the support of this Convention enterprise. It is the college’s purpose to serve the church and to serve it well. It can serve the church better if the church will be generous in its support. It is impossible to over-emphasize the necessity of contributing to the college at this particular time. Expenses are high. It is costly to operate an institution of the size and proportion of Elon College. It needs every dollar of assistance that it is possible to receive. Your school will render a highly significant service if you will receive a generous contribution for the college and forward the same.

We have been doing wonderfully well this year. Let’s keep it up. We can beat last week’s record if all of our Sunday schools will join in this wise plan given to the churches by the Convention years ago. The college anticipates your helpful cooperation and appreciates your support from week to week.

bedding, and food will be even greater than it has been all through the winter as food supplies shrink to nothing, and garments worn steadily through the winter become merely rags.

Proof of the continuing need abroad comes in hundreds of letters from overseas, Mr. Robison stated. A Hungarian pastor describes how he and his family tried to save a few of their possessions from invading armies. “From the horror of the war, God saved us. We buried our bed linens and our clothes that we might save it, but the moist earth rotted them. In a poor country we haven’t money, therefore, we couldn’t buy any new. My three children learn far away from the family, two at the University and one at the gymnasium. I can’t furnish them with clothes. The sheets on our beds have become rags. I never asked for help, but now I must. . . .” Gifts to people like this have a spiritual as well as a material value, Mr. Robison said. The mother of four children who received clothing through Church World Service concludes her letter of thanks with these words: “I want you to accept my sincere gratitude. . . . More however than these wonderful gifts, has pleased me the fact that the church has taken the first step and crossed the barrier of past events.”

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

Shaowu (at last),
February 24, 1947.

Dear Friends:

Did you get our letter, written while we were staying with the British missionary in Kieng-yang (or Chien-yang)? You remember we were waiting for a bridge to be repaired. It was last Thursday morning (February 20) that we finally started—went a ways, and came to another bridge which was washed out just the night before! The two UNRRA drivers who'd taken Ed up, came through Chien-yang and told our men we couldn't get through—because they had just barely made it across that bridge. The last truck had almost gone down with it! Later Ed told us they had a similar experience on the way up to Shaowu. They had just barely made it over that big bridge whose repairing we had had to wait for. After they had crossed that one, it completely gave way. Ed, who had walked across, watched it sway and shake as the trucks came over!

Word has just come that another bridge is out. This time the passengers had not taken the precaution of walking across. Two students were killed and a good many people were injured. Such is the condition of transportation in a country worn out by war and civil strife. This road is one of the best, too.

Now, back to that bridge which stopped us. We were the first on our side to be in the waiting line. The workmen said it'd be finished by about 3:00 P. M. With all those hours to kill, we did right well. First, we warmed up (it was not raining) by gathering sword grass (tall, sort of bullrush, thick on roadsides) and bits of wood for a fire. The fire smoked merrily away (everything was damp or green) and now and then became the social center for other folk arriving on later bus-trucks. Eating our picnic lunch and talking passed time, too.

We did get going around 3:00 P. M., following two trucks of the military, who, being privileged characters, went first. Across the bridge they rumbled, most of the passengers walking. We were glad not to go first, for we had seen the primitive tools and the makeshift way in which the bridge had been fixed. Our truck make it safely, too; but our troubles were not over. The road was utterly bad. At the ferrying place, where two boatmen poled us across, there was much talk of the road being so terrible as to prevent our reaching Shaowu before dark. (The total distance between Chien-yang and Shaowu is only about fifty-three miles.) But our truck waddled on, Leona and I walking over the first and worst piece of road. We stopped in a most uninviting village to see about spending the night but the natives there thought we could make Shaowu. One of the military trucks coming by just then, beckoned us on. So we went, stopping now and then for our assistant driver to see if certain mud-holes were too deep for passage. Shaowu was getting nearer and our driver speeded up a bit—the road seemed better. Across another narrow bridge we rattled as daylight began to fade.

Suddenly the driver exclaimed something and of all his excited talk, I got the main word, for we'd heard it before about so many bridges. The word was "hwaile," broken. But I know we were already over the bridge. The helper exclaimed and reached for the steering wheel, too, but we were already leaving the road and ploughing into that sword grass at the side. In that brief moment I noted the grass was on flat solid ground, not hiding a precipitous embankment as it often does; and I realized that should we be turned over, it wouldn't be too bad an accident, though I dreaded being crushed by our heavy freight. Miraculously enough, we rolled on, upright, and came to a stop half into a sort of path—no better place could we have chosen for the steering apparatus to give out! One minute sooner and we would have crashed off the bridge and made a big drop into the river below.

We were within two miles of Shaowu; so while our men started repairs, Leona and Swei Yin walked into town, arriving just after our welcomers, who had been waiting all day, had given up and started for home. (They had prepared to welcome us each day for four days, but this day especially, for they had received Miss Bell's wire from Chien-yang.) The people whom Leona had questioned, yelled into the darkness and called back the welcoming committee. And so it was that after our bus got going again, we met a flashlight—Ed and the hospital coolie picked them up and then met the rest, farther along the road. We were transferred to another welcomer's truck midst fire-crackers and cries of welcome, then finished the brief ride to the river's edge, where once was a bridge to Shaowu. A few dim lights twinkling in the distance were all we could see of our future home. Hoarse shouts soon brought some boatmen toward us.

Dick in halting Chinese, asked Pastor Huang to lead us in prayer and there we knelt in the darkness, at last in touch with Shaowu, at last on Shaowu soil.

With boatmen poling us across the river we could see a Chinese lantern and torches on the shore. They were the lights of the coolies coming to do business for us—unloading the truck and taking the stuff to our hospital. Not many people were out as we first walked the streets of Shaowu, little could be seen; but through the city gate we went—an old bound-footed little Chinese woman at my side and a westernized Chinese gentleman lighting our way with his bundle of oiled bamboo stick torches. Several turns and much careful walking on uneven stones, and then a roofed gate, a burst of fireworks and we were there—the Shaowu Christian Hospital, our first home in China. Our own springs and mattresses Ed had had set up for us; so it was home,

WE HAVE A JOB TO DO

Recent studies on this page indicate that we have a big job to do for Christ and the Church both in the United States and throughout the world.

Struggling churches within our midst need help. New communities need churches. Human needs all over the world stagger our imaginations. Perhaps it has never dawned on us that there are sixteen people in non-Christian (heathen) countries for every one of our church members who must depend upon us for the message of Christ. That means about 430,000 for the Southern Convention. Those non-Christians will never hear the Gospel unless we do something about it, for other Protestant groups have their own areas in which to work.

One of our jobs seems to be to enlist the active cooperation of the present membership of our churches. But more of this later.

ONE CHURCH IS WORKING.

On the desk by me as I write is a little home-made booklet with three pictures on the front cover. At the top of the page are these words: "Our Missionaries," and at the bottom are these: Congregational Christian Church, Reidsville, N. C.

While the Reverend J. L. Neese served that church he led the people in purchasing a parsonage next door to the church and in greatly enlarging the church building. By the time that was completed the people had learned to give rather freely. The next step, under the leadership of the present pastor, was to transfer this liberality to the mission field. The next item shows something of how successfully this has been done.

THAT IS NOT ALL.

The Reidsville Church with 563 members (last printed report) pays the total expenses of its three missionaries. In addition I happen to know that special gifts have been sent to numerous places around the world by groups in this group. These are the commissioned and supported missionaries of the church, but the church people do not limit themselves in their missionary giving to these three alone. The church pays its Conference Apportionment for Missions as requested, and the missionary societies join with societies elsewhere in the work done by women and young people. The Shaowu Mission received its Thank Offering.

SUPPOSE WE TRIED.

At the risk of odious comparisons it may be well for us to consider what could be done if other churches would match the good works of Reidsville.

There are five churches in the Convention that are larger than Reidsville—one of them almost three times as large. If those churches supported missionaries like Reidsville does, they would have twenty-four missionaries on the field.

Reidsville has one missionary for every 187 church members. We have fifty-one churches with 200 or more members. Suppose they each had a missionary working for them among the needy peoples of the earth. What a company of workers we could have!

:: :: ::

WHAT WOULD HAPPEN?

If other churches would really try to do the missionary job, what would happen? Who knows?

What happened in Reidsville is that they have about a dozen people studying for the ministry or some form of Christian work; and that they are preparing to enlarge their church to accommodate the people who wish to worship and work there.

Could it be that the reason so many of our churches need financial help is that they have failed to do their missionary job and are therefore too poor to care for their own churches? It is worth thinking about. Pastors, deacons, treasurers, finance committees, Sunday school workers and all the rest may profitably consider this before presenting the claims of the Missionary Offering at Easter.

Who are the heathen, those who never heard of Christ? or those who from childhood have known of Christmas and Easter but have never sent a single missionary to tell others of this blessed hope?

:: :: ::

WE HAVE PROMISED.

Richard and Dorothy Jackson are in China now. Angie Crew is in Japan, or will be very soon. We know them. We love them. We have promised them support. We have promised to support the entire Shaowu Mission, which now includes a nurse and a doctor in addition to the minister and his wife. At our invitation they have gone, and are now at work. We have promised!

The Easter Offering will not do for an entire year, but it can express our abundance of joy and our willingness to share.

NO. 13!

Thirteen has been an auspicious number for the Christian Colleges in China.

There are 13 Christian Colleges, and they have an enrollment of 13,000 students who are taught by 1,300 teachers. The colleges have produced 13% of all the college graduates in China, and are now serving 13% of the college students in that country. They are supported by 13 Protestant mission boards in the United States and Canada. Before the war the colleges' plants were valued at thirteen million dollars (US).

There are three modes of bearing the ills of life: by indifference, which is the most common; by philosophy, which is the most ostentatious; and by religion, which is the most effectual.—Colton.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

During Lent many ministers have Pastor's Class for the children of their churches. In these classes boys and girls learn about their churches. They learn the meaning of church membership or the duties and privileges of those who join the fellowship of the church. They are told about the different services which are held in the church and the meaning of those services. They study their church building and its symbols: the communion table; the cross; the Bible; the baptismal font; the candles; the pulpit and lectern. They get to know and appreciate their pastor.

When I was girl and attended a country church I never had the privilege of attending such a class. Our church had morning worship service once a month. The minister was an elderly man and his sermon was preached to the adults. I loved the singing part of the services. I listened to the minister as my feet dangled a few inches from the floor. My mother and father usually got a lot of questions from us children on our two-mile walk back to home after church. We wanted to know what the minister had meant by such and such a word or sentence.

When I was six years old a wonderful thing happened. A new young minister was sent to our church to be its pastor. During the intermission between Sunday School and church while our parents were talking on the outside of the church this minister called us children together in the front pews of the church. He asked our names. He told us stories. He had us sing the songs that we had learned in Sunday school. He taught us the words and tunes of new songs. Then after the morning service of worship started he always had us children stand up and sing a song; give a prayer; or a unison reading from the Psalms. We children all loved this young minister who took time to get to know us and let us come to know him. This made us take a new interest in our church so that we wanted to attend no matter how bad the weather got. I have never ceased to be interested in and to love the church since that time. I joined the church when I was twelve years old and have been a member of some church ever since. When I have moved to a new home, I've always hunted up some church that I could work and worship in. The happiest times of my life have been spent with church people at church programs, camps, rallies, conferences, retreats and services. If I could live my life over I would be the same way about the church.

Long years ago many children followed Christ, the Head of our Christian Church, through the gates of a great city. They never forgot him as long as they lived. They became the first church members and great Bible scholars think that they are the ones who gave the church such great help in the terrible days of its persecution. Many of them died for the church and its faith.

On this Palm Sunday will you not think of your church and its need? If you haven't joined the church yet, will you try to be one of those followers of Christ who will join his church this Easter Sunday. Boys and girls, the church needs you, but just as greatly do you need the church!

CHILDREN LOVE PICTURES.

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I was in the yard of our large apartment building, hanging some clothes on the line, when Mrs. Stevens, my neighbor, came out to speak to me.

"Your little Teddy gave me quite a surprise this morning," she said, smiling, but evidently rather impressed. "It was the first time he'd been in my living room. He looked up at a picture and said, 'That's The Blue Boy.' Imagine a five-year-old knowing the name of that painting!"

It really was not remarkable at all; Teddy was well acquainted with the picture. Mrs. Stevens would not have been surprised if on looking at a newspaper comic strip he had said, "That's Donald Duck." Mrs. Stevens has three children and I have two. We have often gained mutual benefit from discussing ways and means in helping our "twigs" to grow in the right direction, so I said, "Would you like to come to our apartment and see what I do with regard to pictures?"

She came that afternoon, and I showed her my collection and told her all about it. One of the magazines which we take had published copies of pictures by great masters, and I had saved them together with reproductions of famous pictures, statues and buildings, which had come into our home in connection with advertisements. Besides this, I had purchased from the Art Institute, for a few cents each, a number of charmingly-colored prints of well-known paintings. I found, too, that firms often advertise copies of art treasures in school magazines, for the use of teachers.

I showed Mrs. Stevens that when not in use I kept these pictures in a home-made portfolio. This was constructed of two large oblongs of cardboard hinged together with stout tape. In the middle of the front edges I had punched holes and had drawn through them lengths of the tape, so as to be able to tie the portfolio when it was closed. In this way the pictures were kept clean and unwrinkled.

However, had they remained always in the portfolio, they would seldom have been seen. Having realized this, I had bought several sizes of frames at the ten-cent store and had hung some of the pictures in the children's room, in the dining room, and in the living room. Almost every week I changed the pictures in these frames. The Blue Boy in colors had hung in front of Teddy as he had dressed and undressed for at least seven days. But it was not the first good painting with which he had become acquainted. Romney's groups of children had attracted him first, and after that several animal pictures.

At the library I had found books on famous artists and often ferreted out stories and anecdotes that would lend additional interest to the pictures. Incidentally, I had learned a lot myself. I had learned to recognize beauty in line, form, color, and composition. I could not pass all of this on to a five-year-old child, of course, but I knew my boy was gaining impressions of beauty that would stay with him all his life and make that life broader and happier.

"If you had asked Teddy some questions about your Blue Boy," I said to Mrs. Stevens, "I think he would probably have told you that The Blue Boy wasn't really a rich boy, but that he was the son of poor parents and his handsome clothing was borrowed.

"Here is Rosa Bonheur's Horse Fair," I continued. "I told Teddy how farmers still take their horses to the fair, to show them off—and sometimes to sell them."

Mrs. Stevens interrupted me. "I have a large, illustrated book with many stories and artists in it. It's been standing in the bookcase, doing

ROWLAND MEMORIAL LIBRARY.

The following is an address given by Mrs. F. C. Lester at the Annual Christmas Party of the Woman's Auxiliary, First Church, Greensboro, N. C. The Christmas offering, taken annually at this service and always designated for some special project (at home or abroad) was this year given in memory of Mrs. C. H. Rowland and will be used in setting up a library in her Sunday School. We can think of nothing more fitting to honor her memory than to help continue the work of training for Christian leaders the Sunday school children whom she loved and who always came first in her life.

BOOKS ARE FRIENDS.

Books and Christmas are inevitably connected in our minds. Were it not for the Book of books we would probably have no record of the birth of the Christ Child and so no Christmas to celebrate. In many of your homes, as in ours, the reading of a favorite story, such as Dicken's Christmas Carol, is a traditional part of the celebration of Christmas. Then there are books as gifts, gifts which mean much when they are chosen to fit ones especial interest by a loved one or friend. Books, then, do have a very real connection with Christmas.

At this Christmas season as we enjoy fellowship with each other here, there is one whose presence we miss. As we make our gifts for our loved ones and friends, we want to remember her, too. Our gifts in remembrance of her will be used to buy books for a library for your church—books at which little children will gaze in awe and wonder as they get their first glimpses of the big world in which they live—books which will thrill older children with their tales of heroes past and present—books which will inspire young people to dream and build—books which will help adults continue the learning process—books which will help all of you as you seek to find the good, the true, and the beautiful.

Poets have used words to describe books which I think may also be used to describe Bertie Graham Rowland.

Books are Keys.—They are keys which unlock doors of understanding, open doors which lead to wisdom and knowledge. Just so, I think, she was a key. She unlocked doors for her children, for her Sunday school pupils, for her friends. For many she was the key which opened doors of tolerance in the field of race relations. For she was the key which opened doors of friendliness and service, showing them how they could save themselves through service to others. For others she was the key which opened doors of love and understanding which changed their whole outlook on life.

Books are Gates.—Books are gates which open wide and allow one to travel all over the whole wide world. They are gates which open up new worlds of wonder and of awe. Just so, I think, she was a gate. Her interest in missions was a gate through which many passed to find a world peopled with human beings like themselves who were striving to discover God. She was a gate which opened for many a new world of the spirit. She was a gate which was always open for a friendly counsel and words of cheer.

Books are Paths.—They are paths which upward lead. They guide us into new realms of thought and action. Just so, I think, she was a path. She was a path which upward led to God and the Kingdom of Heaven. She was the path which led many to do things which they never dreamed they could do. She was a path of encouragement and love which led her friends in the right direction.

Books are Friends.—When we are discouraged, we can read a book and be comforted. When we are in need of cheer, we can find it in a book. Familiar books are old friends which we love. Just so, I think, she was a friend. Not one who loved you only in moments of success, but one who gave of herself to others that they might be better for having known her. All of you know that she was your friend. You could go to her with problems and discouragements, in times of trouble and in times of joy, and you could depend upon her to speak the words you needed. Yes, she was a friend.

Books are Legacies.—In them is gathered all the wisdom of the ages. Through them the treasures of all the world are preserved and handed down to others. Just so, I think, she gave us a legacy. Her legacy was not in the form of money, but in the form of ideals and ideas, of a life of service, of a spirit which will never die. None of us will forget the kind deeds, the friendly words, the gracious spirit which she left as a legacy to us, her friends.

And so, it seems very fitting that in honoring her we should give books to the church which she loved and served, books which will bring to succeeding generations the blessing of her memory and the wisdom of the ages.

As we bring our gifts to the altar, let us think of these words: "This do in remembrance of her."

FOR THE CHILDREN.

nobody any good. I'm going to begin making a collection of pictures right away. I'll show you the ones I choose, and perhaps you'll tell me some of your stories about them—and I should like to lend you my book."

Art appreciation may be too pretentious a name for what Mrs. Stevens and I are teaching, but I feel that as a result of our efforts, our children have, without doubt, already taken their first steps in that direction.

PRAYER.

Dear God, help us to see our church as you see it. Give us the courage to help it and you in these dark days. Help us to tell others about the church and what it means to us. May we join that host of loyal members who have marched with thy mercy, love and truth down through the ages. In the name of Christ, we pray. Amen.

In Memoriam

SHAW.

We, the members of Concord Congregational Christian Church, wish to pay tribute to the memory of Brother Thomas L. Shaw, who departed this life March 26, 1945.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in the death of Brother Shaw our church has lost a faithful member, his family a loving father, his community a good neighbor.

2. That we extend our sincere sympathy to his family, and pray God's blessings upon them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" and one kept on the record of our church.

THE RISEN LORD AND HIS DISCIPLES.

LESSON I—APRIL 6, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the first fruits of them that slept.—I Corinthians 15:20.

LESSON: John 19:38-42; 20:21.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Corinthians 15:12-19.

The Larger Issue at Stake.

When the friends of Jesus took his body, hurriedly prepared it for burial, and lovingly laid it in the tomb, they unknowingly posed a critical issue. In a sense they were putting the universe to a crucial and critical test. It was more than a question of whether a man would come alive again from the tomb. It was a question that went to the heart of man's pointed questions as to the nature of the universe itself. Is the universe a vast, impersonal, uncaring machine, or is it concerned with personal and spiritual values? Does brute force have the last word? Are material things the only things that count? Can God take care of his own beyond the disasters of life and beyond death itself? Does personality persist? These, and not simply whether a certain man would rise from the dead, were the larger issues involved. Easter is the central and critical issue of Christianity.

If Christ Be Not Risen!

"If Christ be not risen"—one of Christ's devoted followers asked that question in a letter which he wrote to all his friends. If one reads between the lines he can hear the catch in the man's breath as he writes the words. "If Christ be not risen!"—why his preaching was vain and valueless, their faith was vain, the dead are not raised up, men are yet in their sins, and we are of all men most miserable. God would have been proved to be impotent, Christ's word would not be dependable, Christianity would have been founded on a lie, if it indeed had been founded at all. No wonder Paul had a catch in his breath when he wrote: "If Christ be not risen from the dead!"

But He Is Risen!

The fact that our Lord Jesus Christ came alive again from the dead is a solid stubborn fact of history. It is based on evidence that would be accepted as irrefutable in any court and by any unprejudiced person. To be sure there are many questions, many vexing questions, about the "how" of the resurrection. But there is no doubt about the fact of the resurrection. Christianity is based on the fact that Jesus Christ not only rose from the dead, but is risen. The resurrection is both a historic fact and a continuing experience.

From Sadness to Gladness.

It would have been difficult to find a group of people who were more sad, or more in despair than the disciples of Jesus on that first "Good Friday" and the following Saturday. The world had come tumbling down on their heads. All their hopes and plans had been dashed to pieces. The sky had caved in. All seemed lost. And they had depended so much upon him. The gloom was so thick you could have cut it with a knife, to use a current phrase.

And then suddenly their sadness was turned to gladness, a vibrant, victorious gladness. "The disciples therefore were glad when they saw the Lord." One of the gospel writers says in effect that they believed not for joy—it seemed too good and great to be true. The pivotal point on which all this turned was the fact that they were convinced, absolutely convinced that their Lord was alive again. It was not on hearsay either; it was from first-hand experience. The Risen Lord met with them, talked with them, shared intimately life with them. It is too bad that we miss this note of joy in modern Christianity. What happened at the first Easter is in one sense a repeatable or reproducible experience.

The Missing Disciple.

"But Thomas, one of the Twelve, was not with them when Jesus came." We do not know why he was not there. He may have had a good reason for not being there. But he missed so much. He was a great loser thereby. He missed the assurance that his Lord was alive again, he missed the companionship of Christ, he missed the sense of mission which Jesus gave to the other disciples when he breathed upon them and said that he was sending them out even as the Father had sent him, he missed the uplift and the inspiration of fellowship with his Lord. He did not know all this but he missed it all just the same. Many a man stays away from church and never knows what he is missing or what he has missed. But life is the poorer for it.

Demonstration for the Doubter.

Thomas was an honest doubter. He belonged to that great number of men who "had to be shown." And because he was an honest and sincere doubter Jesus dealt patiently and persuasively with him. He accepted Thomas' challenge and offered proof that it was really him. If you read the story, however, you will find that Thomas did not have to go all the way through his doubt. He never did put his finger into the print of the nails or thrust his hand into the side of his Lord. Responding to Jesus dissolves doubts as the warm sun melts away the snow. If any man will to do he shall know, said Jesus. He that doeth the truth cometh to the light, again said Jesus. Men spend all too much time with the intellectual problems in religion, and take too little action in the fact of the moral ideals of Christ. The fact is that in so many cases, perhaps in most cases, the problem is not intellectual but moral, not a matter of a perplexed mind, but of an unregenerate heart.

Not Seeing But Believing.

"Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." The disciples, in a way, had the advantage over us. They saw the risen Lord in person, had fellowship with him. We cannot see him as they saw him. But all the more credit to those who, not having seen, believe, and not having seen, love.

Aids to Belief and Faith.

"These things are written that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God." What things? The things that are written in the Gospel of John. A careful reading will quicken faith.

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE.

A Missionary Sermon

By RUSSELL HENRY STAFFORD.*

"Ye are the light of the world."

"Let your light shine before men."

—Matthew 5:14, 16.

As a figure for influence, light is a subtler symbol than we are likely to realize at first. Light is not something that we ordinarily look at. It is something we look by. In its presence we can see things clearly and get our bearings and conduct ourselves sensibly. To be sure, light blazes in sun and moon and stars and lamps. But for one star-gazer there are thousands who walk in the light without even noticing it. Light is the most modest and at the same the most serviceable of conveniences except the air.

The air is the very life of our bodies, of course. That is picturesquely attested from of old by the fact that in Hebrew, Greek and Latin the word for "spirit" means "breath." Yet of what use would life be if we could not see? Even the blind live by sight, though at second hand, through the sight of others. So unobtrusive is light that we need not see the sun to benefit by its rays filtered and softly spread through clouds. By day we take it for granted. It is only at night that we realize from its absence what a blessing light is.

So it is with good influence. It often touches us without our observing it. It becomes so much a part of our life, that we hardly give a thought to where it comes from, until perhaps it is withdrawn. Then so much is taken away from us that we suddenly wake up to how wrong we were in not appreciating it before.

Jesus was speaking, we assume, of the light of religion. Yet, I doubt whether that word would have occurred to him. For religion did not belong in a separate compartment in his thinking.

Or he might have called it the light of reason. For Jesus was a reasonable man. Yet when we use that phrase we are too often thinking as if light arose from and within reason itself, or man's capacity to organize logically the results of his experiences and experiments. That is like supposing that we could generate candle power by blinking our eyes in the dark. It is not reasonableness; it is rationalism, which is quite a different thing. So reason is apt to be confused with argument, based usually on leaping to oversimplified conclusions from inadequate data. Argument heats, like any other sort of friction; but it does not illumine. Light comes into reason from beyond, so that it can see where it is going. Indeed it is only by light from beyond itself that human reason can see to explore the universe, even on its physical side.

And God is the source of this light from beyond. In one of its basic meanings "God" is the name for the light of mind in the universe. That light comes to us all in some measure, whatever our professed religion or lack of it. But it comes in its fulness only through that affirmative reaction of our whole nature to perception of personal Being everywhere pervasive, and of our being in Him, for which the New Testament word is faith. There is nothing against reason in faith; though there is much against it in some beliefs confused with faith. Reason finds itself and its business clearly defined for the first time in the larger setting of a spiritual origin and destiny when a full faith brings God in, as our eyes bring in clear sunlight. And suddenly we know that love for God and good will to men are the very meaning as well as the inherent aim of our existence, which reason exists to serve.

That is the Christian view of the world. It has never been found in entire effectiveness anywhere on earth save under Jesus' influence. Whenever men and women are living in the brightness of that light from beyond, it streams through them to be diffused in environment. That is real religious influence. But it is not confined to so-called religious matters. It reaches everything and everybody in every department of experience. It is like the light, in which without even glancing at its source people can see where they are, and be sure of what they are about, and feel secure.

Th fundamental reason why the church exists is that Jesus' disciples have from the outset taken seriously his injunction to let their light shine. We need no one to tell us how badly the church has done this; how flawed and flickering some of its lamps have been. Nevertheless it has kept some sort of flares burning wherever it has been; and this is the light they have shed. So it will be more profitable than harping on obvious criticisms to observe how widespread this light has become, despite all faults in its transmission.

In this age of war we have grown chary about referring to Christian civilization. And it is true that there is not yet a Christian world-civilization. But within countries historically Christian the norms of private behavior and social organization have long since been bettered incalculably, beyond anything mankind has known apart from Christian influence. Only in lands where Christian influence has been persistently though it may be inconspicuously at work for a long time can public order be maintained by a small police force, because most citizens feel constrained by public opinion to behave themselves with at least outward decency; can confidence be put in the fairness of courts of law; or, for that matter, can stores afford to run charge accounts. Only in Christian lands can the general conscience be so angrily aware of the delinquencies of the social order to date as it tends to be in America today. Only in a Christian land could there be so insistent a cry for true democracy superseding all selfish class interests as many Americans in all quarters have been raising of late. Democracy itself, in the current sense, is simply the systematic application of Christian principles to collective relations.

We have overlooked all these evidences of Christian influence effective in the community to which we belong, because, like light, though pervasive, it is in itself hardly noticeable. Shut it off, however, and how we should miss it!

By an extension of the same figure, we can understand how mass slaughter can horribly afflict in their relations across boundary lines even the very peoples who are permeated with Christian principles of human decency at home. We have never until very lately so much as tried to let the light in on international affairs. They have been left in the midnight of savage self-seeking, under the superstition that ethical ideals or even a common sense of honor must be confined within national frontiers, like lighted houses blacked out toward the street. When the mad folly of war yields to sane world organization, it will not be because a superman has arisen to perform a miracle, but because ordinary Christians have at last let their light shine on the street as well as in the house.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Painting has been all the go at the Christian Orphanage for three weeks. We have been painting the interior of the building known as the "Baby Home," where the little children live. We had to put a new floor in one large room and partly floored another large room. We have re-furnished the rooms with new furniture and new linoleum rugs where it was needed. The entire interior has had two coats of paint and it looks very beautiful indeed. We have had new screens put in every window. As soon as we can get the new guttering put up, we will have this building finished, except for some repair work on the outside, which the weather has prevented us from doing. We have already learned that it takes money to do painting or any kind of repair work now at the present prices. It would be fine and much appreciated of you if some of our friends would send us contributions to help us do this extra work that has been needed for some time. But we haven't been able to do this kind of work on account of not having the materials necessary to do it.

Materials are easier to get now than they have been for several years, but prices are high. The time has been when I could buy linseed oil for $1.25 per gallon, and I had to pay $3.50 for some this week. Some years ago I could buy coal for $1.00 per ton. I wish I could buy some at that price now. The last car we bought cost us more than four times as much. Every thing we buy is out of reason. I only wish I could get our church people to realize this fact, so they would be willing to be more liberal in their contributions to help support this work.

Calls come every few days to take children. Practically all calls are to take small children. We were called on this week to take two little tots three and five years old. They were much younger than we usually take, but the need was urgent and we could not very well decline. Our good friend, Rev. R. E. Brittle, pastor of Bethlehem Church (Virginia), brought these little children over. They were from that church community.

We were always glad to help out in a case of need and distress when it is possible to do so. The orphanage was established for the purpose—to visit the orphans and widows in their distress and need. It gives the church an opportunity to serve. Let us be a good Samaritan and see to it that these little children have a good home, good care, food, and clothing. Let us forget self in our service to others.

GOOD FRIDAY.

and thing which Jesus did on the cross, and that was this: He loved and served his friends. One of these friends was a strange and unattractive figure—the robber who was being crucified beside him. Until that Friday afternoon they had never met. They were just chance acquaintances, as it were. But Jesus recognized in the poor fellow's anguished cry: "Jesus, remember me, remember me, when you come in your kindly power," a true confession of faith. Perhaps a deeper confession of faith had already been made in his rebuke to his fellow criminal, who had cried out petulantly and cynically to Jesus: "Are you not the Christ? Save yourself and us." To this the repentant thief had said to his colleague in crime: "Do you not fear God, since you are under the same sentence of condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we are receiving the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing wrong."

The other friend whom Jesus remembered to serve upon the cross was his oldest friend of all—his mother. He gave her a new son, even in the hour of his agony. We do not know who that new son was, except that he was a young man whom Jesus particularly loved, who had a home in Jerusalem to which he could take Jesus' mother, and that he later became a Christian preacher in Ephesus living to a ripe old age and that it was he who wrote the Fourth Gospel, or at least furnished the notes and memoranda which underlie that most beloved of all the books which Christianity has given to the world.

3. Having forgiven his enemies and remembered his friends, Jesus finally turned to his third great deed on the cross—he committed himself to God.

Some people think that for a time at least, under the stress of suffering, he lost his faith in God—that the cry, "Eloi, eloi, lama sabaethani?," "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" showed that God really did forsake him on the cross. Personally, I do not so believe. I remember that the words of that piercing cry are not original with Jesus. They are the opening words of the 22nd Psalm. Jesus undoubtedly knew that whole Psalm by heart. It is not a Psalm of despair but of ultimate deliverance. And it led Jesus to that supreme moment on the cross when he said: "Father, into thy hands, I commit my spirit."

Now that is the absolute last word in any Christian philosophy of life: "Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit." In every baffling life situation—in the face of defeat, betrayal, suffering, even death itself—this is the ultimate solution, the word of supreme comfort and sustaining faith. I do not know all the answers, I cannot explain why, but after we have forgiven our enemies and been loyal to our friends there is just one thing more we can say: "Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit."

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE.

What is true of the church in general holds good also for individual churches. Our church does not exist primarily for our benefit. It exists to shed abroad that light of love for God and good will to men which is in us by the reaction of our faith to the truth of God as He is revealed in Jesus Christ. This church is here to keep the individual lives of its members and their corporate consciousness at white heat in contact with the Eternal Goodness, so that all manner of influences toward better living stream out into this community and as far beyond as we can reach. We are not here for what we can get out of religion selfishly, in this life or the next. We are here for what religion will enable us to give to others. We are here to keep the light coming into our lives, that it may shine through us into other lives. If all the churches should simultaneously dissolve their bonds and convert their buildings to secular uses and give up the faith, there would be no more hope for this town or America or the world. For it is the churches that keep alive the spirit of all other efforts for human improvement.

When we get this into our minds clearly—that this church is not a lodge but a lighthouse—then a large factor in the annual church budget is justified as it cannot otherwise be. Year after year large sums, which are labelled “benevolences,” are given through the church treasury for Christian enterprises beyond this parish. No matter how times change, and whether money is easy or hard to come by, you go on giving considerable amounts every year to benevolences. How can such an allocation be warranted? Why is it made?

Some think it is from habit: We always have, so we always will. Some think it is from pride: Our standing among the churches of our fellowship is largely measured by this gauge. Some would perhaps suggest that we are actuated by sectarian imperialism: We want the world to be as full of Congregationalists as possible to satisfy our vanity. But no one of these ideas is powerful enough to pull dollars out of our pockets year after year; and of course every one of them is nonsense. We keep up our giving to benevolences, because from Christ we have personally received the mandate that we shall let our light shine—our light, which is his light—so that men and women and children across the continent and around the globe shall be able to see where they are going, and walk in safety, even though the light when it reaches them seem so natural that they may not stop to realize where it comes from.

We give through a variety of channels, but mainly in three categories: Home Missions, Social Action, Foreign Missions.

Home Missions is Christian action within the United States. There is still pioneering work to be done in this country for the founding of Christian lighthouses—Churches and Sunday Schools—in new settlements, and also among new groups of settlers in old settlements; as, for instance, in mushroom communities springing up through war industry. There are neglected sections where we must maintain schools and colleges in advance of proper provision by the state. There are areas of state education where Christian schools must be maintained to leaven the secularized lump. There are underprivileged segments of the population like the Negroes and the Orientals who need light in their darkness. There is so much to do here at home by way of direct religious ministry that we must hustle to keep up with the procession, or the advance guard will be moving in dangerous shadow; not for lack of a creed, but for lack of humane understanding and socially valuable ideals.

Social Action ties in with Home Missions. But its prime purpose is to turn the light in our own minds on subjects central to Christian ethics which we have too long left on the periphery of attention, and consequently in darkness, because they deal with public concerns rather than individual morals—as if the same principles of thoughtful good will did not apply to both. Social Action does not attempt to tell us what we must think about capital and labor, planning and competition, war and peace, black and yellow and white, Jew and Gentile, world organization, and the like. But it does tell us that we must think; and it further undertakes to purvey to us unbiased information for thought and discussion along these lines, which clearly run within and not beyond the Kingdom of God.

And Foreign Missions is Christian action beyond the United States. It is the opposite of isolationism. It deliberately focuses the light that is in us upon other peoples all over the world, but particularly upon peoples among whom Christ is not yet well known; with two objectives in view.

First, we recognize that they, too, are God's children; and that they dwell in darkness. We want them to walk in the light, too. For it belongs to them as much as to us. Through no virtue of ours we happen to be its custodians, and we must share it with them. By mention of their darkness, I mean no creedal bigotry. It is not for us to judge how much truth there may be in their forms of religion; and of course there must be some. But in general they are without hospitals and doctors, they cannot read and write, they eke out a famished livelihood by primitive methods from soil starved through misuse, and they are heartlessly exploited by the upper ranks of their social systems. We believe it is right and necessary to pick them up and start them going as soon as possible on their own feet in such practical regards as these. And we believe that they will keep going in the right direction only if we let them in on the secret of our own incentive for better living, which is the vision of God we have seen in Christ; the light of God which streams from Him on our path.

Second, in him who is the light of the world we see that this really is one world. Most Americans will not believe it, if they can help it. They are still trying to make America their whole world, their be-all and end-all. They would like to think that America can best prosper by ignoring the rest of mankind, unless alien tribes and their resources can be turned to our profit. But we Christian Americans see what folly that is; and how it must lead to ruin. Indeed, provincialism like that, here and elsewhere, has already brought about this ruinous time of troubles.

It is not that we Christians are better than other Americans; but we are in the light, so we can see better. And we see that only as everybody comes into the light can we get beyond the danger to us all of some bumping into one another with murderous snarls in the dark, and starting brawls in which everybody may be embroiled. The lesson of World War II, as Mr. Willkie pointed its moral in his great little book, has done a good deal to spread the light of Christian sanity among our countrymen. But we believe that Foreign Missions, as a continuing project of many-sided helpfulness under expertly trained ambassadors of God in Christ's name, to chronically benighted and needy peoples, will do far more through the years than any dated political observation toward converting America to that realization of world oneness and interdependence wherein lies the only hope of enduring peace and eventual well-being for all nations, including our own.

So that is why this church is here, and why it goes on stubbornly pouring big sums from its coffers into “benevolences”: that we may let our light shine before men. Only in the light of God's love and human brotherhood can men see the world as it really is, and govern themselves accordingly; can they make sure of where they are going, and work out a better common destiny on earth with mutual understanding and respect. Heaven is God's look-out; and we can trust Him for the hereafter. Earth is our care now—that light from heaven may show up its landscape clearly, its heights and its pitfalls alike, so that men of good will shall be able to achieve good ends, and with steady skillful hands clean up this dirty old house and set it in order for the divine surprise of Kingdom Come.

We are rash to endeavor to phrase thoughts capable of revealing the meaning of the Passion of our Lord. Some conceptions lie too deep for words; only life will make them clear. They must become flesh or remain mysteries.—Vere V. Loper.

SHAOWU APPOINTEE

By EDWARD RIGGS, M. D.

I am here in Foochow at last. It seemed best for some of our party to fly up from Hongkong, leaving the rest to accompany the baggage on the boat, which we still hope will sail the end of this month or the first of next. The trip by plan was pleasant and uneventful, and took six hours, including two stops en route.

I arrived here with the question still undecided whether to remain here and join the staff of the Union Hospital, or to go upriver to Shaowu and help reopen medical work there. I suspected that the decision would be easier to make here on the spot, where I could learn the facts, and I was not disappointed. I now find that the Union Hospital has an excellent Chinese Internist, in addition to Dr. Jarvis, Chief of the Medical Department, so that I am not urgently needed here.

On the other hand I find that a very timely opportunity has arisen in connection with the work in Shaowu. (You will recall that the hospital there has been closed since Doctor—now Congressman—Walter H. Judd left in 1932.) It seems that both UNRRA and the International Relief Commission are engaged at present in the free distribution of considerable quantities of medical supplies to all existing hospitals in the Province. This distribution will be completed by summer, so if the Showu Hospital were actually running for the next few months, we would be eligible to get hundreds of dollars' worth of drugs and medical equipment free. In addition the promise of the American Board to send new missionaries there and give a new boost to the work has created quite a wave of enthusiasm among present and former Chinese of Shaowu; and there is considerable local support for the idea of starting a new modern hospital now, while this opportunity is available.

Therefore, influential church and civic leaders of the town met last October and organized a "Board of Managers for the Shaowu Christian Hospital," actually established an outpatient clinic without trained personnel or supplies, and, with the approval of the mission group here in Foochow, applied for a share in these relief allocations, promising UNRRA that a missionary doctor was on his way out and the hospital would be in operation shortly. In other words, for practical purposes, the matter has already been decided, and the wisdom of my assignment to Shaowu seems quite apparent.

I have been having some preliminary talks with a Dr. James Yao, who was born and raised in Shaowu and who is now one of the higher-ups in the Fukien Provincial Health Department and Medical Division of CNRRA, the Chinese distributing agency for UNRRA. He has not been in Shaowu himself for twenty years, but has relatives there and is very much interested in the hospital plans and quite well informed on the present local situation. He says that the hospital building which Dr. Judd left is still standing but will need about $2,000 worth of repairs. He has obtained promises both of aid for repairs and of liberal medical grants from CNRRA, so that the job will be easier. He also knows of several qualified nurses—natives of Shaowu but now working elsewhere—who would be interested in going back if the hospital were established. One in particular, who has had three years of surgery in a large government hospital in Chungking, he is certain will come, and a qualified surgeon is just what I need. He also says there is a road down from Nanchang, in the Yangtse Valley to the north; and a route has already been surveyed for a railroad from there, which will run down right through Shaowu. Work on railroad is to start this summer. If and when it is finished, Shaowu will only be two and one-half days from Shanghai, and the cost of getting supplies in will be much less. So the prospects certainly look rosy. If only I could get an X-ray machine, I would be happy, but there is none available from UNRRA and this period of skyrocketing prices is hardly a suitable time to be buying a new one from the United States.

So there is a lot of planning and dreaming to do, and a trip up to Shaowu just as soon as possible. But there is no use going up until my baggage arrives on the boat, and then the Jacksons will want to go, too, and will need several days to get themselves organized for the trip after they arrive here from Hongkong. So I figure that we can't leave before the 10th of February. That gives me two weeks here with nothing to do but wait. I have just arranged for a language tutor and will spend my mornings studying Chinese. The rest of the time I can be studying the way things are done here in Union Hospital, and get acquainted with the town and the various local mission enterprises.

An Easter Prayer

By WILLIAM ROBERT CATTON

Almighty and Eternal God, we come to Thee this day with a new joy and wonder in our hearts. The springtime of the year declares to us that life is ever Lord of death and love can never lose its own. We have new courage: we are reassured: we know again that now abideth Faith, and Hope, and Love.

But we rejoice not only in the fact of spring. Not alone the resurging beauty of the blossoms and the trees has brought this hope and courage to our lives. We are not pagans, nurtured in a creed of nature worship. We are Christians, and we know whom we have believed.

We thank Thee for the eternal power and beauty of the resurrection of Jesus. It is our risen Lord in whom we trust. He it is who guides us through the gloom. It is because of Him that we now have no fear, even though we walk through the valley of the shadow of death.

Turn again our thoughts, we pray Thee, to the Easter Day that first revealed so well that the selfish and angry deeds of sinful men are totally unable to thwart the mighty purposes of God.

But, our God, with horror we confess that not alone on Calvary was Jesus crucified. In our own day, our own generation has tried to seal Christ in a tomb, a tomb which we have closed with the cold stone of our own selfishness, and garnished with the seal of our own folly. May we speedily see Christ emerge from this tomb in which we have placed him. And if it take again a miracle to roll away the heavy stone that we have placed in the way of our Redeemer, nevertheless, if we have Faith, the mountains themselves will presently remove.

Let the Christ appear again, let Him rise before ourselves today, to become, as is His right, the Lord of Life, even the Lord of our lives.

Hear our prayer, O God, we beseech Thee, and make us live today, as we have never lived before, in the power of an endless life. Amen.

C. SHANNON MORGAN, B. D.

The Rev. C. Shannon Morgan, now pastor of a group of Congregational Christian Churches in Windsor, Va., has just completed his requirements for the Bachelor of Divinity degree in the Duke University Divinity School. Mr. Morgan majored in the field of Old Testament, writing his thesis under Professor W. F. Stinespring. The title of the thesis is: "Hosea: Prophet of Doom or Hope?" Mr. Morgan decides that the Book of Hosea is usually misinterpreted by the attribution of too many gentle characteristics such as love and hope to the prophet. These elements of the book are found almost entirely in the first three chapters and in the 14th chapter. It would appear that there is little genuine material of the prophet in these three chapters and that the true message of the prophet is to be found in the chapters four to thirteen, inclusive. Upon critical examination it is found that in chapters four to thirteen, we have ten solid chapters of so-called doom material in which the prophet denounces the sins of his people in no uncertain terms and then proclaims the punishment that is sure to follow. Even if a few verses of hope material are to be attributed to Hosea, these cannot outweigh the ten solid chapters of doom. It must be concluded that the prophet considered the problem of the sin his people as a very serious one. Indeed, they had sinned so greatly that there was very little hope for their salvation. This interpretation conforms strictly to the facts of history, for the Northern Kingdom of Israel, to which Hosea belonged, was totally destroyed by the Assyrians in 722 B. C., never again to be revived. Later writers, smarting under the fierce denunciation of the prophet, and knowing that the Southern Kingdom of Judah did survive for a while, added the hopeful passages to mitigate the denunciation of the prophet and to express the belief that a remnant of the Jewish people would be saved. The problem of Hosea's wife, so often discussed by scholars and laymen, is seen to be a personal one, with very little bearing on the message of the prophet.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY AT ANTIOCH.

The pastor would like to commend the Missionary Society of Antioch Church for the excellent meeting in the third week in March. The meeting was well-attended. Rev. Mr. Ammons, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Zuni, Virginia, competently reviewed the Missionary Study Book on India. The Society and Mr. Ammons deserve commendation and praise for such an enlightening study.

Pastor.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH.
PORTSMOUTH.

In the absence of a pastor, the First Church at Portsmouth is trying to carry on and is being ably assisted by Navy Chaplains in the vicinity. Chaplain E. L. Wade, Senior Chaplain of the Navy Yard, Portsmouth, has proven a real friend to the church. He has assumed the responsibility of filling the pulpit, except when candidates are being heard. He is not free for the morning services, but has been able to secure excellent speakers for these services and he delights the evening congregations with his gospel messages. The sick of the church have also been his particular care since our pastor left.

The church finds it possible to continue its activities because of the impetus given the work by our former pastor, Rev. R. C. Mason, during the three years he was with us. Mr. and Mrs. Mason gave so unstintingly

Because He Lives

By C. Rexford Raymond.

Our Lord still breaks the Bread and pours the Wine.
We need not go afar to seek His face
And scan the skies for Him. For neither space
Nor time can limit now His love divine.
He makes the shameful Cross the holy sign
Of His triumphant all-embracing grace.
On Easter, men of every class and race
May build a world where peace shall be His shrine.
His presence proves that nineteen hundred years
Are not all past. For He who led His friends
To build a world of love with blood and tears
Still walks with them. Their work He still defends,
The Christ not only lives with us today;
Because He lives, our loved ones live away.

STEWARDSHIP AND ETERNAL LIFE.

A privileged young man came to Christ. According to the synoptic writers, he was young, he was rich, he was a ruler. This young man thought he was "tops." He had been so informed by a host of admirers, and he was thoroughly convinced. The obligations of privilege had not occurred to him. Jesus, the divine diagnostician, was the first person who ever dared to deflate his ego, his inflated sense of importance. Great was the fall thereof!

Jesus diagnosed the young man's problem. He had allowed wealth to dethrone God. Imagine the surprise of the young man who wanted to know about eternal life when Jesus began talking about stewardship! Jesus found it necessary to remind the rich young ruler of the vital and inescapable relationship of stewardship and eternal life.

Is it possible that some of us have overlooked or minimized that relationship? Easter is not a glorious hiatus, an evanescent or effervescent interval in a cycle of routine celebrations. It is the symbol of life's most enduring reality. It is predicated, not upon a rosy idealism, but upon faith and fact—faith in Christ and the fact of a Godly stewardship. This and nothing less is the true measure of eternal life.

It is altogether likely that the rich young ruler had been generous, even lavish on occasions. He could afford to. Jesus realized, however, that generosity will never save the world. Even philanthropy can never save the world. Generosity is determined by the amount one gives; sacrifice by the amount one keeps. There were generous souls, philanthropists, long before Christ lived. The Cross is the reminder that sacrifice is the essential and indisputable element in salvation.

We may be generous, but are we sacrificial in our giving? Christian stewardship and eternal life are so related that they become one. Here, then is a present opportunity to "lay hold on eternal life."

Our Western civilization is rich, it is young, and it enjoys a ruling influence over a very considerable part of the world. Through Lend-Lease and other channels our nation has been generous. Now it is our privilege to go over the second mile and add to generosity, sacrifice. The obligations of privilege have not diminished. Our rich, young, ruling civilization can not only help feed and clothe a destitute world, it can advance mightily the Kingdom of Christ and bring a host of initiates into the boundless realm of eternal life. Such is the privilege and challenge of our Easter Offering for Missions.

LIFE WITH NEW DIMENSIONS.

"In my Father's house are many dimensions," said the Master, if the editor may be indulged a personal rendering of this beloved passage! "Mansions" suggest physical and temporal concepts. The word suggests luxury, which may or may not be concomitant to eternal life. Whatever luxury there is in the future life, to be sure, will be luxury of the soul and not of the body. Fellowship with Christ and the redeemed will be the abiding and all sufficient luxury.

Think of the many interesting and fruitful dimensions of time. Dr. John Haynes Holmes writes to this point: "On the one hand, a person can reach back, in memory, to experiences which have gone by, and thus constitute the past; on the other hand, he can reach forward, in anticipation, to experiences which have still to come, and thus constitute the future. A self-conscious personality, in other words, is not confined to the present, but moves easily and freely in the past and in the future. As life ripens and experience deepens, the past, to a person of the meditative type, becomes more important than the present, and, to a person of the prophetic type, the future more momentous than either. But time, thus interpreted, becomes eternity. The stream of time is a single stream, as the waters of a river are an unbroken flow. Past, present and future, in other words, are no sooner seen distinct and apart than they are suddenly absorbed into a continuum which never begins and of course can never end." Yes, "In my Father's House are many dimensions."

The expanding life of the spirit finds many realizations and illustrations. Miss Alice E. Cary was in Tokyo, Japan, when the news of her mother's death reached her. Here is a tender and revealing paragraph from one of her letters, dated January 14, 1947:

"From many of you have come loving and sympathetic notes and I want you to know how deeply I appreciate every word you have written. That it was not easy to leave her last spring you can well imagine. It was only her joy in my coming back to the Japan which she has known and loved so long that made it possible for me to do so. She promised to wait until I got back, but that was not to be. I had known for days that she was very ill, but since no word had reached me by the morning of the 29th, I followed the plan already made to go down to Kobe College where my brother is teaching. The very next day word came that my mother had left us. It was a joy to my brother and me to be together at such a time, not that we wished to grieve together, because those of you who knew mother knew what a joyful spirit she was and how she would have frowned upon any sorrow on our part. We shall miss her letters very much, for all through the years she has always kept us close in a family circle by her interest in what we were all doing and her faith and hope in us. I like to think of her as starting out this New Year with Father once more and her eager delight in the new adventures she is facing. Just as surely as she still lives in the lives and hearts of a host of friends here, I feel sure that Heaven is a richer place because she has gone there."

Yes, life for her has taken on added dimensions. These dimensions are, like the Cross, horizontal and perpendicular. Temporal and geographical dimensions are infused with new significance and are seen as essential units within the encompassing will of God.

"In my Father's House are many mansions." Think of the romance of language! Let imagination leap back for three thousand years and renew acquaintance with those who wrote the Bible in Hebrew, Aramaic and Greek. Follow the translators as they wrestled with language and syntax in order that God's children of different nationalities might read His words and think His thoughts after Him. Thanks to the intensive and extensive work of translators, "O For a Thousand Tongues to Sing My Great Redeemer's Praise" has become the glorious realization of Christendom. The implementation of Pentecost enables every man to hear the Gospel in his own tongue. This is the miracle of language and of the Gospel. Time has been swallowed up into eternity.

"The Undefeatable Christ"

An Easter Radio Address Delivered Over Station WOR

By DR. JOHN SUTHERLAND BONNELL

The New Testament does not claim that Jesus Christ originated the hope of immortality, but it does declare that He confirmed it. He enriched it. He kindled it into a blazing conviction, so that St. Paul could say: "Jesus Christ who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

The hope of immortality has been found to be universal among mankind. We light upon it in remote ages and in the earliest civilization of human history. Far off in ancient Mesopotamia five thousand years before the birth of Christ, men believed in the immortality of the soul. It was a vital belief in Egypt in the age of the pyramids. It inspired the loftiest arguments of Plato's philosophy, and it enabled Socrates to drink the cup of poisoned hemlock in the faith that as he launched his frail raft upon the bosom of eternity he believed that to the good no evil thing could happen.

Emerson, speaking of immortality, says: "Here is this wonderful thought. Wherever man ripens this audacious belief presently appears. . . . As soon as thought is exercised this belief is inevitable. . . . Whence came it? Who put it in the mind of man?"

We may well ask the questions raised by Emerson: What led man first to believe that death is not the extinction of human personality? Every one who has looked upon the face of the dead agrees that there seems to be a terrible finality to death. It seems to be utterly and completely triumphant. Hence, then, this amazing conception that has existed always in the heart of man, that the spirit of man can triumph over death? Are we not driven to the only adequate answer, that from the dimmest beginnings of the race man has persisted in his belief that death is not the final answer because God has planted eternity and immortality in every human breast?

This belief has not gone unchallenged. There have been times when it has been vehemently denied. But man has never been able to rid himself of it. He has never been able to live without it. Even the strongest doubters have themselves protested against the intolerable idea of the annihilation of the human spirit.

Thomas Huxley, the agnostic, doubted, but at the age of sixty we find him writing: "It is a curious thing that I find my dislike to the thought of extinction increasing as I get older. It flashes across me at all times with a sort of horror that in 1900 I shall probably know no more than I did in 1800. I had rather be in hell."

Robert Ingersoll doubted, and he proclaimed his doubts the length and breadth of this land. But when he stood at the graveside of a truly loved brother, he spoke these words: "From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word; but in the night of death hope sees a star and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing."

Thomas Hardy, British novelist and poet, whose dust has been laid to rest at Westminster Abbey, accepting the creed of fatalism, doubted, but he never ceased to long for conviction. A few years before his death, at the age of eighty-eight, he was visited in his beloved Wessex by a near-by church choir that wished to pay honor to him. He turned to the leader of the choir and said: "Will you be good enough to have your choir sing a hymn that has been very much in my mind of late." And what was the title of the hymn that Thomas Hardy wanted them to sing?—"Sun of my soul, Thou Savior Dear, it is not night if Thou be near." And it may well be, that the famous author, when he felt the night of death gathering around, laid hold upon these wondrous words as a confirmation of his secret hope that the morn would not cheerless be.

Not only do the doubters of immortality protest against their own conclusions, but the wisest and best men of our race have believed in this hope with unwavering confidence.

Cicero has some significant comment to make on this point. He says: "There is in the minds of men, I know not how, a certain presage, as it were, of a future existence; and this takes deepest root in the great geniuses and the most exalted souls."

Sordid, grovelling personalities are incapable of achieving this faith. It is beyond their comprehension. But wherever there is found among the highest or humblest sons of man a spirit that kindles at the touch of the Infinite, there is one who rejoices in the hope of immortality.

And the converse of this is true. Whenever there is a man who believes with assurance in immortality of the soul, you have one who unflinchingly dedicates himself to life's highest purposes and the well-being of his fellowmen. Even Renan, the skeptic, is impressed by this fact, and he has written: "The day in which the belief in an after life shall vanish from the earth will witness a terrific moral and spiritual decadence."

How could it be otherwise? It would mean that matter is triumphant over spirit; that the soul of man is at the mercy of a few particles of disordered dust; that the noblest individual who ever looked through human eyes would be less enduring than a clod of common clay. If that were true, then indeed we would be living in a mad universe and chaos would be forever king.

Listen to the measured phrases penned by Sir Wilfred Grenfell of Labrador, the physician who spent his life in the service of the underprivileged and the poor: "It has been my lot in life to stand by many death beds and to be called in to dying men and women almost as a routine of my profession. Yet, I am increasingly convinced that they never die at all. I am sure that there is no real death. . . . Eternal life is the complement of all my unsatisfied ideals. And experience teaches me that belief in it is a greater incentive to be useful and good than anything I know."

You will notice that Dr. Grenfell refers to Eternal Life rather than to immortality. The concept of eternal life which our Lord gave to his followers is far richer and more comprehensive than that of immortality. It implies a quality of life rather than duration.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It was just a plain wedding ring. But thirty years of wearing had made it even more precious than when placed on her finger on their wedding day. It meant something. They had heard their pastor say: "This ring, given and taken, is a symbol of nuptial love. It is pure, and under fiery trial shines with a richer luster. Its form, being a circle, is without end. It is therefore a fitting seal to your marriage vows and the sign to you of an endless bond."

We were at the dinner table. It was a cheerful family circle and my minister friend and I were happy to share the friendly hospitality being shown. It was there that some remark was lightly made about wedding rings, whereup the hostess admitted that hers was very old-fashioned but greatly prized even so. One of the daughters remarked that mother had never had it off of her finger. While I was thinking that that ring had been placed there more than a quarter of a century ago and that that one act had remained unchanged across all these years, that the placing of that ring had remained unbroken through sunshine and shadow, and that through all the loving ministrations of that hand it had never for once, for the tiniest little moment, been without that ring right there, the mother remarked that she did not know what she would do if something made it necessary to remove it; whereup the one who placed it there cheerfully said: "Why you would just slip it off and say well, that is the first time!"

Those of us who knew how much pain, suffering and anxiety had been cheerfully borne by the one who made that remark saw in it the deep Christian cheerfulness and common sense upon which the foundation of that home rested. He knew that it would pose a problem, but that like all the others it would be cheerfully met. The two of them had met them that way together, and one could safely say their children would do likewise. Yes, that ring was indeed a symbol! A divine symbol of lasting faith and Christian fortitude; and love.

Life has its times of testings, but the person who has been given godly training, and who develops the strength of Christian character will be enabled to stand the tests whatever they are. They may not be solved according to our own liking, but if we put our faith in God, and do our duty to others, there will be plenty of room for joy and happiness along the way. As I write these lines I am thinking of the fine homes, and good friends, the minister of God encounters as he seeks to exalt Him who designed that the Christian home should ever be a bit of heaven on earth!

JOHN G. TRUITT.

"UNDEFEATABLE CHRIST."

"Because I live," said Jesus, "ye shall live also." And the Master offers to us the power of an endless life. How different would the history of the world have been if death had written "finis" to the career of Jesus. There would have been no triumphant Easter celebrations, no blazing faith in Everlasting Life, but just one more name would have been added to the roll of martyrs who had died in vain.

But when Jesus rose from the dead on that first Easter morning, solemn, grim, portentous death had met its master, had been vanquished. The forces of darkness had been overthrown and the Prince of Life emerged from the grave crying: "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive forever more"—in the power of an endless life.

Whatever doubts may be in the minds of modern Christians regarding the reality of the Resurrection of our Lord, there were none in the hearts of His disciples. They had witnessed His arising from the dead and they were ready to stake their lives on the faith that they preached. Not only were they ready, but they did give their lives for the Gospel and all of them save John one by one laid down their lives in the service of the Master they loved. Do you think that Stephen would have submitted to stoning outside of Jerusalem so soon after the Crucifixion of Jesus if he did not know that the Master was alive? Do you think that James would have bowed his head to Herod's sword if he had been proclaiming a lie? Do you think that the Apostle Paul—the persecutor of the Church of Jesus Christ, who fell prostrate on the road to Damascus and surrendered to the living Lord—do you think that he would have submitted to execution at Rome and laid his head on the block for the headsman's axe if he had been proclaiming an untruth? Do you think that Peter would willingly have gone to his cross if he had not known that, on the Resurrection morning, the Master had sent him this message "Go tell the disciples, and Peter, that I am risen from the dead." One by one they laid down their lives in the faith of the Gospel. And it is still true. As Tertullian said: "None would wish to be killed unless he knew that he had the truth." These heroic souls went joyfully to their doom for they knew that death was but the flinging wide open of a door to richer and fuller service in the Heavenly Kingdom of their Master.

That is the faith that we need to recapture today. That is the truth that the world needs. For when all fear of death is vanquished, fear of life, too, will disappear. There are multitudes of people all around us today harassed, tormented, disturbed, disquieted. They're afraid of life. They dread each day as it dawns. They have scarce strength to go on. They don't know how to live because they have never let Jesus Christ teach them how to die. The fear of life is due to the fear of death. After we have entered with the risen Lord into the power of an endless life we shall stand triumphant in the presence of death and the grave.

There comes to my mind the memory of a morning some years ago. I had picked up the paper and read this notice in bold-face type: "Noted divine passes. Dr. F. B. Meyer of London is dead." Instantly there flashed into my mind the last words he had spoken to me. "You know," he said, "my health is very uncertain now. I am an old man, and when I go back to London you may be reading in your paper: 'Dr. Meyer is dead.' When you read that, don't believe a word of it, because I will only then be beginning truly to live." A day or two before the end he wrote to one who had shared with him in the work of the Kingdom of God. This is how the letter ran:

"Dear Firends: Much to my surprise, the doctor tells me that my days on earth are numbered. Even before this reaches you I may be in the Palace of the King. Do not trouble to write me for I shall see you in the morning. Your friend, F. B. Meyer."

London has seldom witnessed such a funeral service as was held for Meyer in Christ Church Cathedral. There was never a note of defeat, no hint of tragedy, no suggestion of regret, but there were radiant Scripture passages and glorious Easter

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE CAMPAIGN CONTINUES.

The campaign to raise $100,000 with which to establish the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian education at Elon College continues even if at a slow pace. Slow, perhaps, because of my inability to visit the churches and lay this privilege and responsibility on the hearts of the people.

Since Christmas I have visited a number of our churches in the interest of the campaign. I have visited Mt. Zion, Concord and Bethel Churches, Rev. Walstein Snyder, pastor. Mt. Zion and Bethel Churches have accepted their quotas and will raise these quotas in full. Concord is to make its decision later but I am sure, and the pastor agrees with me, that all his churches will raise their quotas in due time.

Some weeks ago I had the privilege of worshipping with Berea Church, Norfolk County, Eastern Virginia Conference, Rev. B. H. Watkins, pastor. At the close of the morning service I was given the privilege of speaking briefly with the congregation and later met with the official board. The board is to decide and write me later. Recently I visited Union Ridge Church, North Carolina and Virginia Conference, Rev. Kenneth Register, pastor. At the close of the service I met with the officials of the church. They voted to cooperate and raise the church's voluntary apportionment. Last Sunday, I spoke at Palm Street Church, Greensboro, in interest of the college, Rev. M. A. Pollard, pastor. The official board of the church voted to accept and raise its quota. The church will pay $160 per year out of its budget for five years.

It is most encouraging to have the churches of our convention cooperate with the convention and the college in strengthening our Religious Education Department of Elon College that we may continue to train Christian workers for the opportunities and responsibilities of the church. It would certainly save time if the many churches that have not accepted their quota would agree to cooperate and inform me of their decision.

THE HEATING PLANT.

The present heating equipment at Elon College was installed in 1904-05. This equipment was second-hand when installed. It has served well and long; everyone will agree, but it has about outlived its usefulness. Steps are being taken to replace this equipment with new, up-to-date and adequate equipment.

The Board of Trustees in its mid-year meeting voted authorizing the Executive and the Building Committees to proceed to provide the college with these needed facilities. The firm of Wiley & Wilson, consulting engineers of Richmond and Lynchburg, Virginia, was employed to make a survey of the campus and adjoining land to determine the type and size of equipment needed and the most advantageous place to locate the building to house this equipment. This contract was awarded more than a year ago.

It has been decided to locate the new heating plant across the highway north of the present location, and pipe the heat and hot water to the present point of distribution. This means that the present power house will be moved off the campus which will greatly improve the appearance as you enter through the north gate.

The firm of Wiley & Wilson has also been given the contract to draw the plans and specifications for the new heating plant, including building and equipment. The company has agreed to rush this work and give the plans to us as quickly as possible—within two weeks, we hope. As soon as these necessary preliminaries are completed contractors will be requested to submit bids and if these bids seem to be within reason, contracts will be let and building operations will begin. We hope to have the building and equipment installed ready for use not later than October 15, this year.

It is hoped that the cost of the building and equipment will not amount to as much as $100,000, and certainly not to exceed this amount. If the cost should reach $100,000, you are wondering where the money would come from. So am I. We have on hand about $35,000 that we may use for these purposes. This would leave a balance of $65,000 to be secured. We do not wish to borrow. We do not want to create another debt. No one does. Yet, we cannot run the college without heat and hot water. These are necessary requisites. The only way to keep from creating another debt to meet this emergency is to put up the cash. This can be done and will be done if everyone will give what he really should and can. These improvements are absolutely essential and positively urgent. My dear friend and reader, please don't wait for someone to come to you for a contribution. Send your contribution now. Make it generous and others will join you.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Were you ever enthusiastic in your expectations of continued encouragement and then have that encouragement not to materialize, in fact to have your hopes almost completely shattered? We had such a good report last week, but if you read to the end of this article, you will find that the total amount received from all churches and Sunday schools during this week is $3.00. This amount is supposed to help defray the expense of a great college. Of course, it will help. Small contributions are not despised, in fact they are gratefully received and we do appreciate the thoughtfulness and gift from Bethel Church, Virginia Valley Conference. Three dollars is a small gift but what a fine report this would be if the 196 churches in our Convention had all sent three dollars each. In the matter of support of the College, it is not so much the large gifts that are received but the number of churches and Sunday schools that contribute. Rallying from the experiences of this week, we are hopeful for the weeks that are ahead.

hymns. At the conclusion of the service the vast congregation rose as the organist began to play. They stood with bowed heads waiting for the throbbing dirge of the Dead March, but instead, the organist swung into the triumphal notes of the Alleluia Chorus. And why should it be otherwise when a great servant of Christ was standing at attention before his King?

That is the faith which is ours today! We worship not a dead Jesus but a living Christ "Who hath abolished death and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." "And he shall reign forever and ever and ever, King of kings and Lord of lords." Conqueror of death! Lord of life! Alive forever more.

ATTEND CHURCH ON EASTER SUNDAY.

We live in two worlds, earth and eternity. We live in animal bodies; but we also live as spirits in God. Our animal bodies will go the way of all flesh; but we live forever with our Lord who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

This immortal hope makes Easter the noblest day of the year. In spite of pagans who live without hope of immortality, Christians celebrate Easter with songs and flowers. Believing that the universe is the creation of God and that God sustains his creation, we exult in our Easter praise.

Because we believe in the victory of the spirit, the church brings gifts to the altar on Easter. Our Easter gift this year is all for world-wide ministry through the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction to "provide bread for the hungry, haven for the homeless, the oil of joy for mourning, and comfort for those who have borne the burden of these days of desolation."

We rejoice that God is love. We must not let the children perish. Our immortal faith can be transmuted into mercy. Come on Easter to sing and pray and give.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK

With Emphasis on Missions

Mrs. F. C. LESTER, Editor

MISS COGHILL TO SPEAK AT WOMEN'S RALLIES.

Deeply impressed by the influence of the Christian Church in non-Christian lands and the potential power of Christianity in India, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill of New York City, Educational Secretary of the Missions Council for Congregational Christian Churches just back from nine months overseas will speak at the following Rallies:

Eastern Virginia—

Norfolk District—Tuesday, April 8, Shelton Memorial, Portsmouth.

Suffolk District—Wednesday, April 9, Suffolk.

Waverly District—Thursday, April 10, New Lebanon, Elberon.

North Carolina—

Halifax District—Tuesday, April 15, Lynchburg, Va.

Alamance and Guilford-Rockingham-Forsyth Districts, Wednesday, April 16, Reidsville.

Randolph and Chatham-Lee-Moore Districts—Thursday, April 17, Shallow Well, Jonesboro.

Vance-Warren and Durham-Wake Districts—Friday, April 18, Mt. Auburn, Manson.

During this time Miss Coghill visited India, Ceylon, Iraq, Syria, Palestine, Lebanon, Turkey, Greece, Italy, France, Switzerland, England and Denmark. She went to India as a member of a special deputation under the American Board of Foreign Missions for the study of its work in that land and was astonished at the pervasive influence of six million Christians in the midst of a civilization dominated by Hindu ideals. While in India she spent a day and a night in Gandhi's Ashram.

Miss Coghill, who represents The Board of Home Missions on the Missions Council has wide contacts with Congregational Christian Churches of America and is a gifted interpreter of missionary work. Her recent trip, during which she had fellowship with Congregational missionaries and Nationals in foreign lands, has broadened her vision and deepened her concern for the world-wide ministry of the church.

"No real differences exist between home and foreign missions," she reports. "The problems are essentially the same everywhere—and so is our purpose. I was delighted at the positions of leadership occupied by men and women in India who had been trained in Christian schools."

A North Carolinian by birth and a graduate of Elon College, Miss Coghill began service in Florida in 1939 as an extension worker. When in 1942 the Missions Council was seeking an Educational Secretary, who knew the needs of the local churches because she had lived and worked with them, Pattie Lee Coghill was a natural choice.

From India Miss Coghill flew to Iraq, took a train to Bagdad and rode in a convoyed bus to Damascus. She spent Easter in Palestine and while in the Near East spent three weeks in Turkey. She was greatly impressed by the large degree in which the leaders of countries in the Near East have been educated in mission founded schools. Wherever she went Miss Coghill found the U. S. Consular and Diplomatic officials most co-operative. Her trip was climaxed by a visit to the folk schools in Denmark. Naples, Rome, Geneva, Paris and London were all stopping points on her travels.

JOINT BOOK REVIEW AT BERE A.

Berea (Nansemond) Auxiliary Society entertained the Liberty Spring Auxiliary at Berea on January 16, 1947. There were about 140 present.

The mission book, India at the Threshold, was the subject of study.

Mrs. L. F. Bradshaw of Liberty Spring reviewed the first half of the book during the morning session.

After lunch, served by the Berea women, the remainder of the book was reviewed by Mrs. William Harrell of Liberty Spring.

Study of the book under these able teachers was a source of enlightenment and interest to all. Especially enjoyable was the singing by members of the Liberty Spring group.

Mrs. C. G. WRIGHT.

MANY ACTIVITIES AT HAPPY HOME.

The Happy Home Society is grateful for our theme: "The Lord, Thy God and Thy Neighbor." We find it a challenging one!

Once a month we share some of our work and our thoughts by opening Sunday school.

In presenting the Thank Offering Service we had complete charge of the morning service. It was well attended.

On Thanksgiving Eve we prepared a banquet for our Pilgrim Fellowship. We also sponsored a program of gospel singing. Both of these occasions were at the local school.

For our Christmas activities we gave a pounding to one of our unfortunate church members. When we invited the church, itself, to share in this gift, a nice contribution of money was given.

Two of our members attended the president's meeting in the home of our District Chairman, Mrs. W. J. Andes, Winston-Salem, in January.

We observed the World Day of Prayer.

It was so hard to decide which Friendly Service Project to undertake that we decided to give to each. We were proud of our offering for India; and, while we almost fell down in our gifts to Franklinton, we hope to be able to give to Carroll County.

Near St. Valentine's Day we visited the inmates of our County Home, bringing a program of cheer and gifts of candy and valentines. As we planned this, we felt it was a small thing to do, but were greatly blessed as we saw the expressions of gratitude on the faces of these, our handicapped neighbors.

We hope to help make possible an egg hunt for the children in our Orphanage—or help in some special way.

Two members of our society have agreed to bring us reports of our study books this year.

We have a new pastor. He is Rev. Thurman Bowers. He is a member of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, but is pastor of the Community Church in Greensboro. They are generous to share him with us. He is really our supply pastor.

We have high hopes of continuing our efforts to erect a parsonage in the near future.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

We have just had a lovely guest in our home who spoke for our people at church this morning. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill told us many interesting things about her trip abroad. Among them was how she spent last Easter week a year ago in Palestine. "That experience is a very great one for any Christian," she said. Miss Coghill will speak at the Spring Missionary Rallies after Easter. I hope that all of you will urge your mothers to go hear her.

This Easter is not a very easy one for many of the grown people of the world, boys and girls. Too many people of the world know the type of suffering that is very like that which Jesus went through in the Garden and on the Cross. The world itself is being tried. All earnest Christians are humbly in prayer that our world might experience a rising, a re-awakening to new life, a victory of light over the present darkness, a new triumph of Goodness over Evil.

Yet, Easter is always a time of rejoicing for Christians. It should be a happy, joyous time for boys and girls. I would love to watch you as you color your eggs for Easter. I'd like to watch your mad and joyous scrambles at the Easter Egg Hunt. I'd love to visit each of your churches and watch your eager faces as you sing the wonderful Easter songs. Indeed I shall be watching you through the children of our church here and the children in our home! I shall be very near to you in spirit. You might even hear my greeting of "Christ Is Risen!" if you listen to the Christians around you! We shall say it as if with one voice on this Easter morn. May God give us the power and courage to live the truth of the living Christ after Easter day has passed.

THINK—BEFORE YOU INTERRUPT.

By THEODORA BROWNFIELD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Mother, look at that big—"

"Mother's dear boy," was the affectionate interruption, and the mother bent over to kiss the child.

"Yes, but Mother, look at—"

"Kiss me, dear. What do you want Mother to look at?"

"See that great big—"

"Big darling boy!" she murmured.

"But I want you to look at that big truck that—"

"Grandma's looking at you. She wants a hug, I know. Give her a great big one."

"But that big truck, Mother—"

Five times a youngster about four years old, riding on a bus with his mother and grandmother, attempted to talk. Yet every time he started a sentence, he was interrupted by either one or the other. Never once was this child given time to complete a sentence. A few words from his lips, and he was interrupted by a demand for a caress, or given a caress.

True, he was not scolded, corrected in the middle of a sentence, nor interrupted by adult conversation—except as it led to a request for a show of affection, but what adult could stand such treatment for long and still be capable of logical thought or coherent expression of an idea?

Surprisingly, this child did not stammer or repeat his word in confusion. He simply started over and over again, patiently trying to say a few words to express his thought. This particular incident was an extreme example of the habit some parents have of interrupting their children's early attempts to talk. Regardless of the reason for the interruption—whether it is in anticipation of what a child intends to say, to correct him, or to display affection and pride in his accomplishments—it may become the basis for serious difficulties later on.

Most children when traveling by bus, train, or car are entertained by their new and changing surroundings. They learn much from their observations, and the parent who wisely answers the questions they ask increases the value of these observations. If Johnny sees an extra large truck and wants his mother to see it, too, he may follow his remarks with a question, and pause for an answer. It may be a tower truck for repairing power lines, or perhaps a ladder truck going to a fire; or, it may be a moving van such as Johnny has never seen before. Whatever it is, his attempts to learn about it by declaration, exclamation, or question, are checked if he never gets an opportunity to voice his own ideas without interruption.

If the mother and grandmother, of whom we first spoke, had realized what they were doing, they no doubt would have resisted the impulse to interrupt with caresses. It is generally by putting oneself in the place of another that the proper light is shed on a problem. If either of these adults were subjected to a kiss or a hug or a fond squeeze or pat on the face each time they attempted to make a remark, they would soon see that the situation needed correcting.

No matter how long-drawn-out are Johnny's or Pane's first attempts at expression, the understanding parent will listen through to the end. Of course, if a child prattles constantly, in an attempt to monopolize the conversation or to dominate the situation that will need different handling. But in his early efforts to express an idea or to ask a question, full opportunity should be given him to complete his train of thoughts.

THE LIVING CHRIST.

The world cannot bury Christ.
The earth is not deep enough for his tomb;
The clouds are not wide enough for winding sheet.

He ascends into the heavens,
But the heavens cannot contain him.
He still lives—in the church which burns un-consumed with his love;

In the truth that reflects his image;
In the hearts which burn as he talks with them by the way.

NATURE'S VICTORY.

O ice and snow, O frost and cold,
O bitter death, that bound the world!
O biting winds and frozen mold—Farewell!
Ho, land! Ho, living waters, sing!
For God has sent us back his spring!
Hark, how the sylvan voices cry,
Our God is love! Love cannot die!
Sure as the peace that follows strife,
The resurrection's glorious life!

—From The New Hymnal for American Youth.

of their time, prayers and energy to the advancement of the Kingdom in Portsmouth that the church is reaping the results of this fine ministry. Many contacts were made for the church by Mr. Mason, who was civic-minded and found time to be of service to a number of people and organizations.

The Board of Deacons is sponsoring Wednesday evening Lenten services, which are being led by laymen and are well attended.

First Church is without a pastor, but the spirit of the people is good and we are hoping that God will lead the people and the right minister to the place where we may soon again be under the leadership of one who will guide us into paths of greater service.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

HOLLAND.

The young people of the Holland Christian Church are planning with other young people in Holland to conduct a Union Sunrise Service on Easter Sunday morning.

The Holland Pilgrim Fellowship was the guest of the Franklin Pilgrim Fellowship at a supper meeting Sunday, March 23. Following the supper a discussion program was held.

SHALLOW FORD YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Shallow Ford young people are still being called Christian Endeavorers, and still belong to the Alamance County Christian Endeavor Union. They understand, of course, that although they belong to Christian Endeavor, they also belong to the Pilgrim Fellowship.

For the past three months the young people have been proudly displaying a large red and white attendance banner and also a silver cup won for the most points in a point system they have. These were both won at the County Christian Endeavor Rally. Another Rally was held in February and the Shallow Ford group won both the banner and the cup for another three months.

You can see for yourself what this group is doing.

"TEAM WORK."

The "Burlington Team" which consists of the following: Lacala Wilkins, Helen Cobb, Catherine Cooper, and Carolyn Fonville from the Burlington Church; Nash Parker, Bill Scott, Evelyn Moore, and Baxter Twiddy from Elon; and Tessie Zimmerman from Shallow Ford, has visited two churches thus far.

The team visited the Winston-Salem young people one Sunday night when it was literally "pouring rain." This group already had an organized society so the "team" gave them suggestions for worship services, parties, games, etc.

The second visit made by the team was a little harder because the Elon young people did not have an organized group. The "team" outlined the Pilgrim Fellowship work to them and the joy that could come through such work. Since the time of the "team's" visit, the Elon Society has been having successful meetings.

TAKE A STAND.

The qualities one thinks about during a Lenten season are the result of knowing Christ. To be "in Christ" and to "live in the Spirit"—the life which produces these qualities—is to make the decision to believe in that life which revealed God's love. And believing in the highest is to follow loyally that way. Take a stand through faith in him who revealed the truth about God and about life.

To know the Christ is to know that His way is meaningful to you! His way gives the security and significance you crave. His way produces qualities which make living successful. "Take a stand" on that.

The message of Easter is proof of God's indestructible love. To die to selfishness is to grow into a resurrection in that love. To take a stand on that, will produce the evidence of your faith in the risen Christ—the "fruit of his spirit."

Prayer: We are grateful, O God, for the gift of love which overcomes hate, which forgives sin, and which even death cannot hinder. We thank thee that through the risen Lord we have been made new. Amen.—(The above is taken from Lenten Devotions for Young People by Rev. Henry R. Rust.)

STUDENT SUMMER SERVICE.

There are opportunities, almost numberless ones, for all young people to have a good time this summer—a good time in learning, a good time in serving, a good time in helping.

The Congregational Christian SSS—Student Summer Service—gives you the chance to learn by doing. Every summer young people from our churches all over the United States are SSS workers, helping in local churches wherever they are called upon to do so. Working with Daily Vacation Bible Schools is the greatest part of this opportunity. If you are hesitant about entering this work during the coming summer months, remember that before you go out into the "field," you are given a period of training to help prepare you for your "Service" work and all the materials you will need.

SSS is not only for those who are planning to enter full-time Christian service as their life-work. It is for all young people of college age who want to be full-time Christians—in whatever work they plan to enter.

Traveling expenses and provisions for room and board are taken care of, and you also receive an amount for your own use. If you would like something to do this summer which will pay you well in money—do not sign up for Student Summer Service. But if you would like to give of your yourself, receive a profit of experience and the satisfying knowledge that you have helped in the building of the Kingdom—write to the Southern Convention Office for more information. I shall be glad to hear from you and to help you in your decisions.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 33:12-22.

A Goodly Young Man.

This man Saul, the first king of Israel, started well enough. He was a goodly man, big, strong, durable. He was built like a king—he stood a full head higher than his fellow-countrymen, and that gave him a commanding appearance and a look of authority. He was a good-natured, likable fellow, undoubtedly quite popular with his friends. He was modest and humble in a good sense, and remained so for the early years of his life. But later he became a victim to the lust for power and this was one of the factors in his tragic downfall. Saul had a good family background, too. His father was a mighty man of valor, a member of the tribe of Benjamin. If ever a young man started out in life with great promise it was Saul, the son of Kish.

Looking for a King.

The Israelites wanted a king, like the other nations. In one sense it was a case of keeping up with the Joneses, and as is so often the case when folks try to do this, they get into trouble. But another way it was natural and legitimate. Thus far the Israelites had been a group of loosely-grouped tribes, ruled by men who were called judges. They needed some outstanding personality around whom they could rally and who could weld them into a nation and deliver them from their enemies. In one of the accounts in Samuel it appears that the people sinned against Jehovah in asking for a king, in another they seem to fulfill the divine plan. Although he thought it was a denial of Jehovah's leadership and at first opposed it, Samuel became convinced that Jehovah had spoken to him, and he represented Jehovah as the anointing authority.

Life's Unexpected and Unsuspected Turns.

There are so many instances of the unexpected and unsuspected turns of providence, but there is hardly any that is more intriguing than the way in which this young man Saul, looking for his father's asses that had gone astray, found a kingdom. Readers of these Notes well remember the story of how, with his father's servant, Saul went out to look for some asses that had strayed away. He looked far and wide but never found them. But by a strange and sure providence he was guided to Samuel, the leader of Israel, who by the same sure and strange providence, had been prepared for his coming, and who made known to him that "the eyes of all Israel" were upon him, and that Jehovah had laid his hand upon him to be the king of his people, and in his stead. Life has much romance in it, but we are all too often bound up in, or bounded by the commonplace, so that we do not see it. Opportunity knocks more than once at a man's door, but it is undoubtedly true that sometimes special knocks come when large issues are at stake.

A Good Beginning.

Saul manifested several good traits at the beginning of his rule. He showed courage and initiative when marauding bands of enemies came up and ravaged his people's lands. He forthwith called together a band of men and defeated the gangsters in convincing fashion. He undoubtedly had powers of leadership and a magnetic personality.

He also showed a fine spirit of magnanimity toward those who opposed him and later fell into hands. "Certain worthless fellows" despised Saul and said that they would not have him rule over them. They despised him and brought him no present, which in those days was quite an insult indeed. When later he came to power, some of his associates suggested that these insulting and insurgent men be put to death. But displaying a spirit of magnanimity that was later missing from his character, and one that is all too often lacking in our modern world, Saul graciously and generously forgave the men and set them free. One of the outstanding characteristics of Lincoln, one of the marks of his true greatness, was his spirit of magnanimity.

Gathering Shadows.

Alas, the young man who was such a godly young man and who started so well, soon fell on evil ways. A spirit of jealousy began to manifest itself and it gradually grew until it became as a monster in his life. It led him on several occasions to attempt to take the life of David who was one his court attendants. Jealousy is a deadly and sinister force in the human heart. It blinds a person and blights all of life.

Then Saul became intoxicated with power. Not content with the powers as king he usurped the powers of the priest. He offered sacrifice in defiance of the divine law. To us it might seem like a small thing, but in the light of the day in which he lived and the divine plan, it was an evil thing to do.

Finally he became openly disobedient to the will of God. He had been commanded to slay utterly the Amalekites, both people and possessions, but he saved Agag the king and the best of the spoil. Furthermore he lied, or tried to lie to Samuel about the whole matter. Unfortunately the sheep bleated and the oxen lowed at a most inopportune time and his sin was revealed. In stern and shaming words Samuel told him that he had forfeited his right to rule and that he had been rejected by God. From that time on, he was a doomed and defeated man.

The Final Tragedy.

The final tragedy was enacted on Mount Gilboa where Saul's sons were killed and where he himself died at his own hand. He had gone into the battle half-hearted for, alas, the spirit of God had gone from him. He had sinned away the day of grace. He had been disobedient to the heavenly vision. He had benumbed his conscience. He had refused to listen to the still small voice. His heart had become hardened and his life ended in dark tragedy. If ever there was one man who could be listed among "those who might have been" it was Saul.

Let Him That Readeth Take Heed.

"Whatsoever things were written aforehand were written for our instruction." The story of Saul is one of God's "Stop, Look, Listen" signs to every one of us.

CHRISTIANS TRAVEL EMERGENCY CLASS TODAY.

A Missionary Sermon

By REV. JAMES E. WALTER.*

"And straightway they followed him.—Mark 1:18.

The Gospel according to St. Mark belongs to our generation in a unique way. The key word to the tempo of Mark is the Greek word euthus, meaning now, at once, straightway. On forty-two occasions Mark uses the whip phrase of straightway, immediately, at once. It is a Gospel of action. God's message of redemption has urgency. The early record grows out of marvelous discoveries. People saw God revealed in Christ. Wrong thoughts were cast out. Devils of temptation were conquered. Deeds of mercy wrought.

Mark was the youngest of the disciples. His youthful heart responded with vigor and zest to the winsome life of Jesus. Like every whole-hearted disciple, Mark was eager to share his new-found joy. He was a witness. He saw things happen with speed. Jesus called Simon and Andrew to become fishers of men, "And straightway they followed Him . . . and when Jesus had gone a little further, He saw James, the son of Zebedee, and John, his brother . . . and straightway He called them. . . . They went into Capernaum; and straightway on the Sabbath day He entered into the synagogue, and taught."

Combined with the force and momentum of the Gospel of Mark is the refreshing brevity of a business man's letter. The whole Gospel can be read in two hours. It is also a book of primary value as a historical document. Its material is basic to Matthew and Luke. But we are concerned essentially with the note of urgency, and the sense of emergency. "Now is the hour of salvation." Individuals and nations must accept anew the principles and teachings of our Saviour and Lord, Jesus Christ. The growth of Christian civilization depends on the ability of people to transform days of danger by the grace of God into new opportunities.

The missionaries of the Cross are the ambassadors of Christ in the areas that represent danger and the greatest opportunities. Along with Dorothy and Dick Jackson, Gertrude and Arthur Rinden sailed from San Francisco last December for China. The following sentences from Mrs. Rinden's letter provide a frame for the thought of this sermon. "The Church is not dead. If you could be here this minute suspended from the ceiling by iron ropes in an upper bunk, into which you crawled over two baby pens, if you could see the dozens of young mothers around me here in this section of Hatch No. 5 where there are 108 of us, you would agree. The slogan, 'The Church Is Not Dead,' really belongs to Betty Thelin, another missionary of the American Board en route to China to help her husband do agricultural work. She said it again and again as we went through our first meal. When our aluminum trays were filled, and we sat down in the midst of crowded decks, she looked around at all the wonderful faces of famous people who have lived in China and said, 'The Church is not dead when these people will endure this.' As for myself, I haven't a complaint. We are feeling fine. Edaik is so happy. Just now a farewell speech from Foreign Missions Conference is coming into the Hatch over the radio. We can just hear it over the many babies crying. Words like 'God speed . . . High purpose . . . Keep in mind the aim for which you go . . . ' The young mother below me is giving her baby orange juice. Edaik is caring for three babies at once. Dorothy Jackson is superb. She is helping everybody all the time. We are Emergency Class missionaries. In 1847 it was the pioneer missionary. In 1947 it is the emergency missionary. Thank God the Church is not dead."

I thank God, too, that believers in the United States make it possible for adventurous Christian like the Jacksons, Rindens, and 1,800 other ambassadors of the Cross, to resume their work as witnesses of the living Christ in the Orient this year. The needs are greater than ever for practical expressions of abundant living.

Secular publications, as well as the religious press, remind us regularly of the dangers inherent in the atomic bomb. Yet the bomb itself is exceedingly difficult to explode. The only explosive and dangerous element is the selfishness and ignorance of man's mind. Correcting misunderstandings and enlightening the spirit of people presents the major problem of our age. The Church of Jesus Christ has the know-how of creating an atmosphere of good will. Only when men accept the principles of love and peace for themselves and for nations can we hope to have an abiding world order in which all people are happy. Our missionaries overseas are devoted exclusively to the King's business of building brotherhood and good will among all people. Through schools, hospitals and churches, the unselfish spirit of Christians finds tangible demonstrations.

Biologists remind us that there are dangers even greater than the atomic bomb. Two young men in the Government's biological service reminded me recently that the weapons of pestilence and famine are a much greater threat against the welfare of mankind. The boomerang dangers are too great to risk their use. God forbid that we may ever be tempted to destroy others and ourselves by releasing vials of infection. The mission of the Church is to feed the hungry, heal the sick, visit the lonely, and extend the redemptive spirit of Christ to all of God's children.

When a man is desperately ill and hungry, the first task of a Christian is to heal his wounds after the manner of a good Samaritan. Giving him a meal is essential. More important is the task of helping him re-establish his business so that he can earn his own bread, pay for his own physician, and take his full place in the society of healthy people. The missionaries of the Cross constantly representing us on all of these frontiers during these days of world crisis. Our money is translated into packages of food. Our gifts of modern medicine are administered with skillful and consecrated hands. Dr. Edward C. Riggs has already written us of the overwhelming opportunities for Christian medical service in Shaowu.

When the 5,000 were hungry, straightway Jesus fed them with loaves and fishes. Our Lord responded to human need. Likewise, many of His followers have given generously to feed empty stomachs.

Several years ago a high school youth sat in the last row of one of my classes on missions. There were 120 in the group. I did not notice him especially until on the second day, when a Chinese college teacher brought us a testimony on the essential place of Christian education in his own life.

As Donald Hsueh electrified and amused the young people with his experiences at Foochow College, I watched the lad in the back row with

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

I am taking the liberty of publishing the following letter:

March 21, 1947.

Dear Brother Johnston:

Find enclosed check for $25.80 from the Randleman Christian Sunday School, which is a special offering taken for the Orphanage. We understand you are making some improvements, and wanted to have a part in anything you do.

Yours in Christ,
W. G. Lamb,
P. O. Box 95,
Randleman, N. C.

It is very encouraging to receive letters like this one. It shows such a cooperative spirit, and comes at a time when we need financial assistance. To make the necessary repairs on the buildings which the Board of Trustees instructed the Superintendent to make, when everything in the way of paint, materials, and everything we will have to use is so high, letters like the above with a nice check enclosed are highly appreciated.

We wonder if we don't have many churches and Sunday schools that want to see the Orphanage a very beautiful institution, and are interested enough to back up their interest with a check to help us make it an institution that we will all be proud to visit. It is going to take a lot of money to make the improvements contemplated. I really believe that we do not have a church in the entire Southern Convention that could not make a special offering to help us bear this extra expense. We will appreciate special checks, large or small. Back up your interest with a check like the letter quoted above. This is what counts.

The Board of Trustees had the misfortune of losing another faithful member in the death of Mrs. Henry C. Simpson, on Saturday, March 22. Mr. Simpson met with the Board the first time in June, 1912, and has remained a member of the Board since that date. He was faithful to attend the meetings of the Board and was always interested in the work of the Orphanage in all its undertakings. In his death the Orphanage feels keenly its great loss.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

closed eyes. Was he ill, sleepy, or what? After class I inquired. He surprised me by saying that he couldn't stand the sight of a Chinese. It made him sick to his stomach. Therefore, he had to close his eyes. In his childhood someone had frightened the boy by saying that Chinese laundrymen chopped up little white boys and made stew out of them. The fears of that high school boy were converted into faith during that week of Summer Youth Conference. His suspicion was changed into a new sense of Christian brotherhood. First, he prayed and experimented by opening his eyes, as Mr. Hseuh spoke on the third day. Later he shook hands with him. Finally, on the last day of the Conference, he sat next to the Chinese teacher at dinner. Knowing him in these ways grew into friendship.

During the war, I received a letter from China. It began: "You probably don't remember me. I am the fellow who couldn't look at a Chinese speaker at the Youth Conference in Connecticut." Oh yes, I remembered him! How could one forget his conversion! The writer went on to say: "I am a pilot in the U. S. Army now on duty in China. Conditions over here are very rough. Old people and children in particular are desperate. Believe it or not, I am supporting two Chinese orphans out of my own pay. Naturally, I'm risking my life, too, in their defense, and wishing that I could do more for them. Guess that's about the clearest way I can tell you how much that Summer Youth Conference meant to me."

What more can any disciple of Christ do! "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend." The simple sharing of food satisfied the hungry stomachs of Chinese orphans, and filled a flyer's sense of mission with a great new purpose. His heart was overflowing with joy. Like other faithful followers of our Lord he found the abiding song of life. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me."

Another kind of straightway Christian service is brought to the sick by our nurses and medical missionaries. Comfort and relief from ravaging diseases are quickly and easily understood by all people. The desire to be well is universal. Every parent in Africa, Asia, Europe, and the United States, wants all of the family to enjoy physical and mental strength. I pray God that the day may be hastened when every parent might be equally concerned about the spiritual health of himself and all of his family.

Aches and sores are obvious signs that something is wrong. The most primitive person feels gratitude toward the man who relieves the pain and heals the sore. These human responses are the gates of God for opening lives to the spirit of our Lord and Master. Sometimes church members question the importance of carrying the Gospel to people who have a long-established religion. "Why isn't their own religion all right for them?" My best reply is the report of a missionary from Foochow, China.

Tuberculosis, dysentery, and bubonic plague were cutting down hundreds of people every day. The Buddhist priests folded their arms, as they stood in a high tower overlooking the city, and chanted "Evil spirit go away; evil spirit go away; . . ." They chanted their prayer all day long. The people continued to perish all day long. Obviously this kind of religion that did nothing about the ravages of disease, did not compare favorably with the health radiated by the medical missionaries and Chinese co-workers at Foochow Union Hospital.

A Christian lady, Dr. Laura Dyer, quietly went to work in the spirit of the Good Samaritan. In her hands were modern medicines. In her heart was a Christ-like yearning to be helpful. Lives were saved. Sick patients became well. The plague was arrested. Straightway the healed people asked: "Why does she do it? Why doesn't she go home to America where there is plenty of food?" Doctor Dyer told them that Christians in America supported her work because the teachings of Christ made the whole world a single neighborhood. The Chinese were eager to learn about the Christ, whose spirit they saw in Dr. Dyer. Their little church was overflowing, not only once on Sunday but several times. We work and pray for the day when Christians in all parts of the world are eager to respond to human need with their best talents, straightway.

Building churches, educating evangelists, and teaching the Bible, are additional ways in which the Church of Christ has followed the leadings of the spirit. Here again, we who remain at home need to board the train of thought that carries us with speed in Emergency Class. Filipinos have lost their churches in defending their freedom, and ours. Can we do less than help them rebuild their altars and Houses of Prayer? Under the fire of battle whole communities practiced defensive measures of scorched earth. They gave houses and fields for a great cause. Can any Christian be at ease in his soul without making a sacrificial gift for the rebuilding of these churches lost during the war? One of our missionaries from the Philippine Islands reported that 80 Evangelical rural churches were totally destroyed. About $500 would buy the materials for a new church building. Men and women of the parish would do the work. Another $100 would buy a new organ.

Ministers who once were in self-supporting churches need financial help for a few years. Congregations are scattered. Industry has been demolished. Ministers of the Gospel need our support straightway. The Filipino people are doing more than their share. Are we? An elaborate list of projects for Shaowu, China, appeared on the back page of the March 13 issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Many people are converting their war bonds into peace bonds. Nobody wants another war. Few people know how many bonds are in their possession. Could you enter Heaven today if Saint Peter required you to tell exactly how many United States Government Bonds were in your name? If not, why not give one! You will feel better after sharing substantially in the reconstruction of churches and damaged hospitals. You will discover for yourself a new religious faith, as you share in the healing of the nations. God has no other hands than the ones we offer. The Gospel of redeeming love calls us to follow our Lord into the pathways of human need straightway.

Be it resolved:

1. That the church has lost a beloved and most faithful, dear friend.
2. That the church has for several years missed her physical presence in that service she once gave it, but even though she was unable to attend church for several years, she was most interested in its welfare at all times, and shed the benediction of her prayers and love for its every advancement.
3. That in the many organizations of which she was a part, carrying her burden and sharing her toil, filling each moment with her prayers, she has been deeply missed and has been a great loss to them all.

IS EASTER JUST EASTER?

By James W. Fifield, Jr.

All Easters do not have the same significance. To be sure the triumph of our Lord is at the heart of them all, but because the needs of humanity vary and because the circumstances of our world change, some Easters have special importance.

Easter 1947 may be such an Easter.

Hope is at low ebb in many quarters of our planet. There has been staggering loss of life in the war. There are the millions of wounded, whose bodies will always bear a continuing reminder of war's unspeakableness. There are the devastated areas. There are the broken hearts and broken homes and broken dreams. There are the depleted physical resources and the empty treasuries of nations. There are the smaller nations which have lost their independence if not (yet) their identity. Alas!

But Easter puts all these frustrations and fears in a different perspective—an eternal perspective, with the promise of divine justice, mercy and love. It is a time for each of us to renew our personal faith and a time for each of us to rededicate ourselves.

Such dedication means different things to different people. To some it means renewal of faithful, daily, personal prayer. To some it means an exploration of the New Testament to discover the will of God for us. To some it means the reorganization of personal programs, activities, habits and attitudes. To others it means a declaration of faith and uniting with the church of our choice. To all of us it means bestowal of a fit symbol to seal our vow and covenant, in the Easter Offering of our church. For the widow that means a mite. For someone of wealth that should mean at least ten thousand dollars. For the rest of us, it will mean amounts in between—at levels determined by our own prayerful thought.

Easter 1947 must be such an Easter.

World trends are serious and our stake in them is great. For ourselves and especially for our children and grandchildren, we must put ourselves and our resources against rising Godlessness, communism and sin. We shall remember the power of God to dispel the shadows of Good Friday—the darkest day in human history—with the brightness of His resurrection morn. So shall it be again! Our civilization is not beyond redemption. Such shall be the witness of every church and every believer during Holy Week, 1947—not just another Easter but a unique Easter in which the Glory of God fills our minds and hearts through Christ Jesus, our Risen Lord.

I Want to be a Missionary

By Marianna Nugent

A Volunteer for Foreign Missionary Service

Deliver me from the black-garbed "brother" patting heathen sanctimoniously on the head—but I want to be a missionary. How would you define mission? It has little to do with the way I intend to use my hands and my brain in a specific vocation. I would say that it means a basic life purpose, a very deep driving force that I want to have behind everything I do with my hands and my brain.

I wish I were thousands of people. I want to be in China, rebuilding ruined universities, taking care of orphans. I want to be in Russia, helping separated families to get together again. I want to be in Tokyo today, stopping the suicides, telling people that there are still great causes to live for, and love and happiness to make life endurable. I want to be in American homes with gold stars in their windows, somehow empowered to help people understand what Jesus meant by saying, "I am the resurrection and the life."

"Missionary" means literally "one who is sent." Sent by whom? I cannot think of myself as going as a representative from people who have found the right way of living, to people who have not found it; atomic bombs and Jim Crow make that idea choke me. If I use the word missionary at all, I must see it in utter, utter humility, as a person who is alive through the terrible sacrifices of other human beings.

All of us are sent. There is no such thing as a Christian who is not a missionary. All of us have divine commissions sacred and obligatory.

We are sent by the millions who have been killed in the world's wars. We are sent by the millions who go hungry now while we are fed; who go cold now while we are warmed; who go ignorant while we are taught. These conditions and the attitudes that brought them about are the results of our estrangement from God. The bitter cries of these people rise up to God. It is God who causes us to hear. He commissions us to speak in His name, to speak of His love that has been snuffed from the lives of millions who have suffered because of "man's inhumanity to man." When once we see that face and realize what it means, it will drive us onward. It will be like fire in us, whipped by the wind of heaven into a great, consuming love for God and His children.

PROTESTANT FREEDOM.

Self-regulation is the law of the Protestant. Nobody, priest or pastor, has a right to give orders or commands.

This does not mean freedom from duties and tasks. Self-regulation is a serious adjustment rather to the ideals and hopes which are strong within us.

Lenten devotions are not compulsory. They are elective. Church attendance is not compulsory. It is advised.

The Protestant is a witness for freedom, a participant in the fellowship, a believer in the salvation which comes through faith in the love of God as expressed through Jesus Christ.

Lacking an external authority to provide for his daily religious life, a Protestant may either become gradually detached from any religious exercise, or he may become an energetic advocate of a spiritual discipline which is at one time both thrilling and profound.

Authority is not necessary for justice and righteousness if it is a compulsion from without. As a matter of fact, justice and righteousness suffer when only motivated from external sources. But when great living is the result of the inspiration of the soul, the earnest desire of the individual, the loyal fellowship becomes a power for both justice and righteousness in the community.

Democracy could never get far if it was built upon legalisms and statutes alone. Religion may contribute its ample share to the strength of that nation who will earnestly seek a people who are prompted to act voluntarily with high and unselfish motives.

Social life will never be redeemed until voluntary regulations are fully as important as law.

In the matter of prayer, there can be no compulsion, either. Prayer as routine is ghastly and futile, but prayer as delicate adjustment between the divine and the human is sweet and helpful.

CONSECRATION OF INFANTS.

The privilege was accorded me on the fifth Sunday of March to christen the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard W. Gerringer, who are members of the Berea Congregational Christian Church near Elon College, N. C. This couple had their other children christened in previous years. They feel, along with the others to whom was bestowed direct responsibility for the spiritual and moral instruction of the child, that through these services they bind themselves closer to the task of Christian nurture of the child than they would otherwise. Through having their children christened, they are setting an example that I, as one interested in the Christian instruction of children, affirm wholeheartedly.

The service of Christening and consecration of children is pursued with but little diligence in our Congregational Christian Churches here in the Southern Convention. It is a practice of which few parents avail themselves. One reason for ignoring this service by so many may be due to

WHAT OF CHILDREN'S DAY.

This year's service will be The Children's Praise, prepared by Grace McGavran. It is arranged in scenes, one for each age group: Kindergarten, Primary, Junior, and Intermediate. It gives an idea of the work and worship enjoyed during the year in each department or group. It may be used just as it appears in print, or any scene may be altered, more nearly to fit the year's work in a particular church. Secure from the Missions Council, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y. It is free to any church giving its offering for Student Summer Service, and will be ready late in April.

FOR YOUR CHURCH SCHOOL.

This, we believe, is it! A new course of study which is thoroughly graded, but which has a central theme for each quarter to give unity to the work of the entire church school. Attractive booklets for the pupils of all ages to be taken home with pride. Direct, simple teaching suggestions equally usable in the one or two or twenty room church. Everything the teacher must have within the covers of the teacher's edition and the pupil's book. An interesting all-church activity each quarter to add zest and purpose to the program. An appropriate set of visual materials and of records for those churches who can purchase them. This, we believe, is what our church school leaders have been looking for—the Pilgrim Series.

Have you felt the need of having more great occasions when young and old might participate in great interesting events? The Bible Exhibit, which is part of the course for the junior high school age, The Most Important Book in the World, may become a project which captures the interest of the entire community. Further details are given in the Manual which will be supplied free to pastors.

If yours is a small school and it is necessary for several departments to worship together, would you be interested in carefully planned worship materials related to the general theme of the quarter? If so, you will want to use the worship leaflets which contain everything needed except the words of some of the hymns. There will be one service for each Sunday. One of the values of these Pilgrim Services of Worship leaflets is that they may be taken home and used there also. They come in packets of five sets and the price for a packet of five copies of each of the thirteen services is 75c.

A film-strip of sixty excellent pictures has been prepared for this quarter's use. It is called the Story of Our Bible and will be useful through the years for many purposes. It makes vivid such facts as these: how the Bible serves our times, how the early Bible stories were transmitted and preserved, the beginnings of the New Testament, the story of the translations, and why the Bible is the most important of books. It can be used at the teachers' meetings, at indicated points in the classes, and at a public meeting in connection with the Bible Exhibit. The price is three dollars.

The very youngest grades will continue to use the Little Pilgrim Lesson Pictures and the Pilgrim Bible Stories. The other courses are newly printed: for grades three and four, The Lord's Prayer, by Gertrude Sheldon; for juniors, Using Our Bible, by Ruth Worthington; for the junior high school age, The Most Important Book in the World, by Mrs. Josephine Z. Nichols; for young people, These Men Knew God, by Professor A. Graham Baldwin; for adults, How to Use the Bible, by Rev. Paul S. McElroy.

And there is one great group of people included, who have been too long forgotten, the large number of adults who do not come to church school and probably cannot. We ought to add thousands of these people to our home departments. For them, an attractively printed and interestingly written new quarterly is now available, The Pilgrim Home. In each issue the Uniform Lessons and daily readings are written by someone who understands their needs—for the autumn quarter by Rev. Harding W. Gaylord. In addition to 52 pages of this material, each issue has 28 pages of articles. The autumn number includes: "Neighbors at Your Door," "One People's Children," "I've Retired," "Aunt Beth," "Glimpses of Home Life in Hawaii," a Bible Quiz, and many short items. The price is twenty-five cents per quarter.

All of the new courses and supplementary material will be ready this summer. They have been prepared under the direction of the Division of Christian Education with the cooperation of the Pilgrim Press. The Pilgrim Series is recommended to the churches by the Curriculum Committee of the Congregational Christian Churches. Information about it may be had from your state director of religious education, Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Elon College, N. C., or from the Pilgrim Press. All materials should be purchased from the Pilgrim Press.

DO YOU KNOW THE INTER-COLLEGIAN?

The Intercollegian, a monthly magazine, has long been one of the most largely read publications in the student field. Its official publishers are the National Intercollegiate Christian Council and the Student Volunteer Movement. The editor is John Oliver Nelson whose flair for attractive writing and editing was demonstrated in the "Ministry for Tomorrow" series which he has produced for the Federal Council's Commission on the Ministry. Intercollegian, the official publication of the Student Christian Movement, is the logical organ for our Student Fellowship which is part of that student movement.

Beginning in the March issue of Intercollegian, we are to have a full page for Student Fellowship program and news. "Gerry" Rice, student at Wellesley College, is our News Editor and is assisted by nine Regional News-Gatherers. In addition to the full page on the Student Fellowship you get:

1. Excellent articles by such writers as Walter Horton, Nels Ferre, Edwin Aubrey, Clifton Fadiman, Edward Murrow (to name a few from recent issues).
2. Information on home and foreign missions and opportunities for service, full-time and summer.
3. News of the World's Student Christian Federation and our own American Student Movement.
4. A page of worship material.
5. Interpretations of the Christian Faith by students and leaders.
6. Program material for the Christian Association as well as the church student group.

All for $1.00 a year! Be sure all new subscriptions are marked: "Congregational Christian." Send to: 347 Madison Avenue, New York 17, New York.

POST RESURRECTION COMMAND.

"As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." This is the commission of the risen Christ. The disciples who were present in the upper room, and their spiritual descendents, have implemented the commission. The risen Christ continues to carry on his saving work through his human messengers by the power of the divine Spirit. Countless Christians made their Easter offering for Missions in the spirit of Christ. These multiplied offerings give tangible expression to the Easter Hope.

Here is a letter from one "sent." Richard Jackson writes: "We are beginning to get settled now after a long trip and to get a bit of rest. Everyone is being kind to us. The problems are great, so great we almost hesitate to tackle them. The filth, poverty and disease, as well as the pagan superstition, are beyond description. Medicine men flourish. The ministers and loyal Christians here are consecrated and present a great hope for the future." We rejoice that we have such a faithful and efficient representatives at Shaowu.

This is no time to abandon our missionary study and giving. Our Convention period of missionary emphasis continues through June. Failure to continue our missionary efforts now would be a denial of the Easter imperative. At the conclusion of his great treatise on immortality, St. Paul issues this arresting challenge: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

SERVANT OF THE ISLES.

In one of the magnificent Servant Passages, Isaiah 42:4, it is stated that "The isles shall wait for his law." The Servant whom God has chosen has a great work to do, and for it is prepared by having the divine spirit put upon him. His missions is to carry judgment to the Gentiles. He is to do this in quietness, by the operation of gentle, spiritual influences. He is to be very careful not to quench any little wavering burning light of faith among the Gentiles. He is not to be discouraged, but wait patiently until God's law is established on the earth, even the isles.

In its original context, it appeared presumptuous, almost absurd. And yet, how gloriously this prophetic insight was fulfilled in the blessed ministry and continuing influence of Christ! The isles, the isles, thank God, hear his voice, learn his law, and acknowledge his rule.

Major attention has been given to the influence of Jesus on the nations or continents. It is probably natural that his importance for the islands has been minimized. A second World War was necessary to alert our attention to the importance of islands. If they are important as military bases, they are no less strategic in spiritual warfare. We need intermediate and advanced bases for Christianity. Henry P. Van Deusen wrote convincingly on "They Found the Church." There, yes, there, even on the islands. What a Godsend these missions of mercy were to stranded servicemen! The continuing strategy of ecumenical Christianity must view the islands with all the tender concern of God's chosen Servant.

A decision to establish United Protestant missionary work on Okinawa Island has been unanimously approved by a recently-formed Okinawa Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

The action was described by Rowland M. Cross, secretary of the committee, as a major step toward fulfilling the desire of many Christian leaders both in the United States and overseas to conduct Protestant foreign mission activities on an interdenominational rather than a denominational basis.

Tentative plans call for the sending of a small staff of missionaries and workers to serve as Protestants with no specific denominational label. It is expected that a hospital and a school will be established as soon as possible.

The Okinawa project was first proposed by a small group of native Christians on the island to American chaplains who served there during the war, according to Garland E. Hopkins of Washington, D. C., associate secretary of the Board of Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Church.

Declaring that "there is a religious neutrality and apathy on the isle that is probably unequalled in other places in the world," Mr. Hopkins said that Buddhism and Shintoism were introduced there by the Japanese centuries ago, but seemed to have little impact.

Mr. Hopkins described the island as the "least provided for and the most needy" of any country occupied by the United States.

WHEN IS A PERSON EDUCATED?

When he can look out upon the universe, now lucid and lovely, now dark and terrible, with a sense of his own littleness in the great scheme of things and yet have faith and courage.

When he knows how to make friends and keep them, and above all, when he can keep friends with himself.

When he can be happy alone and highminded amid the drudgeries of life.

When he can look into a wayside puddle and see something besides mud, and into the face of the most forlorn mortal and see something beyond sin.

When he knows how to live, how to love, how to hope, how to pray—and is glad to live and not afraid to die, in his hands a sword for evil and in his heart a bit of song.—Joseph Fort Newton in The Sword of the Spirit.

The Idea of a Denomination

By DR. DOUGLAS HORTON

The Alden-Tuthill Lectures Given at the Chicago Theological Seminary

There was a time when, if I had been asked to discuss the idea of a denomination, I should without further thought have begun from the historical point of view. Later came a long season when the categories of psychology would have offered the most natural point of departure. Today, however, without meaning to cast any question upon these two other methods, to which indeed I shall again and again return, I should like to examine the life of a denomination from the angle of eschatology—which is indeed inclusive both of history and psychology.

The Point of View of Eschatology.

It was apparently from this vantage point that our Lord looked at all life. We owe no little to the critical scholars of the New Testament in these later days for teaching us that Jesus Christ derived his insights into human events and human souls largely from the contemplation of the relationships which would befall at the conclusions of history, when the Father's perfect will would rule. As Professor Rosenstock-Huussy discerningly remarks, "Jesus was the first 'final' man, the first who lived from the end of time back into his own age."

I suppose then that we might frame our question: Will there be any denominations in the resurrection? To a somewhat similar question, asked him by the Sadducees, Jesus made answer: "Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God. For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven."

By this I take it that he meant that in heaven, where the eternities abide and the temporalities vanish, the physical ways through which soul declares its love for soul shall be done away, but not the souls themselves nor yet the love which unites them. John Penry, the Welsh martyr who was put to death by Elizabeth almost exactly 350 years ago, apparently caught Christ's meaning when he signed himself in a letter to his wife just preceding his execution, "Your husband now for a season and your beloved brother forevermore." The question is whether denominations are instruments like marriage, serviceable only "now for a season" or, like the love which informs true marriage, "destined to abide forevermore."

It is not enough to ask in sarcasm whether God could be a Presbyterian or a Congregationalist: He may be both. He may enjoy dual standing—multiple standing. Indeed that must be the case, so far as this world is concerned, if all the communions have His blessing. He must be as much at home with the Holy Rollers as in the ultramontane magnificence of a high mass at St. Peter's. But we are not asking about this world: our question is whether the souls of people here are so dyed by their denominational affiliations that the color carries over into heaven, making something of a spectrum (I won't say spectacle) of the celestial choirs that sing about the sea of glass.

For my own part, I think that denominations belong to time alone. As I grow older, I find the thought of human love and friendship ever more appealing: Heaven would be a most unhappy anticlimax to our life on earth if we were denied these treasures there. I find the line-of-meaning of Christian love continuously rising on the graph of life's momentous matters; but the value of the denominational factor seems to descend. I should expect that at the end of time it should have reached an absolute zero, for the diversity of the communions appears increasingly to hinder rather than enhance the complete understanding and sharing of Christian love which must be the characteristic of the time beyond time. The closer we come to God as He reveals Himself in Christ, the closer we come to each other. Let there be individuality among us by all means—rich individuality for ever and ever—but individual as each may be, let us all be members of the same church! There is everything to be said for apocalypticist's insight that all robes, Baptist North and Baptist South, Dominican and Dutch Reformed, all of them, when washed in the blood of the Lamb, come out one color—white.

The Social Sources of the Denominations.

After all, it is not the goal toward which we are directed that makes us denominationalists. It is a single end toward which our roads converge. It is rather the variousness of our starting points and the routes we traverse that give us diverse communions. The studies made by Professor Richard Niebuhr in this field several years ago illustrates authoritatively, so far as American communions go, how closely denominational lines follow those of the general classes and major groups of our society. If one should desire confirmation of this now generally accepted principle, he should attend mass in a Roman church in a New England town. There he will realize that the Catholic Church in Protestant New England provides to the Irishman in our midst a breath from his native land. It is at once a source and a satisfaction of his nostalgia. Those who know report that one of the main reasons why a large minority of the Presbyterians in Canada did not enter the union of the churches was that they dimly felt it represented a deflection from Scotland and therefore impugned their patriotism. And our denominations are not only the residuary legatees of national loyalties: they are the ecclesiastical phases of other complexes of kinship as well. The Protestant Episcopal Church is still the church of the Cavalier class. The pentecostal churches are fitter than any others beneath our sky to satisfy the migrant and other groups of the social fringe. Each company of us is a part of all we have met, but not many of us have met many who were not of our own class.

The Probable Antiquity of Denominations.

It is for this reason that the term reunion used to describe the grand purpose of the ecumenical movement calls for examination. Christ is one, and represents in himself the principle of the future; but the communions have never been proved with any degree of historical certainty to have been one. There was a time when a small company of disciples followed their Lord in unity of spirit

SUFFOLK LETTER.

My thoughts on Easter were more realistic this year. Since coming to Suffolk I have conducted 489 funerals, and each one of them added something to my faith in God, and my belief in life eternal. Two hundred and forty-one of these were members of the Suffolk Church, the others were—most of them—members of some organization in the church or closely connected with the church through their families.

Just this quarter leading up to Easter I have had the funerals of Col. J. E. West, his brother-in-law, Edwin C. Beale, and C. C. Duke. These three men meant a great deal to our church, each in a different way, but each counted, and counted greatly. Each of them had a real faith in God, and each of them served with credit and honor to their community. I was not only their pastor, but I had known and loved them each as true friends for a good many years.

On Thursday of Holy Week I stood along with other members of the old family circle as they laid to rest the body of my oldest brother, James S. Truitt. He never sought for much for himself. He preferred that his work be kept in the background, but he was ready to give the last full measure of service to others. Forty years of teaching in the public schools was to him a life investment and there will be many who have sat under his instruction and caught his spirit of service to others who will join me in saying he was a good man.

So it was that I came up to Easter with a more firmly fixed faith that our spirits live on, that they go back to God who gave them. It was Sir Wilfred Grenfell who said: "It has been my lot in life to stand by many death beds and to be called in to dying men and women almost as a routine of my profession. Yet, I am increasingly convinced that they never die at all. I am sure that there is no real death. . . . Eternal life is the complement of all my unsatisfied ideals. And experience teaches me that belief in it is a greater incentive to be useful and good than anything I know."

To me belief in eternal life undergirds all our work with the assurance that God will bless it, that there is an infinite God to keep, and to establish, the work of our minds after us; that God will grant unto our spirits life as suitable in after life as that which He has offered us in this beautiful world here. It is such a belief that helps to give one patience, persistence, and joy, in whatever service one may render. Perhaps something of that thinking was in Tennyson's mind as he thought of the Pilot directing his life's voyage here that caused him to prepare the lines that closed with:

"I hope to see my Pilot face to face

When I have crossed the bar."

And most reassuring of all are the teachings of Jesus who showed in all he did and said that there was the Father to whom he would return.

EASTER SERVICES AT ROSEMONT.

Easter Sunday was a great day at Rosemont with all services being attended by large numbers of people. Everybody looked their best and appeared to be feeling their best, and they had good reason to be. The weather man had promised rain for the day, but it turned out to be one of the most beautiful warm, sunny, spring days that I have ever seen. It was a heart-warming experience to see so many people. Every seat was taken at the 11:00 o'clock service and many extra chairs had to be brought into take care of the crowd. It was my first experience in preaching to a full house even on Easter Sunday morning. But of all the sights I beheld during the day I think the loveliest was that of mothers and fathers bringing their babies and young children to Sunday school. And they were a beautiful sight to behold. A total of 384 people attended Sunday school here yesterday.

The day for some of us began about 6:00 A. M., when we got up from our comfortable beds (but not too comfortable to hold us) to prepare for the Easter Sunrise Service at 7:00 A. M. This service was conducted by the young people of the Raleigh Heights Baptist Church, the Portlock Methodist Church, and the Rosemont Christian Church. The service was led by Wayland Andrews; the Scripture was read by Anne Morrison; prayer was offered by Edna Earle Leary; poems were read by Marporie Hassell and Mary Eleanor Voliva; and the address was given by Wayland Andrews. Special Easter music was rendered by the Baptist Youth Choir and also the Rosemont Youth Choir. Donald Lee Liverman, Kenneth Hollowell, Slim Trotman, and Sonny Hodges acted as ushers for the service. Immediately following this very impressive service of worship the young people of the three churches were served a delicious Easter morning breakfast in the Social Hall of the church by a committee of six women, two from each of the three churches: Mrs. Leary and Mrs. Gallup of the Baptist, Mrs. Oscar Pierce and Mrs. J. Hollowell from the Methodist and Mrs. L. L. Milteer and Mrs. T. F. Liverman from the Christian, assisted by a number of others. The young people turned out in large numbers for the worship service and also the breakfast. And it was quite evident from the expressions on their happy faces that they were delighted to be at worship so early and also thoroughly enjoyed the early breakfast together. About 125 young people remained for the breakfast.

The next service was the Sunday school which convened at 9:45 with Mr. W. H. Farrow, superintendent, in charge. It was the day for our special Easter offering. We had been talking about missions, the great need in the world today, and our own particular task in the program, for the past few Sundays, trying to prepare the way for our people to make a worthy response to the great cause on this day. So, uppermost in Mr. Farrow's mind was the $500.00 which we had set as our goal for missions this year. I haven't heard the latest report on our offering for missions, but I feel sure that we will go over the top. Rosemont always does go over the top in whatever it undertakes. And I feel sure that we will not break this good record now or in the future.

The next service was the 11:00 worship service. Here let me put in a word about the very attractive way in which the church was decorated for Easter Sunday. This big job was done by a faithful and hard working committee on Easter flower arrangements consisting of Mrs. Elmo Spencer, Mrs. Merritt Laubach, Mrs. Mary Roland, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. L. L. Milteer and Mrs. T. F. Liverman. The many Easter lilies, the palms, the ferns, the pieces of green branches tie around the chancel rail, the candelabras (one on each side of the pulpit), the six singing canary birds (one to the cage), and last but not least, the Cross hanging in front of the baptismal pool curtain, all of these things were very beautifully arranged in an ideal setting for an Easter morning service. The choir rendered two special selections, "The

DAMASCUS' FIFTH SUNDAY RALLY.

I have spent a total of thirty-two years in North Carolina and Virginia. During this time I visited many of our churches, but not until last Sunday, March 30, did I have the privilege of visiting Damascus Church in the Eastern North Carolina Conference. The occasion was a Fifth Sunday Rally for our churches — Martha's Chapel, O'Kelly's Chapel, Chapel Hill, and Damascus. These four churches have the custom of meeting together on each fifth Sunday for the union service. It is an all day meeting—morning worship, picnic dinner, and an afternoon program. This is a very fine arrangement. It gives the members of these churches an opportunity to know each other, to know something of each church's program and to exchange ideas as to program, procedure, and the work in general.

I was much impressed with the opportunities at Damascus. The grounds were neat and well-kept. The building, though but one room, was clean, attractive and in excellent condition. You had a feeling that those who worshipped there had an interest in and a love for their house of worship. The members of the church and community were good, representative citizens, capable and interested in their church. They were much concerned for the future of their church. They need and are most anxious for a pastor who can give a Sunday morning service.

The program for this particular day was a regular worship service, conducted at 11:00 o'clock. The writer had the privilege of conducting this service and of speaking. Dinner was served on the grounds, and what a dinner! Judging from the tables, even after every one had eaten, the people of this community and the representatives from the other churches know nothing of the scarcity of food. There was a plenty and to spare for everybody.

In the afternoon the Rev. Grieg Ritchie, the retiring pastor, presided. A quartette from Hank's Chapel Christian Church sang two groups of gospel songs, and the Rev. D. P. Barrett, returned missionary of the Southern Convention from Puerto Rico spoke concerning his work while a missionary in Puerto Rico and the hope of the future of the work on the island.

The day was a most pleasant one for everyone present and, I feel, profitable for the churches concerned. Personally, I would like to express approval of the day and the hope that Damascus Church may soon secure a pastor who can give the church a morning preaching service.

BUILDING OPERATIONS TO BEGIN AT ELON COLLEGE.

In 1923 five new buildings were erected on the Elon College campus: Alamance, Whitley Auditorium, Carlton Library, Duke Science, and Mooney Christian Education. These are excellent, modern, fire-proof buildings and are well adapted to a present-day program of instruction in higher education. Since these buildings were erected, there has been no building of a permanent nature erected at the college.

Our instructional facilities are first-class and adequate for a student body of 1,000 but our equipment for physical education, kitchen and dining room accommodations, and living quarters for students and faculty members are entirely unrepresentative and inadequate. We need very badly a heating plant, a gymnasium, a dining room, and four new dormitories. This is a big program, an expensive program, but it also constitutes a great opportunity for every student now enrolled in Elon College and his parents, every member of our church and the friends of Christian Education. Our Expansion Program is a great program, but we have a great constituency interested in and back of this program. It is inspiring to feel that the Expansion Program has really been launched and actual building operations are to begin pretty soon. The contract has been let for two 200-h.p. boilers to be delivered in May. Plans and specifications are being drawn for the new power house, and as soon as they are completed, bids will be received, the contract let, and building operations will begin. We hope to have this new equipment by October of this year, if not before. It is estimated that this particular project will cost a minimum of $100,000. We know that you do not want to see the college go in debt again. You would much rather contribute to keep it out of debt than to contribute to pay debts after they have been accumulated. Please make your check payable to Elon College and make it a generous one. We will need more than $10,000 before next month is gone. Doesn't it sound wonderful?

The alumni are becoming active and optimistic. They have assumed the responsibility for the erection of a new gymnasium as a memorial to the Elon boys and girls who lost their lives in World War I and World War II. They have formed an organization and begun operations to raise a minimum of $250,000 for this purpose. In their enthusiasm they have announced that the ground will be broken for this new building, Alumni Day, Saturday, May 24, 1947. No alumnus will want to miss this great occasion.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We are happy to present a better report this week than last. In fact, last week's report was disappointing and rather shocking—one Sunday school with a contribution of $3.00. This week's report is more encouraging. Eleven Sunday schools and churches with a total of $136.45. Even this amount each week would not total the college's annual apportionment. At the college we are put to unusual expense this spring. We have had to buy two new trucks. The old ones were simply worn out. We are required to lay a water main so as to provide fire protection for the government housing units. The main is now being laid at a cost of some $2,000. All these expenses must be borne by the current fund account. If all of our churches and Sunday schools in the Southern Convention would cooperate in pre-conference offerings for the college, it would certainly help the situation a great deal.

IDEA OF A DENOMINATION.

and at his death found themselves animated by a single desire to bring the whole world to understand and accept him, but that little band can hardly be considered the Visible Church, though they were to become part of it, the leading part of it.

There are two types of organizations: (a) formal, and (b) informal. Every organization is definable as a group of people who are (a) willing to contribute action, (b) to a common purpose, and (c) are able to communicate with one another. When this joint purpose is self-consciously and intentionally shared to the point where some form of government is called for, the organization is formal; but when the purpose, though shared, is accepted by the persons involved without any considered sense of community among them, the organization is informal.

Obviously the company of people whom Jesus called to a new spiritual life were an informal organization. They were the first members of the Una Sancta but they had no sense of organizational solidarity. The definition of the Invisible Church applies to them:

The Church is invisible in respect of the relation wherein the members stand to Christ, as a body unto the head, being united unto him by the spirit of God and faith in their hearts.

When Christ walked the earth, this was the Church. There is no intimation in the Gospels, when carefully read, that he lifted a finger to organize his Church in any formal way. Why should he, or his disciples, in the earliest days, when "the hammer of the world's clock was raised to strike the last hour?"

It is to be noted that this is the kind of organization which his Church still enjoys today. It is one, in spite of the denominations, in the sense that is brought out in the noble declaration of the Edinburg Conference of 1937.

We are one in faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, the incarnate Word of God. We are one in allegiance to him as Head of the Church, and as King of kings and Lord of lords. We are one in acknowledging that this allegiance takes precedence of any other allegiance that may make claims upon us.

This unity does not consist in the agreement of our minds or the consent of our wills. It was founded in Jesus Christ himself, who lived, died, and rose again to bring us to the Father, and who through the Holy Spirit dwells in his church. We are one because we are all the objects of the love and grace of God, and called by Him to witness in all the world to His glorious gospel.

There can be no talk of uniting the Una Sancta: that is one already. We praise God that there are no independent denominations in it, never have been and never can be.

Our consideration of denominations lies wholly within the study of the formal structure of the Church. If Christ formed no such Church, as the records indicate, there was a time between the end of his ministry and the beginnings of the first formal organization when there was in Invisible Church but nothing else. Embodiment, however, is the end of all existence, and is was entirely natural that the Christians should one day bethink themselves of formal organization. It was not until the Invisible Church became Visible that the denominations came into being.

Is it possible to suppose that all the groups in every community which Jesus had visited and to which by that time his disciples had penetrated were caught into a single formal organization? Movements in human history are seldom so nicely packaged. Did our Lord make not a single convert among the multitudes that followed him. Obviously. They knew him but did they know each other? They were related to him but how could they have been related organizationally to each other? What of the man out of whom he cast the legion of devils, who was hidden to go home and tell his friends what God had done for him? What of the many Samaritans who said to the woman of the well, their fellow citizen, Now we believe not because of thy saying but we have heard him ourselves and know that this is indeed the Christ the Saviour of the world? Granted that the critics raise their eyebrows at some of these passages, at his death our Lord must have left behind him many clusters of believers to share their immortal memories of him and to say of God "He is our Father" with a new daring. To think that all of these were swiftly gathered into a single ecclesia acknowledging a single leadership is quite gratuitous. The very fact that we have insistent reference in the New Testament to the apostolicity of particular people seems to argue a division of opinion about them. If, as seems likely, the leadership of the nascent Jerusalem community was for the most part in the hands of James the brother of Jesus and a few others, including Peter, was there no individual or group of people to be found in the same city or in Galilee who preferred their own affectionate recollections of Christ to any given them by these men? To this possibility the reference to contentions in the First Epistle to the Corinthians would seem to point: "I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas." The informal Christian group in every synagogue was a natural nucleus for independent formal organization. We know that controversies between Hellenistic and Aramaic Jews were carried over into the early Church, and all in all it seems to accord not only with the tendency of the records but with our knowledge of human nature to believe that the fact of denominationalism was present at the very start of the formal organization of the Church. We must at least be chary of dogmatizing about that period, and insisting too robustly that we should go back to a union which may or may not have existed. We are on surer ground when we dedicate ourselves to go forward to a union which is as certain as heaven—the union for which even the first Christians in their incipient denominationalism apparently longed—and so preserved the Master's prayer. Ut omnes unum sint!

With Emphasis on Missions

VANCE-WARREN-WAKE-DURHAM MISSIONARY RALLY.

Place—Mt. Auburn Church.

Time—Friday, April 18, 10:30 A. M.

The Vance-Warren and Wake-Durham Missionary Rally will be held at the Mt. Auburn Church in Warren County, Friday, April 18, beginning at 10:30 A. M. (To get to Mt. Auburn, go north from Henderson on U. S. Highway No. 1 to Manson, then turn left on paved road to Drewery which is about three miles, then turn right at Drewery on dirt road and that will take you to Mt. Auburn which is about seven miles from Drewery.)

It was voted on at the presidents' meeting of the Vance-Warren District, held at the Henderson Church Saturday afternoon March 22, that whatever church entertained the rally, to serve the lunch and charge for it. So lunch will be served by the Mt. Auburn Society at a small charge.

I hope all the churches in both districts will send representatives to the Rally whether they have missionary societies or not and help to make it one of the best Rallies we have ever had. And we will surely want to attend, for our guest speaker will be our own Pattie Lee Coghill from Fuller's Chapel Church, near Henderson. I am sure we do not want to miss hearing her tell about her wonderful trip to India and the countries she visited in Europe. So please make your plans to attend the Rally, and see that a group from your society or church attends.

The sessions will begin at 10:30 in the morning and will adjourn at 3:00. Please plan to be there for the opening and stay until the benediction.

Remember the time and place—Mt. Auburn Church, Warren County, Friday, April 18, at 10:30 A. M.

Hoping to see you there.

MARGARET ALSTON, Supt.,
Vance-Warren District.

MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY.

May Fellowship Day comes on May 2. It is the third day sponsored by the United Council of Church Women. "Just as we demonstrate our partnership in prayer on the World Day of Prayer, and our worldwide partnership of active good will on World Community Day, so on May Fellowship Day we demonstrate our partnership in the strategically basic unit of all unity, the community."

The program for this day, on the theme, "The Fabric of Fellowship," may be ordered from the United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. In some cases the State Council of Churches will also carry them. The cost is 10c.

Some societies hold a cooperative meeting with all denominations, which may be in connection with a Council of Churches, and have a sacrificial meal, using the offering for some community project. It would certainly behoove us not to have an elaborate banquet of food, but rather to use our money for things really needed, such as our Committee for War Victims or our Cent-A-Meal plan, in case you don't have community projects.

MISSIONARY SPEAKS AT SHALLOW WELL.

Both Mrs. Jack Campbell, the Chat-ham-Lee-Moore District Superintendent, and Mrs. R. T. Grissom, wife of the pastor and president of the missionary society at Shallow Well, have written concerning the interesting meeting which their society had in January. Dr. John Symington, a practicing physician of Carthage, N. C., was the speaker. Dr. Symington spent three years in India as a Presbyterian medical missionary and twenty-one years afterwards as a doctor in India, but not under the mission board. Although a busy man, it might be that Dr. Symington would visit other churches near Carthage.

Shallow Well joined Turner's Chapel in observance of the World Day of Prayer. There was a good group present, and two readers from each of the societies were used.

BEREA (NORFOLK).

The Ladies Auxiliary of Berea (Norfolk) has had a very successful fall and winter season under the leadership of our president, Mrs. Edna H. Waterfield and her most capable staff of officers for the year of 1946-1947.

They knew of no better way to advance into the opening of our spring season than to have a nice meeting as the one that was planned and held at Berea on Thursday, March 13, 1947. The meeting was an all day session with the most interesting program so well-planned. The morning session was opened with a very interesting devotional conducted by our president. This was such a spiritual uplift to start our day, we all look forward to the inspiration we always receive whenever we have the opportunity to hear her.

After the devotional she presented our speaker for the morning, who needed no introduction as she was one of our very own beloved members of Berea, Mrs. Thelma W. Frost. Mrs. Frost brought us our review of the foreign study book, India At the Threshold. The mission picture and review that Mrs. Frost painted in our minds was the most realistic that we have ever studied. The spiritual inspiration we so gratefully received while listening will live in our memories for months and even years to come.

At the close of this review we adjourned for lunch hour, from 12:30 to 1:30 P. M. This was a most bountiful meal prepared from covered dishes that all members brought for this special occasion of fellowship one with another.

After one of our most enjoyable luncheon hours, our president called our meeting to order for the afternoon session. It was at this session our pastor, Rev. B. H. Watkins, presented the program of missions of our Southern Convention and our auxiliary accepted his recommendation that we give equal or above amount of our apportionment on the over and above mission program of the church. After our business session for the afternoon we adjourned our meeting with a thankful prayer for such a fellowship meeting and for the opportunity in our small way to help our neighbors across the sea to know that Christ is the Light of the world.

RECEPTION AT MT. CARMEL.

A cordial "Get-together" reception was given at 8:00 P. M. on Good Friday to welcome the new pastor into the church, the Sunday school, and the missionary society. The pastor wishes to thank everyone for his or her kind generosity, and for such persistent pledges to uphold the pastor as we work together. May we work together prayerfully as one for the upbuilding of God's kingdom.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

THE SERVICE ROOM AND THE ELF.

"Now a pair of shoes for Hilda." Miss Wilson went to the table that was filled with shoes. "Hilda must be about eight years old now." "Yes, she is," said Mrs. Peterson, as she followed the clerk in the mission church store.

"Several pairs of children's shoes were brought in yesterday. I am sure that one of them will fit your little girl."

Miss Wilson began to look through the shoes. The children's shoes were not to be found. "John," she summoned the boy who helped her. "Do you know what happened to those children's shoes that were brought in yesterday?"

"We put them there with the other shoes," said John as he went to help find them.

Both Miss Wilson and John were unable to find them. "I'm sure that they have just been misplaced, Mrs. Peterson. When I find them I'll be sure to save a pair for Hilda."

"Oh, thank you," smiled Mrs. Peterson. She took up the bundle of clothes that had been given to her before the hunt for the shoes had begun. "Now all of us will be able to come to church again."

"Splendid, Mrs. Peterson. We shall be looking for you!"

When her visitor had gone, Miss Wilson went back to the shoe table. "I just can't understand what's happened to those shoes, let's look once more, John, and see if we can locate them." They both looked everywhere but no children's shoes could they find. "Nothing has ever been taken from this room before; I'm sure that they will turn up somewhere."

Several more women came into the room wanting shoes for their children. "We hope to have some in a day or two," she told each one.

Later, Tommy Hauser came into the "shop," as she often called the service room. He kept looking towards the shoe table. "Can I help you, Tommy?" asked Miss Wilson.

"No, I was only looking. You don't have many pairs of children's shoes in my size, do you?"

"No, Tommy, we haven't just now. Perhaps soon we'll have some. Why, do you need a pair?"

"No, those you gave me are still good. They've been fixed. You see, my dad . . ." Tommy suddenly quit talking without finishing his sentence.

"Yes, Tommy. What about your father?" Miss Wilson was most interested in Tommy's family for they seemed so worthy and took such a great interest in the church.

"Oh, nothing. He's all right. Goodbye." And Tommy was gone before she could ask any more questions.

"That was queer of Tommy to leave so abruptly! But he couldn't have had anything to do with the children's shoes," Miss Wilson thought to herself.

The next morning when she took the cloth off of the shoe table there stood two pairs of children's shoes all mended and freshly shined. "Look here, John! Two pairs of those missing shoes!" she called, holding them up for him to see.

"Well, what do you know about that! They've even got new laces in them. Where do you suppose they came from?"

"It reminds me of the story of 'The Shoemaker and the Elves,'" laughed Miss Wilson. "It will be more fun trying to find out who the Elf is than it was trying to find our missing shoes."

"All of the shoes have not been returned yet. Why can't we watch to see who brings them in?"

John immediately made up his mind to play detective.

"John, how about taking a pair of these over to Mrs. Peterson? You remember, I promised to save a pair for her daughter, Hilda."

"All right, but you be on the watch for the Elf while I'm away."

No Elf came that day. No more shoes were returned. But the next morning when Miss Wilson uncovered the table two more pairs of neatly mended shoes were on the table. "Two more pairs, John," she called.

While John examined the latest returned shoes, Miss Wilson went to unlock the outer door. "Oh, hello, Tommy? What brings you out so early? Can I do anything for you?"

"No'm. I was just . . . oh, nothing." And Tommy ran on down the street, leaving a surprised Miss Wilson behind.

"John, I wonder. Do you suppose that Tommy could know something about the Elf?"

"He's been acting unusually here the past few days. Perhaps he'll bear watching," replied John.

But Tommy did not come back that day to be watched. Not until closing time. A large box of clothing came in just before five o'clock. Miss Wilson and John had taken it into the backroom to unpack it.

"Sh-h-h-h, listen! Someone's in the other room," whispered John. They stopped their work to listen more closely.

Sure enough there was someone in there. They both went to see. As they opened the door a very startled Tommy was found with a package under his arm. "It is Tommy!" Miss Wilson exclaimed.

"Yes, Miss Wilson, I'm bringing all of the shoes back. I didn't really take them. You see, Dad said we'd just borrow them a little while."

"And mend them so beautifully and give them a new coat of polish and some new ties!" Miss Wilson Wilson added gaily. "It was a lovely idea. Only you and your father would have thought of it, Tommy."

"Oh, it wasn't much, Miss Wilson. You see, Dad's got a job now and he wanted to do something to thank you for all that you've done for us. Giving us the shoes and everything when we needed them."

"So that's what you started to tell me about your father," laughed Miss Wilson.

"Yes, and he said any time you had any more that needed mending, he'd be glad to do them for you. He fixes them at night when his day's work is done."

"John, I knew our Elf was working at night for us. This time it's the story about the 'Service Room and the Elf.'"

John laughed as if Miss Wilson had said something funny. Tommy couldn't decide what it was all about but he laughed with them.—Retold from "More Missionary Stories to Tell."

Authentication of Denominational Claims.

Very early Satan must have whispered to these early Christians, "Though there are several groups of churches in existence, yours is the only one which enjoys a direct succession from Christ himself." All must have assumed the necessity for apostolic succession—but in what did apostolicity consist? The group which cherished the Gospel of Matthew evidently traced their descent through Peter and may in the very dawn of ecclesiastical life have felt that it was only those that Peter blessed who possessed the full treasure of apostolicity. At any rate they were the only group who retold for posterity the really astounding story of how Jesus had assured Simon, the "Rock," that he would give him the keys of the Kingdom, so that he could control both heaven and earth. Apostolicity for the author of Acts, however, was apparently not something that could be handed on in external ways but rather a sense of Christian mission which was passed from person to person like a contagion. He therefore had no hesitation in regarding St. Paul as an Apostle. Here at the outset we have a distinction of interpretation which has divided people of Protestant and of Catholic turn of mind ever since. Quot homines, tot sententiae: in their humanity the early sects can hardly have escaped asserting their claims over against each other.

Some sects had a much more powerful weapon for authenticating their claims than any we possess today, for what has become the Scriptural canon still remained in their hands unfixed. That emphases and even embellishments should have been introduced in what had been written but not yet achieved final form, in order to establish certain felt realities, is in the nature of the human case. This principle is everywhere in evidence: we know, for instance, that the dynamic which gave the Gospel its start after the death of Christ was the certainty which filled the hearts of his disciples that he was not dead. To the minds of some, at least, it must have followed inevitably that the tomb of Christ must have been supernaturally opened—and stories of the resurrection at the sepulchre were accepted in all good faith. We are not to think that the grave-stories came first and the sense of the glorified Christ later: quite the reverse is the case, as is made clear from St. Paul, who knew the living Christ but had never apparently heard of the rolling away of the stone. Similarly we are not to think that the men upon whom St. Peter laid his hand in baptism felt themselves to belong to Christ because they had read of the incident in which Jesus had compared Petros to Petra. It was because they felt the new spiritual vigor and stability imparted by the disciples in the name of his Lord that they must as it were have taken it for granted that Jesus had singled him out for endowment with special powers. Innumerable stories compounded of fact and fiction cluster about the memory of every major personality even in our scientific age: Can we imagine that the greatest personality who ever lived would have wrought less upon the imagination of untutored fishermen and rustics? It seems the part of honesty to believe that each school of early Christians must have plucked out of the multiplicity of traditions the anecdotes of Jesus which best authenticated the spiritual experience of the group to which they belonged. The Roman today taunts the Anglican by saying, "You believe yours is the true Church because your orders are valid: we believe our orders are valid because ours is the true Church"—but all of us, Anglicans included, believe that there is power running along the line from Christ to ourselves because something has happened to us spiritually in our denominational fellowship. And if we had the making of the canon, we should have made certain, and without any tincture of malice, that documentary evidence to sustain our claim of relation to Christ was included. But the just claim, when magnified to exclude the claims of others, becomes unjust, and the greatest obstacle to reunion is that "every part of disunited Christendom tends to interpret its past through an image of itself which contains no image of any other and holds fast without repentance to this image."

When now you add the consideration that some of the early groups were doubtless more powerful than others and even that one may have been sufficiently influential to determine exactly what should go into the Scriptures, you have a reason why the New Testament may seem to hark back to a single organized koinonia of believers—but you have no assurance that there were not other pristine denominations which, though less literary, were not necessarily less Christian than those who set forth their point of view in Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, and the other canonical books.

The denominations, ancient and modern, are the best attempts Christians have been able to make to reduce the informal Church of the Spirit to formal organization. They have at various times and in various places between them captured everything of the Una Sancta but unity—and deep in the heart of every communion of Christians is the knowledge that until this last attribute is won they cannot be The Church. They therefore live in the midst of paradox: they recognize that they are the best expressions of the Visible Church that ever existed. Modern denominations can say that they have brought the Church into a strength and power in the Twentieth Century that it has never known before throughout its entire history. But at the same time they remember the need for unitedness and have to acknowledge that when final union is achieved they themselves shall cease to be. They are therefore seen to belong in the self-contradictory zone in which most human institutions grow. As we pay our police force in the hope that thanks to their efforts there will some day be less need for a police force; as we devote ourselves as a nation to putting down nationalism; as the best class of people utilize the privilege their class gives them to prove that classes are transiently necessary calamities—so the denomination which most accords with the mind of Christ is the one which is most intent on losing its life in a larger whole. If the various communions do not build the unity of the Church, the work will not be done, for they are at once the only masons and the only ashlar for the edifice. That edifice, however, is their tomb—but it will be the tomb not of the dead but of the risen and living.

(To be continued.)

If from my spy-hole, looking with purblind eyes upon a least part of a fraction of the universe, I yet perceive in my own destiny some broken evidence of a plan, and some signals of an over-ruling goodness, shall I then be so mad as to complain because all cannot be deciphered? Shall I not rather wonder, with infinite and grateful surprise that in so vast a scheme I seem to have been able to read, however little, and that little encouraging to faith?

THE KINGDOM STRENGTHENED AND ENLARGED.

LESSON III—APRIL 20, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: David waxed greater and greater; for the Lord, the God of hosts was with him.—II Samuel 5:10.

LESSON: I Samuel 18:20; II Samuel 5:1; I Kings 2:11.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 28.

A Gifted Man.

When God endowed David, He was very liberal with him, and made him a man of many talents. He was, first of all, a handsome fellow, quite striking in appearance, healthy, hale, and hearty. To be sure beauty is only skin deep and is by no means the mark of manhood or womanhood. But all other things being equal, good looks are an asset. A handsome man or a pretty woman has an asset in life which gives him or her an advantage over a person who is homely and ugly. But here as elsewhere beauty is a stewardship. It involves responsibility, and it is often fraught with peril.

David was also a musician. He played a harp and he also sang. In fact he was called the sweet singer of Israel. He must have been quite an artist with the harp for he played at the royal court of Saul, and as a rule only the top-notchers appear before royalty. It is a thing for which to thank God if one can play or sing, if one has any musical ability. What a ministry of helpfulness and inspiration one can render if he can play or sing. Here again musical ability, like any other gift is a sacred stewardship. All too many Christians are not good stewards of their musical ability, both because they do not develop it, and because they prostitute it to unworthy ends.

David was a poet of the first rank. It should go without saying that he did not write all the Psalms in the Bible—in fact it is specifically so stated. But it is true that he did write a number of them, and they belong to the world's immortal literature. Here is poetry put to the highest uses, devoted to religious ends. Thank God for the poets. Thank God for the people who see with the heart as well as the eyes. How much richer the world is because of those who could write, and do write poetry.

David was a great military leader. He had courage, resourcefulness, imagination, qualities of leadership. He knew men and he knew how to work with men and to get men to work with him. He showed superb strategy when he set out to capture Jerusalem and to make it the capital of the united Kingdom. Its inhabitants taunted him with the challenge that the blind and the crippled could hold it against him, but David captured it and made it his capital. And again and again he planned campaigns and led his armies to smashing victories. He was a great general and leader.

David was an able administrator. He had the knack of organizing folks, and of getting things done. When he succeeded Saul to the Kingdom the nation was in a chaotic condition. It was beset without by enemies and by dissension within. But David conquered his enemies without and consolidated his kingdom from within, and under him the nation expanded and also became unified. For forty years he ruled the nation, ably, wisely, kindly, yet firmly. He was the greatest king of Israel.

A Religious Man.

David was genuinely religious. He worshipped Jehovah and served him. In spite of the fact that he was a king, he gave attention to religion. He used his talents in song and poetry to sing Jehovah's praises and to glorify his name. He had it in his heart to build a house for Jehovah, but he was denied this privilege. He did, however, gather the materials for the temple which was built by Solomon, his son. And because he honored Jehovah, Jehovah honored him. The record states that "David waxed greater and greater; for the Lord, the God of hosts was with him." Leaders are not always faithful to their religious vows. Happy is that nation whose leaders in places both high and low are Christian and who bear their witness publicly to their faith in God.

A Man After God's Heart.

That is what the Scripture says. And therein lies a parable of life. For David did one of the most cruel and callous things a man can do—break up another man's home. And he had to commit murder to do it. In an unguarded moment he seduced Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, one of his generals, and when she was found with child, and when his ruse to involve Uriah and to clear himself failed, he arranged to have Uriah exposed to such danger that it was almost a sure thing that he would be killed, which is what happened. It was a dirty, despicable thing to do, and it incurred the displeasure of God and the scathing rebuke of Nathan, God's prophet. How then could David have been a man after God's heart? It was not because he sinned—not that, but because of the penitent spirit he showed when he realized his sin and guilt. An humble and contrite heart, God will not despise. God judges us not only by where we are but by the direction in which we are headed.

A Man With a Kingdom Forever.

"And I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever." These words were spoken concerning Solomon, David's son. They were a reference of course to the Davidic Kingdom fulfilled in our Lord Jesus Christ, "the son of David" in a lineal and spiritual descent. And because of that fact David's kingdom was a kingdom without end for Christ shall be King of Kings and He shall rule forever and ever. Amen.

BEING FILLED THEY SPOKE.

A Missionary Sermon

By REV. W. J. ANDES.

"When they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness."—Acts 4: 31.

"Being filled . . . they spoke." These words have been heard around the earth, causing revolutions within nations and individuals. These were words of life and death. Back of these words, however, were men filled with the Holy Spirit, boldly proclaiming their experiences and the Good News of Salvation unto all men.

"Being filled with the Holy Spirit" is the crux of the matter. In this day we are filled with almost every other desire than this. Among us church folks we are filled with the desire to attain a "Standard of Excellence" or the proud accomplishment of leading our Conference. Missions, be it home or foreign, is the matter of giving because others give or because it is the thing to do. We seldom lose any love for the "poor heathen" or for "those unfortunate souls." Atomic bombs give us the jitters as we are afraid of another war which would destroy us all. "Being filled with the Holy Spirit" is quite another thing! Rev. Victor Murchison, pastor of the Friends Church in Winston-Salem, recently offered the following as part of his evening prayer in his church: "O God, our Heavenly Father, help us to realize the greatest danger to man is not the presence of atomic energy but the lack of spiritual energy." Is modern Christianity empty? Have we the Good News and do we proclaim it boldly if we have it?

When filled with the Holy Spirit our interest and our work quickens as we strive to bear the Good News far and wide. From several members of the Committee on Foreign Missions of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference we have the following:

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, wife of our minister in Greensboro and president of the Woman's Board of the Southern Convention, says: "My interest in foreign missions began when I was a small child because my father and mother were interested in foreign missions. The conversation in our home, letters from missionaries and visits of returned missionaries enlarged our horizons and helped us to think in terms of a world church."

Clyde Fields, ministerial student at Elon College and a member of our Reidsville Church as well as pastor of several churches, tells us: "My interest began in my early home life, for my mother has spent the major part of her Christian life talking and living Missions. As far back as I can remember she would tell of her early trials in promoting the work of foreign missions in the Reidsville Church."

The home is one of the first places to fill the child with the Holy Spirit and the burning passion to proclaim the Good News unto all people. If the Holy Spirit can't find room in the home, this same Spirit will seldom find room in the product of that home. The tragedy is that we fill our homes with so much other stuff, the word is used advisedly.

"Being filled . . . they spoke." This is the way of Christ and His Spirit in the hearts of people. Christians speak boldly the word of God. Are we genuinely Christian when we do this?

Mrs. Wisseman continues: "As I came to think of Jesus as my leader and friend I realized that he was also the friend of all people. And because there were many who had never heard of him I wanted to help them know him. That is the mission of the Church, and it is my mission, too. It is not simply home missions or foreign missions, but my mission—to make him known."

Mr. Fields also states: "When I became a Christian and looked into the world I found that the love of God as expressed in the offering of His Son on the Cross included all men as children of God, regardless of their outside coloring, environment, wealth, poverty, or education. It is the duty of all of us to carry this message into all the world. Thank God this has been partially done. I think that many of the men who have been in service overseas have been sold on Missions. To see the inhabitants of the islands of the sea is to hope for them the same Christian opportunity that we enjoy."

J. E. Cumbie, faithful superintendent of the Sunday School at the Monticello Church, writes: "I am interested in Foreign Missions because of what Jesus said: 'Go ye into all the world and teach all nations.' I sincerely believe he is speaking to every child of his today. God knew we could not all go but I do believe he expects us all to help those who can carry His Gospel to others. When we stop and think about the mess the world is in today we realize as never before that we should be and are interested in Foreign Missions. This is truly a time of testing. May we not be found lacking in doing the things God would have us do."

It is because of our Christian faith that the needy peoples of the earth may dare to hope in us. "The starving millions in the war-stricken countries, the shelterless and those who find shelter in ruins, the wretchedly clad, all of them helpless in face of disease and epidemic—these look toward us Christians with pathetic wistfulness. So also does the innumerable company of the friendless and forgotten, the economically and racially oppressed in our own land. Nor shall we desert them if our faith be real. In faith we shall go out to them, pledging our brotherhood in something more than words. In faith we shall share and share and really share."—(Douglas Horton in "The 1947 Lenten Message.")

Being filled with the Christian faith, we shall speak ever so boldly and others shall be ever so grateful.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

On Sunday, March 30, we had a very interesting visit from our Hope-dal Church Sunday School. Mrs. Otis Cary, teacher of the Young People's Class, brought her entire class over to visit the Orphanage and to see the children. They presented all the children, and even the Superintendent, with a beautiful Easter basket. They sang several songs and had prayer. We then showed them over the buildings. We had just finished painting the Baby Home, and they complimented it very highly, and also on the cleanliness of all the buildings. They said they hardly saw how it could be done with as many children as we had. It is always a pleasure to have such warm friends to visit us and see what we are trying to do for the little children here.

On the same afternoon we also had Miss Louise Sparks, Mr. Page Owen, and Mrs. Lee Lawrence from our Happy Home Church to visit us. They represented the Primary Sunday School Class. They also brought us eggs and dye to color them, so the children could have an egg hunt on Easter Monday. We also showed these good friends over the buildings, and they, too, complimented the looks of things very much. We were delighted to have all these good friends to come and visit us. Some of them had never visited the Orphanage before. They came in order to help, and got a joy out of being of some service. "He serves most who serves best!"

Many of the Women's Missionary Societies sent in many beautiful dresses for Easter, so each girl, large or small, could have a new dress to wear on Easter Sunday. It was the job of the Superintendent to buy Easter shoes, and what a job! And what a price we had to pay! We had to pay more than we have ever paid for shoes before.

Many of the good ladies brought dresses to the Orphanage, and they seemed to be so happy that they could have a part in making some motherless child happy on Easter Sunday morning. It is lovely to forget self in serving others. The children we have here have no one to look to but you for a home, food, clothing, and training. We know you are too good, too kind, and too considerate to forget them!

EASTER AT ROSEMONT.

Hour of Life," by Ira B. Wilson, and "The Strife is O'er," by H. J. Stoner. Mrs. Royal Gallup sang "To the End of the Sabbath," by Sparks.

The next service of the day came at 7:00 P. M., when the young people gathered together for their evening meeting which was led by Miss Anne Morrison, taking as her topic, "What Does Easter Mean to You?" She was assisted by Mrs. M. K. Hassell who presented an Easter story.

The last great service of the day came at 8:00 P. M. at which time the senior choir, under the direction of Mrs. Royal Gallup with Mrs. Frank Goforth at the organ console, rendered a superb presentation of the cantata, "The Resurrection Morn," by Ira B. Wilson. Music lovers from the entire community and even outside the community gathered together for this soul-stirring, awe-inspiring and spiritually up-lifting event. It was Dr. Hardecastle's honest opinion that Rosemont was blessed with one of the best choirs in the entire Norfolk area. In my own little experience I can honestly say that I have never seen a more cooperative, a more talented, a more gracious group of people who sing because their heart is in it, than I have found among the people who make up the choir of the Rosemont Christian Church. They render two specific selections every Sunday morning (except one each month when the youth choir presents the special music) and one every Sunday night regularly. They practice loyally and faithfully every Wednesday night, and in preparing for the special Easter music they would practice for an hour or so after the night service on Sundays. Such devotion to their task enables them to make the very best presenttaion of any selection of music they undertake. I am proud of them, each and every one. I appreciate, and I'm sure every member of the church appreciates, the very fine work they are doing.

Members of the senior choir are as follows: Altos—Miss Jean Neill, Miss Jackie Gallup, Miss Anne Morrison Mrs. Mary White and Mrs. Bea Maynard; Sopranos—Mrs. Dorothy Gallup, Miss Iva Gay Johnston, Miss Betty Boyette, Miss Jackie Wentz, Miss Lowrine Halstead, Mrs. H. R. Morrison and Miss Barbara Gallup; Basses—Ray Morrison, Billy Neill, Richard Scharff and Jannings Richardson; Tenors—Jack Hollowell and Edward Drinkard. Mrs. F. A. Goforth is organist and Mrs. Dorothy Gallup, choir director.

CONSECRATION OF INFANTS.

a prejudiced misunderstanding of the purpose of the service. The name for the service is often misleading to one who investigates no further than its classification—"Christening or Consecration of Children." Though the child is consecrated to the Lord, the service is not to affect a miraculous change in the nature of the child. If the service is studied with an analytical eye, one will find its purpose aimed at helping the parents, especially, realize their responsibility in the rearing of their child in Christian ideals.

In these services the parents promise to teach, not only by precept, but by example, the infant from his earliest years to engage in daily prayer; to employ every effort possible to bring the truths of the Gospel to bear upon the young life. Realizing that the responsibility is great, the parents ask god-parents and grandparents to share in the momentous task. When these have made their promises, the congregation declares their willingness to help create a Christian community in which the child is to grow.

The christening service is one way the church has of impressing upon the people, and especially parents, their responsibility in creating a Christian community and home for the child, and in teaching the child the ways of the Lord. As a means of assisting in the building of Christian homes, communities and, ultimately, world, I should like to encourage the parents to carry up to the House of the Lord their infant for consecration and where they declare to the Father God their willingness and intention of nurturing the child in the Christian way of life.

In Memoriam

GODWIN.

In the passing to his final reward of our friend and brother, Mr. Mills Godwin, Sr., there is a void in our ranks and a keen sense of sorrow in our hearts.

As a member of Oakland Christian Church, he was consistent, faithful and true. In his daily life he exemplified his Christian profession of friendship, morality and brotherly love.

In his death this church has sustained the loss of a loyal and faithful member, our community a useful and upright citizen, his home a loving and understanding father.

It is resolved:

1. That we record our high and sincere appreciation of his character and services, and of his unswerving devotion to his church, and the way of life represented thereby.

2. That we extend our deep sympathy to his bereaved children and pray that faith in God may give comfort to their burdened hearts.

3. That these resolutions be placed upon the records of Oakland Church and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. J. ROLLIE GAYLE,
Secretary.

AERINGTON.

Hammett T. Aerington, son of the late W. W. and Mary Yancey Aerington, was born in Mecklenburg County, Va., November 30, 1870, and departed this life March 23, 1947.

On January 17, 1906, he married Miss Ida E. Forlines who survives him, together with two sons, Charlie Vest and Gundredge Wade Aerington of Buffalo Junction, Va. Brother Aerington was a faithful member and regular in attendance of Hebron Christian Church, Nelson, Va.

The writer performed the ceremony at the deceased's marriage, was his pastor and a visitor in his home for thirty years. He was honest, industrious and a successful farmer. The esteem in which he was held was evidenced by the very large crowd and the beautiful floral tributes at the funeral and burial at Hebron Church. Services were conducted by Rev. Mark Andes, the present pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Cumbe of the Baptist Church, and the writer.

WE NEED RELIGION.

By ANDREW SLABEY.

While we were at a summer Bible Conference in Michigan, one fine morning a party of us went to visit the nearby state penitentiary.

The prison was situated in a beautiful spot on top of a hill adorned with trees. From a distance it looked like an old castle surrounded by walls.

As we approached the big iron gate entrance we had to park our cars outside. Then the uniformed gateman let us in and directed us to the reception building. There we were told by another officer to sit quietly until the warden was ready to receive us.

Shortly we were shown to the warden's office which was a large square room well furnished. The warden, a middle aged man, greeted us with a smile and rose to speak at his desk in the following manner:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I welcome you as visitors to this institution. It is my custom to say a few words of information to the visitors. The State of Michigan spent a large sum of money to build this modern institution for men, and it costs a lot more to keep it up. All that money comes from the taxpayers. The number of inmates here fluctuates. At present we have about 1,400 men—mostly boys with the average of seventeen years of age. Most of these boys should never have come here if they had had a better training at home, at school, and in the church. In many cases 'the old man' should be here and not the boy. He never took the boy to church. Never trained him in the right way. Never set him a good example. The church folks can do much to prevent boys and men from getting here. I know what I am talking about because I am an active church member myself. If it hadn't been for my religion who knows but I would be here as a prisoner instead of the warden." He chuckled.

"We need religion. Let the church teach the Ten Commandments and the fear of God, also temperance and the Golden Rule of Christ. These things should be taught also in our schools. Now please keep in line as the officers will conduct you through the institution."

game with Brookfield High. It's going to be chock-full of action, Mother May I go?"

"It sounds good, Son, but this is your day to help Mr. Stokes in the store, isn't it? Did you forget about that?"

"Oh, I can never do anything I want to! There is always something! Jack has gone to all the games so far, and I have gone to only one," complained Alfred.

"Mother feels sorry about it, too, Son, but let us talk it over. When you and your brother took part-time jobs, we decided it was necessary, because Father would not be able to save enough money to send both you and Ned to the Academy at the same time."

"Yes, Mother, we want above everything else to go to the Academy. Father tells so much about, but perhaps one day's work won't make much. I could ask John Merrill to go to the store in my place today. He would do, I believe."

"Didn't you say Mr. Stokes chose you as the only boy who properly qualified for the job?" asked Mrs. Thomas.

"Yes, but do you think he would mind—just once?" argued Alfred.

"Can't you see that it would mean little help for Mr. Stokes to have John come in today? John doesn't know the goods, their places, nor the prices. He is not trained in the job," explained Mrs. Thomas. "Imagine you are Mr. Stokes and you see John come in. What do you think Mr. Stokes would answer when John says, 'Mr. Stokes, Alfred Thomas wanted to go to the game today and he asked me to take his place in the store'?"

"All right, Mother, I quote Mr. Stokes," laughed Alfred.

"Oh, sent you to take his place? He did, huh? I like to pick my own help. I chose that boy over at the school because I thought he was the best suited to the job. The principal told me he was one of the most reliable boys in the school."

"Well, Mother, I can't go to the game and be called 'reliable,' too, can I?"

"When we make promises to people, the only right thing to do is to keep them; and dependableness is the cornerstone of success in any relationship," she answered.

"I want to keep the job and go to the Academy more than I want to go to the game," decided Alfred. "At the Academy there will be games really worth going to see."

"I'm happy that you see it that way, Alfred, and Father will be as proud of you as I am."

"I'll call Jack now and tell him Mr. Stokes is depending on me this afternoon," said Alfred, quite contented.

"Our Father in Heaven has no step-children."

INDIAN LEADERSHIP

By RAYMOND A. DUDLEY

Associate Secretary of the American Board and Missionary to India

The Christian movement in India needs more and better national leaders. A century or more ago schools were opened to train teachers and ministers, and many schools continue largely for that purpose. But in spite of this and in spite of the fact that Indians undoubtedly have capacity for leadership—and there are some fine leaders—lack of sufficient leadership is a major weakness today.

Because of the shortage of missionaries and because of the progress of devolution, work formerly done by missionaries is being done by Indians. But generally those Indians have been given no preparation comparable to that which is taken for granted for missionaries. There is grave danger that this will eventuate in inferior institutions and an ineffective church.

The situation is somewhat better in educational work because the government insists upon certain standards and government grants and fees provide a reasonable maintenance. In the churches, insistence upon self-support often results in a low paid ministry with low educational qualifications. In many areas suitable candidates for the ministry are not forthcoming.

Several things can be done to rectify these weaknesses if there is the will to do them.

(1) Sound Christian nurture in the home and school and church is basic. This includes holding before children and youth the ideal of Christian service. There are small rural churches in America where such nurture has eventuated in sending out many choice leaders for the church and the mission field.

(2) Theological training is basic. Why not develop one center where there is provision for scholarly, evangelical and irenic men from America, England, the Continent and India, to unite in India, under Indian conditions, in an interpretation of the Bible and church history that will accomplish for India what Paul did for the Greek and Roman world, in interpreting Christianity? It is not enough to import theology from America. India needs to develop her own.

(3) Nothing less than the spiritual, social and economic salvation of 388 million people is the task we should hold before the youth of India. In its performance missionaries should give way to Indians, ministers should give way to laymen, older men and women should give way to the younger ones.

(4) There should be a small committee to seek out promising boys and girls, give them guidance in securing their training, and open the way for their service. While in service they need constructive guidance and further opportunities for growth, including in some cases foreign study and travel.

(5) Provincialism is a major hindrance. Workers from one area are sometimes unwelcome 300 miles away. Positions with larger salary and influence are zealously guarded for local people. Reformation at this point is long overdue and a wise committee could foster transfers between areas.

(6) Indian leaders must be prepared to make financial sacrifice, but it is right for them to expect reasonable support and security. In some places all the churches in an area contribute to a central fund, and all the ministers in the area are paid from this central fund on a salary scale based on educational qualifications and length of service. Appointments and transfers are made by a central authority. Under Indian conditions this system solves many difficulties.

(7) Undue insistence upon self-support leads people to take the easier way of paying low salaries and engaging inferior people. Undue use of foreign funds undermines initiative and independence. The solution of this dilemma lies in an arrangement whereby a foreign fund pays, for a specified time at least, a quarter, a third, or a half of the salaries of men and women with a college education.

Two million soldiers are returning to civilian life. Indians are assuming control of the government. High schools and colleges are sending into public life keen thinkers. Non-Christian religions have ancient philosophies ably supported by scholarly exponents. This is the world in which Indian leaders must live and work today. Let us equip them well and let us support them adequately.

"Only to Those Who Loved Him!"

By ALBERT W. PALMER

It was only to those who loved him that Jesus came back in the resurrection! The teaching I received as a boy, both from the pulpit and in the Sunday school, always seemed to assume that the resurrection was a sort of physical demonstration to prove the divinity of Jesus and confound those who had crucified him. I had always rather vaguely wondered how they had been able to withstand so spectacular a proof. But, as a matter of fact, Jesus never reappeared to Pilate or to Annas or to Caiphas. To them he remained as dead as when the shadows dropped the veil of darkness on the crucifixion. It was to those who loved him that he returned in all the beauty of the Easter morning—and to them alone.

The real significance of the resurrection is something much more beautiful and permanent than a mere reanimation of the old material body and resumption of the former physical life for a few brief days. The Jesus of the resurrection experience comes and goes and reveals himself at will. Two disciples walking along the road with a stranger find they have been walking with Jesus unawares. A group in the upper room suddenly discover that he is with them. Beside the lake they find him standing in the light of early morning. Always his word is one of comfort, of illumination, of courage. But he goes no more into the Temple to argue with the Pharisees, nor down along the crowded streets. Only to those who love him and yearn for him does the beautiful presence come. Pilate and the high priests go on blindly thinking of him as dead. The doctors in the Temple draw a long breath of relief—the troublesome and revolutionary teacher is safely dead and buried! But those who loved him learn that he is no holden of death but is alive forevermore! And this new experience with Christ transforms their lives—henceforth they are children of the resurrection, heirs of immortality.

Is it not always so? Down through the ages Jesus is only a dead Christ—an interesting, or troublesome, or strange historical character to those who love him not. Self-seeking and self-absorbed men and women, the proud, the ambitious, the domineering, the violent, the revengeful, go their way quite oblivious to Christ or any thing he said or did. Only those who love him know the risen and ever-living Christ!

FAMILY WEEK, 1947.

"CHRISTIAN LIVING BEGINS AT HOME."

From May 4 to 11 Family Week will be observed in homes, churches and community gatherings. Family life will be featured in radio programs and in the press. There was never a time when we needed more emphasis on the rebuilding of American family life. We had one divorce to every three marriages in 1945 and the record promises to be still more serious in 1946 and 1947. Child neglect is a major factor in juvenile delinquency. Great numbers of families are crowded or practically homeless. Many marriages strained by wartime separation have not yet grown together firmly. We need nation-wide attention to the well-being of families.

In spite of disturbing factors, millions of marriages are standing firm and are meeting their problems with splendid resourcefulness. Such homes are the hope of the world. Families in which love, understanding, and creative comradeship are carried into daily life give strength and joy to their members and build up the spiritual strength of mankind.

The home is a training school to teach us how to use our differences constructively. Many people never learn this lesson, hence family breakdown, group and racial conflicts and war. The Christian home is one place in which the antagonisms, emotional loneliness and confusion of postwar living can be offset through experiences of security, love, joy and cooperativeness.

Much has been said about war marriages. Too many of them have already come to grief, but many others which started in the same period are, and can continue to be, as fine as any that ever existed. The church can help and is helping them. If the family keeps its religion, religion will keep the family. There is a natural closeness between the home and the church and each is dependent upon the other.

Plans for this observance include things for families to do together. Special features are suggested for the church program. As the church builds families, families will build the church. Groups and councils of churches are brought into the plan and denominational offices are at the very heart of it.

Family Week belongs to all the people—Protestant, Roman Catholic, Jewish—all who wish to observe it. For the Evangelical and non-Roman churches, the observance is sponsored by the Intercouncil Committee on Christian Family Life, representing the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the International Council of Religious Education and the United Council of Church Women, and by denominations and city, county and state councils of churches.

Special pamphlets and attractive leaflets are available. A folder entitled "Family Week" (2c per copy, $1 per 100), gives practical suggestions for the program. This and other material can be ordered from denominational offices, or from the Federal Council of Churches, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y., or the International Council of Religious Education, 203 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago 1, Ill.

THE PILGRIM HOME.

Have you seen our new Pilgrim Home? It has a unique function. It is intended to reach adults where they are, at home.

The Uniform Lesson outlines for adults are very good. And our writers are good. They talk directly to you, with a message that is practical. Alfred Schmalz (Darien, Conn.) has written the material for the winter issue; Arthur Rice (Reno, Nev.) for the spring issue; and Harding Gaylord (Farmington, Me.) for the autumn number. In addition to the interpretation of the weekly lesson, there are three hundred words of daily meditation based on the readings of the Uniform Lesson Committee.

In each number there will be 28 pages of brief and interesting articles. There is always a sermon: by Carl Kopf (Boston, Mass.) in the spring number, by Frederick K. Stamm (Chicago, Ill.) in the summer issue, and R. Clyde Yarbrough (West Newton, Mass.) in the autumn quarter.

Each time there will be presented a page of Quiz material: ten questions about the Bible, ten about the church. Beginning in the summer number two characters will be presented pictorially, with a sort of "Cheerful Cherub" comment—Grandma and Jimmy. The picture spread for the spring issue is of young people in our churches; for the summer, of children of the church; for the autumn, of interracial relationships.

Every quarter The Pilgrim Home has at least one personality sketch, usually something about children, something which will help people to find happiness and usefulness where they are, and an article which will broaden our horizons. In the fall there will begin a series on family life in various countries, Hawaii and Mexico coming first. Among the celebrated writers in the first issues are Mildred Widber, Grace Storms, Leila Anderson, Ralph Hyslop, and Jean Ferguson. All are keen and helpful observers of life.

This magazine is for a definite constituency—adults who can't go to church school, people who are remote from church because of distance, age, illness, family circumstances, or working conditions. This is the most practical means we have found of taking the church to the people.

Would you like to know more about The Pilgrim Home? Write to Miss Elizabeth Chicoine at Elon College, N. C., at the Southern Convention Office, or to The Pilgrim Press at 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass.,

FEAR NOT! FEAR WHAT?

"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."—Matthew 10:28.

The thrice repeated "Fear not" in this chapter (vv. 26, 28, 31) indicates the healthy-mindedness of Jesus. This counsel of imperturbability becomes more impressive when read in its context. The words of Jesus anticipate trials of the severest order for the disciples; even martyrdom itself is hinted. Now Jesus would have his followers composed and calm in the presence of the most disheartening ordeals. Professor I. Newton Davies has summarized the grounds for their confidence, as follows: (1) Those who are to deliver the message of Christ in the glare of publicity or in prominent places will be prepared for their task according as they commune with God in the silence of the quiet places to hear his faintest whispers. (2) There is in the possession of all of Jesus' disciples something eternal and inviolable which only God can destroy. Loyalty to the interests of the soul is to be the chief consideration. (3) They should be courageous in their confession because God takes cognizance of their lives. Should they fall in the fight, he who takes note of the fallen sparrow will surely be aware of them and will care for them. Loyalty to Christ in word and deed secures for them his advocacy and mediatorship.

We have had new revelations of "them which kill the body." The world gasped at the stories and pictures of Nazi atrocity. Never did we suspect that there were so many ways of killing the body. Man's inhumanity to man has found new and more cruel expressions. And having tried them once there may be those who will not be satisfied until they try them again. However, all atrocity has not been confined to Germany and Japan. Murders of such gruesome nature have occurred recently in our own country that the hunger of our secular press for the notorious has been temporarily satiated and the ghastly details have been omitted in the published accounts.

Consequently, vast areas of our population have become panic-stricken. Church attendance, especially at evening services, has suffered immeasurably. Class meetings, missionary meetings, and church visitations have been penalized because Christian people are paralyzed by fear of "them which kill the body." The Kingdom of God is sacrificed on the altar of safety. The welfare of the soul, and of those souls for which Christ died, is forgotten in our preoccupation with the welfare of the body. The unmistakable words of Christ were: "He that saveth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." Safety and salvation are by no means synonymous.

The question may arise: Is it possible for one to face danger today in the spirit of Christ? We are not without contemporary witnesses who are competent to speak. Martin Niemoeller said, "It is well known that through the whole period of the Nazi regime a war raged between the totalitarian state and the Christian churches. The churches (that means for Germany the Evangelical and the Roman Catholic) were the two big organization left which did not surrender to Hitler's claim to unrestricted control of public life. This war could not be avoided and had to be fought to the end, until either the state renounced its totalitarian claim on the very souls of its subjects or the churches revoked the binding character of God's will for human life. There is only one hope left, the hope that is embodied in Christ, crucified and risen from the dead. That hope is entrusted to His Church. May she preach it in spite of death and despair. 'We had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead.'"

Now what about destroying both soul and body in hell? Belief in hell has been discarded by great numbers of people. Unfortunately, or fortunately, the reality of hell does not depend on our own opinions. We did not will this life into being. Recall the story of the scientist who reluctantly accepted the universe and prompted this retort, "Egad, you'd better!" Egad, we'd better accept the reality of the life to come, with the contrasting states made vivid in the parables and teachings of Jesus!

We are to fear, not death, but judgment. There is a death which brings regret, remorse, and disgrace. The death of the coward, the thief, the bootlegger, the drunken-driver, the suicide, are these forever safe beyond the reach of judgment? Let no one conclude that our generation has escaped judgment. We are blind if we fail to see the judgment of God upon our less-than-Christian civilization.

Judgment, not death, is to be feared. Jesus had no fear of "them which kill the body." Was life not precious to him? Did he not wish to live the normal span of years? Yes, but our every instinct tells us that a selfish effort on his part to save his own skin would have forfeited his right to Saviorhood. His death, we realize, brought redemption. The death of the body was incidental. The loss of a body does not throw the eternal God into bankruptcy. James Russell Lowell saw the friendly side of death and expressed it in these beautiful lines:

True it is that Death's face seems stern and cold
When he is sent to summon those we love,
But all God's angels come to us disguised.
Sorrow, sickness, poverty and death,
One after other lift their frowning masks
And we behold the seraph's face beneath,
All radiant with the glory and the calm
Of having looked upon the front of God.

The Idea of a Denomination

By DR. DOUGLAS HORTON

Two Opponents of the Ecumenical Movement.

It must be admitted that some of the denominations of the day do not seem especially interested in the ecumenical movement, and for at least two general reasons.

One type of denomination, which is second to none in devotion to its Lord and cannot but desire to see the day when the Church shall be able to life up to God a full and wholly harmonized symphony of gratitude, takes the attitude that however desirable cooperation between denominations may be, organic union is a dangerous thing to seek. For the moment, since I shall be attempting a little later to describe organic union of an evangelical catholic form—which I believe to be the only form feasible—I shall simply suggest here that the denominations which fear union confuse unity with uniformity. If there is any point upon which all members of the ecumenical groups are in agreement it is that they do not desire uniformity.

Such terms as "corporate union" or "organic unity" . . . are forbidding to many, as suggesting the ideal of a compact governmental union involving rigid uniformity. We do not so understand them, and none of us desires such uniformity. . . . Our task is to find in God, to receive from God as His gift, a unity which can take up and preserve in one beloved community all the varied spiritual gifts which He has given us in our separations.

Another type of denomination calmly declares that technically there is no ecumenical problem, since it itself is the only Church existent in the true sense of the word. Perhaps Jonathan Edwards had such a group in mind when he said, "Complacent people are a particular smoke in God's nostrils." These self-assured sects speak about the other communions in such periods as appear in the Catechism of Pope Pius X: "Protestantism, or the Reformed Religion, as it was haughtily called by its founder, is the corollary of all heresies which have ever or ever shall come to corrupt the mind." This little glint of sunshine emanates from a communion which in some respects is remarkably open-minded—but which must be confessed to have a good many lethal weapons sticking out of the opinion.

It is particularly distressful when a dominant minority hold so fiercely to either of these points of view that the entire communion to which they belong becomes oriented to them also, and the majority have no practical means of making their own more generous will effective. When a young man, bright with hope for a better world through an ampler church, enters a fettered denomination of this sort, his is one more life lost to the ecumenical movement.

In form, our denominations are almost all of the Roman type, so far as attitudes to others go. Their structure goes back to a time when each communion, regarding itself as God's sole chosen vessel, felt called to conquer the earth. Almost all of the communions save Rome have outgrown this naive attitude, but there are very few of the written constitutions of the denominations which mention other denominations or even refer to the fact that they exist. Each one is written as if the Christian Church and the particular denomination were one and as if, given time, the whole world would be Congregational—or Wesleyan—or Two-Seed-in-the-Spirit-Predestinarian-Baptist—or what not. In another day each denomination did actually muster its forces against its rivals in competitive practices which make us burn inwardly and blush outwardly today.

The United Presbyterian he ventured to suggest

That the doctrine of the Calvinists was better than the rest;

Which aroused the wrath and anger of the Plymouth Brother who

Said he thought a Presbyterian no better than a Jew.

And the Quaker and the Shaker used some language pretty strong

Though they both agreed in stating that the Catholic was wrong.

Today Protestants for the most part are far beyond vicious contention. It is probably fair to say that the ranking denominations which we know in America are even more co-operative than the orders within the Roman Church. We should not dream of resorting to the devices employed by the Jesuits and some of the other orders against each other—if the reports of them be true. Certain it is that the Protestant groups today are in practice far ahead of the letter of their constitutions. So far from acting as if they were unaware of each other's existence, they are learning how to defer to one another—and the end is not yet.

The Necessity of Ecumenicity.

A more glorious day is yet to dawn. I venture to prophesy that the time will come when the test of a denomination will be the measure in which it contributes to the ecumenical Church. We know that we cannot quash and obliterate our attitudes: we can only sublimate them—for the more we struggle to overcome egocentricity the more egocentric we become. The way to deal with interdenominational competition therefore is not to attempt to reduce it to nil but to resolve it into emulation for the common good. When people compete for quantity (if I may paraphrase L. P. Jacks) as our denominations have been doing, their competition makes them enemies. If they will now redirect that rivalry by competing in the creativity of common good, their competition will make them friends—as it is beginning to do. Note how Dr. Hocking's tests of the validity of a religion, when applied to a denomination, orient that denomination toward true ecumenicity:

Which denomination, he asks (the original word is religion), in its account of the need and loss of the human heart, can get farthest beyond platitudes and mere general lament, into the region of the literal struggle of human life with evil, sordidness, and that blight of meaninglessness which besets human success no less than human failure? Surely the need of the distracted human heart is in part for an integrated church, and the denomination which points toward that church has a primary chance of meeting that need. Which denomination does in fact most verifiably save men from greed, lust, and hatred, and without destroying their virility and effectiveness as members of race and social order. Surely this is the denomination which devotes itself to unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. Which denomination is most fertile in men? Surely the grandness of the ecumenical conception is more likely to produce men of the grander kind than is sectarianism.

To the denominations most sensitive to the needs of the world the demand for a united international Church is written in letters of light across the sky.

They see it from the necessity of a united witness to Christ. If they are the extension of the incarnation, if they are truly the Body of Christ, they must do the best they can to speak with the same clarity with which he spoke. But confusion is the opposite of clarity; and confusion has nowhere been worse confounded in the history of the Church than in our American denominationalism.

The presence of religious confusion is recorded by every chaplain in the armed forces of our country. The average young lad brought up in a Kentucky "holler" or even a Park Avenue apartment has been protected from seeing the worst of our denomi-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The rallies of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference were well attended, and inspiringly conducted. I could only attend the one held in Suffolk, but they were all characterized by well prepared addresses, large attendance, and eagerness to advance the cause of missions. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill did an especially good job, and kept her congregations asking for more, although she made six addresses in the three days.

Mrs. William T. Harrell of Liberty Spring Church, is superintendent of the Suffolk District, and she did an excellent job both in the details of preparation for the meeting, and in her presiding over it. Every step of the way was very carefully planned before the day arrived. And what is also true every speech and part of the whole day's program was well prepared. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill thrilled her audience with her addresses at each of the rallies. Mrs. Robert M. Kimball, wife of our Franklin minister, inspired the Suffolk rally with her excellent devotional address.

One of the features of each of the three rallies was a dramatization written by Mrs. William T. Harrell titled, "We Speak for Our Departments," and which was presented at each of the rallies by Mrs. Harrell, Miss Betty Chicoine and Mrs. Ernest H. Stephenson, of Suffolk. These young ladies made routine reports most interesting by the manner of their presentation.

The rally "team" included Supt. W. T. Scott, and Miss Betty Chicoine, field director, from the Convention office at Elon College; Miss Patty Lee Coghill, Missions Council Education Secretary, from New York; Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, president of the Southern Woman's Convention, from Greensboro, N. C., and others. Dr. Scott made a fine contribution with his counsel, Mrs. Wisseman's presence and speeches were greatly appreciated. Miss Betty Chicoine was on double duty in the Conference as she was teaching in a standard training school being conducted each night at Liberty Spring. Her work is greatly appreciated in Eastern Virginia.

Officers elected for the Suffolk District for the coming year are: Mrs. William T. Harrell, superintendent; Mrs. R. O. Luter, secretary; and Mrs. R. E. Brittle, assistant superintendent. From the opening devotional service conducted by the Franklin women, and led by Mrs. Kimball, to the closing service by the Bethlehem women, and led by Mrs. R. O. Luter, the Suffolk rally was a good success.

The secret of their success: careful planning, through preparation, and their spirit of real consecration to the ideal of a Christian world. Their meetings are deeply religious without any affectation, and our pastors, all of whom attend these rallies, are rightfully proud of the women of their churches.

TESTS FOR CHRISTIAN WORLD CITIZENSHIP.

By REV. HAROLD MATTHEWS.

Introduction: There is a birth test for national citizenship but Christian World Citizenship has to be earned.

A Four-Question Test:

1. Have you marched out beyond national bigotry?
2. Have you left race superiority behind?
3. Have you determined to set no geographical or social limits beyond which you will not agree?

Our service men and women set no such limits.

Will you follow the old song, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord"?

There are thousands of calls today at home and abroad for young people who can meet these first three tests and who dedicate themselves to full time Christian service.

4. Are you ready to pay the voluntary taxes "required" of a World Citizen?

These taxes are required so that minimum needs of food, clothing, shelter, physical, mental and spiritual culture may be made available to all.

Are you ready to sign this pledge of allegiance?—

(1) I will not eat my food until I have helped furnish another's bread.

(2) I will not add to my wardrobe until I've helped clothe the under-clad.

(3) I will add no new comforts to my home unless I have helped shelter the homeless.

(4) I will indulge in no expensive recreation or social pleasure for myself unless I am making life richer for someone else somewhere else in the world.

(5) I will make no gift to help beautify my church unless I am contributing to make true worship easier for God's other children.

Three Fenchow Orphans.

A class of Sunday school children in the Grinnell, Iowa, Congregational Church gave a collection of $6.50 to a missionary to take to China to help some Chinese children. In China that money became more than $70. Upon reaching Fenchow, Shansi, the missionary asked his Chinese colleagues what to do with the money. Their answer was, "Let's keep the three Kuo orphan children in school." So we did. Before a term was completed war broke out between Japan and the United States. The Japanese closed the school and sent the children away.

The missionary was put behind Japanese guards and could not see his Chinese friends. He had $17.02 which had not been used for those orphans. He put this money in an envelope and carried it in his hip pocket for months, hoping someday to see the older sister of the three orphans and to give her that money.

Finally, five months after Pearl Harbor, the gates of the mission station were opened and that girl came in with many others to get their belongings which were left behind when they had been driven out. The missionary took this little girl to the room in which the bags of bedding and clothing had been stored. When they entered the room they saw only empty bags. Looters had stolen everything of value.

The missionary took out the envelope of money, told the girl what it contained and handed it to her. She pushed it back saying, "You will need that money for your travel

VETERANS EDUCATION.

It should be said again that our government should be congratulated on its interest in our veterans and its intelligent and comprehensive program of education planned for their benefit. It should be noted that the average veteran took four years out of his life at a most critical stage and devoted it to service in the interest of his country and the freedom of the world. The effect of taking such a block out of life cannot be accurately estimated. Some atonement should certainly be made and the Government is undertaking this task in a very fine way.

The Winston-Salem Chamber of Commerce, in appreciation of what the Government is doing, sought to evaluate that program in a state-wide conference of educators and government officials Friday, April 11. The conference opened at 12:30 P. M. with a luncheon session in the Robert E. Lee Hotel. To this conference came college presidents, deans, business managers, and other faculty representatives; also state, county and city officials of the public schools of North Carolina.

Former Governor James Meville Broughton of Raleigh, was the keynote speaker for the occasion. Governor Broughton pointed out that the G. I. Bill of Rights program is opportunity rather than charity. He declared that trained, free, and unregimented youth of America are a much better bulwark of American safety than conscripted and regimented youth of other lands.

Those taking part in the panel discussion were: Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the Great University of North Carolina; Colonel J. D. DeRamus of Winston-Salem, manager of the state regional office of the Veterans Administration; Colonel C. C. Randolph of Winston-Salem, manager of Western Electric Company Radio Shops; Mr. C. P. Pate, Director of Virginia Vocational Rehabilitation and Education Division; Dr. Clyde A. Erwin, State Superintendent of Public Instruction; and Mr. E. C. Hemingway of Winston-Salem, Chief of the Veterans Administration Vocational Rehabilitation and Education Division.

It was pointed out that there are about 2,454,500 American veterans who are eligible for college courses and that at present there are 1,000,000 of these veterans enrolled in colleges, secondary schools, and other forms of training, bringing the total to 2,078,095. North Carolina's peak college enrollment before the war was 30,000. This enrollment has now risen to 45,000 for the current year.

The colleges in North Carolina face a critical situation and at the same time a great opportunity for the ensuing year. There is a minimum of last year's North Carolina high school graduates enrolled in the colleges of the state. The standards of our public schools were advanced last year by adding the twelfth grade which reduced the number of high school graduates by more than fifty per cent. This spring the high schools of the state will graduate the usual number. A larger percentage of high school graduates will want to go to college this year. Applications from veterans for entrance in college will not decrease from that of last year. To provide educational facilities and opportunities for all who want to go to college next year will certainly confront every college with a perplexing problem and a recognized responsibility.

We, at Elon College, cannot close our eyes to the present situation or our ears to veterans and high school graduates. We want to do what we can, but what? We need counsel and advice. Will you please offer a suggestion.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The Sunday schools and churches that are cooperating in the Convention's plan for the support of our college are doing splendidly—I believe better than ever. This is an appeal to the Sunday schools and churches that have not sent a contribution during the present conference year. When we look at the total received and consider the comparatively small number of Sunday schools and churches that have contributed, we are made to wonder what the results would be if everyone should cooperate. Won't you, Brother pastor and Brother superintendent, refresh your minds with the Convention's plan, discuss the matter with the proper officials of your church and Sunday school, and arrive at a decision? If you will give your people the opportunity, they will support their college. We are doing fine, but we could do better. Won't you lend your help?

RURITAN CLUB AT WINDSOR, VA.

Avowedly averting the dangers of modern community life is the Ruritan Club of Windsor, Va. As the name implies, the Club is interested in rural life and its betterment in all phases.

On Sunday night, April 13, the Club in a group attended the Windsor Congregational Christian Church. The church was filled, and under the direction of Mrs. Homer Whitley the Junior Choir sang excellently. To climax the program, at the conclusion of the service a Ruritan member, Mr. Elliot Russell Laine who is treasurer of Isle of Wight County, united with our church by letter of transfer from Woodland Methodist Church.

EASTER SERVICES AT BEREA.

Berea Church had a beautiful Easter service, unveiling a large picture of Christ in the Garden. Mrs. Dot Showe, who painted it, presented it to Mrs. Ben McIntyre, who in turn presented it to the church.

Our pastor, Clyde Fields, who is one of the most able young preachers, gave an inspiring Easter sermon. Clyde is only in his first year at Elon, but his work shows a good religious background. We do feel fortunate to have him and pray God's richest blessings on him as he goes forth for Christ. Mrs. Fields is also a great help in our work.

MRS. HOWARD GERRINGER.

WOMEN AND MISSIONS.

Last week, and this, the women of our churches have been attending missionary rallies. In imagination they have travelled with Miss Pattie Lee Coghill over much of the earth's surface, and have especially looked at the progress of Christianity in India where the Congregational part of our church began its foreign missionary work. Few of these women have ever been outside of the United States, and many of them have never been beyond the border of their own state. But during the past ten days they have stretched their minds to think affectionately of the struggling peoples of India and the hungry people of Europe.

How can we help? This has been a recurring question in the minds of these fine women as they thought of the missionary work of our church. Answers to this question have been given by leaders, but the best answers are those that have taken shape in the minds of the women who, in months of high resolve, determined to help in the far away places where God's people struggle against so many difficulties.

Back home in the missionary societies, just a little segment of the bigger churches, these women and their colleagues will find ways to do half of the missionary giving and practically all of the missionary study. Why should such a responsibility rest upon some three thousand church members while the other thirty thousand do so little?

The answer to that question will tell us why our winning the world to Christ moves at a snail's pace.

But just suppose that the other thirty thousand should also attend missionary rallies, stretch their minds to include the needs of people everywhere, wonder how they can help, and then join with the faithful in regular study, giving, and prayers for the world-wide Church. What would happen? Why, even Russia might be convinced that Christianity is real!

HOPE IN CHINA.

A New Year's letter recently reached our house from Robert and Helen Chandler in Foochow, China. The lady wrote most of the letter, and it was a grand letter. The Letters think the Chandlers are fine people. They were in our home five years ago on Easetr when our first child was born. Now they are back in China helping to rebuild that wonderful country.

One day they were beyond the city's edge at the agricultural school where Guy Thelin was struggling to rebuild his home before Betty and the two sons arrived. The school had been ruined by Japanese bombs and occupying soldiers. Let Mrs. Chandler tell you:

"As we looked around that busy school, starting up again from its ruins, using temporary quarters till buildings can go up, we saw what courage and faith can mean. The principal, K. P. Lin, loves his hard-working job and boys. They and his teachers work with him tirelessly in the big effort of reconstruction. At dinner, delicious Chinese food, practically everything a product of the school, I asked him which weighed heavier now, discouragement or hope. He flashed a smile and replied quietly: 'We have been able to lift our heads just above the edge, and from here on it is hope.'"

"Just above the edge . . . it is hope." And so it is. Chandlers, Thelins, Jacksons and hundreds of other fine people we do not know are rebuilding the Church in Fukien Province, and others equally as fine are building elsewhere. It is a hard process; the turbulent waters roll high; but just above the edge there is hope. Our military leaders have lost hope in China and come home, but our missionaries are going to China; and there is hope.

NOW THEY FLY.

This news item from Boston was dated April 8, 1947:

"Word has just reached the American Board that David H. Rubenstein, ex-Navy veteran of World War II, and his wife have reached South Africa. The Rubensteins flew from New York by Pan American on Wednesday, April 2, and will take up their work as Congregational Christian missionaries at Adams College, Adams, South Africa."

What a different story this is from what I heard so many times as a member of the Prudential Committee of the American Board. Five years ago aged and tired missionaries travelled for months by boat trying to find a safe way home, so they could tell us of the terrific strain on the greatly depleted staff of missionaries, to beg for new recruits. Airplanes were then flying military personnel to their stations around the world. Missionaries could go by freight. It was heart-breaking to hear the pleas for help that could not be granted. The young men and women were in the war. The money was in the war. The churches, many of them, were busy with war work. The missionary income was at low tide. It was in such meetings that this writer, and others, determined that something must be done about answering the call for missionaries.

It is encouraging to know that now sometimes missionaries can hop over to Africa in less than a week, and that recruits are going. It may yet be that there will be enough workers to become effective in changing the currents of thought from pagan-

PALM STREET.

On Sunday night, April 6, Palm Street Church was the scene of a most beautiful stage setting, when the woman's missionary society gave a drama. The title was, "Heaven Is Home." This was the third time the society had presented this drama. The stage setting was made up of palms, flowers and drapes. A most wonderful truth was taught by those who took part. The entire drama is based upon the Biblical teaching about whom will be permitted to enter Heaven. The setting and characters were based on John's description of Heaven as given in the Book of Revelation. Angels were in place in the background of the setting, with Cherabim guarding the entrance. Songs were used to bring out the thought, sung by singers from the balcony. The first song used was, "How Beautiful Heaven Must Be." This prepared the minds for worship of the beauty of Heaven. Followed by a poem describing its beauty further. "If We Never Meet Again" brought out the fact that separation was coming, too, from friends and loved ones and somewhere in Heaven we could meet again if Jesus had been accepted and followed all the way. The song, "When the Saints Go Marching In," carries the idea that all ages have to meet death, so coming down the isle of the church were grown men and women followed by children. When they came to the gate the cherabim opened the gate and they entered. Thinking of the many crosses God's children have to bear before they enter Heaven, the song, "Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone," was used. The character representing this came wearily down the aisle carrying a cross that was almost too heavy and was about to fall under its weight, but so determined to make it to Heaven, he kept trudging on until they were at the gate. Laying aside the cross, and lifting hands up toward it in thanks for strength to go all the way, stood there while "My Faith Looks Up to Thee" was sung, and at the close of this song the Cherabim opened the gates of Heaven for them to enter. We used a colored woman to represent their race, to show that God was no respecter of person regardless of race. A man loaded down with the burdens of this life was next to come, but when he got to Heaven he laid his burdens all down and went into Heaven as the gates swung wide for him.

Children representing the different races of other lands came, there were those from Japan, India and China who had been brought to Christ by Christian workers and had made their way to Heaven through the blood of Jesus shed on Calvary for the remissions of their sins. Then "Aunt Van," as she is known in the whole community, came plodding her way toward Heaven while the spiritual, "I've Been Waiting," was sung. As she entered there were many sobs heard in the congregation and when on the inside of Heaven she almost burst forth shouting. Another who represented the worldly person came down the isle very glibly as if he thought his worldly possessions would make the gates swing ajar, whether he had been converted or not, that he might enter. "Softly and Tenderly" was sung while those who already had entered Heaven beckoned him to come, but he would not give his heart to Jesus, but turned and went away without repenting, expecting to settle that some other time. Another came to enter Heaven and after getting on the inside, began to search for loved ones while the song, "I Dreamed I Searched Heaven for You," was sung all the time while searching for them. At last this worldly man came back wanting to enter without being born again, but the Cherabim that were guarding the gate would not let him in. He offered first his coat, trying to bribe them, but no. Then his money, they shook their heads. Then he offered both clothes and money to be allowed to enter, but could not get in that way. As the last song was sung, "Standing Outside," this poor man stood there crying, "Lost, lost, lost!"

Recent appointments of the American Board are Miss Helen Montgomery of Evanston, Illinois, for a year of special teaching in Jefferson Academy, Tunghsein, North China, and Miss Carolyn G. Weeber of Beaver Falls, Pa., to serve as a nurse in one of our two hospitals in Madura, India.

The eloquent Negro brother was describing how the servant of God was going to speed away with the Gospel message.

"He is goin' to walk with the Gospel." A hearty Amen from the audience.

"He is going to run with the Gospel." A more hearty Amen.

"He is goin' to fly with the Gospel." A very loud Amen and some Hallelujahs from the audience.

"But it is goin' to take a lot of money for him to fly with the Gospel."

"Let him walk," said the audience.

It will take airplane speed for missionaries to save the our world before some foolish hot-head begins exploding atomic bombs. But it will take a lot of money to make them fly.

". . . . ESCAPE."

By MARTIN L. GOSLIN, D. D.*

Did you ever hear of Tortworth Court? No, well, you are not likely to. It is a prison in England, a rather unusual prison though. It has no bars, no guards, no rigid restrictions; it has opportunity, room for self-improvement, educational and cultural advantages, and every means for reclaiming and developing the best in human life. Rules and regulations are nil; there is but one inexcusable offense—ESCAPE. If one escapes from Tortworth Court he may never return! Nothing prevents him escaping, but there is NO RETURN. He will be imprisoned elsewhere.

Life is like an idealized Tortworth Court. In its untold liberty, advantages, opportunities for best relations it offers us self-expression and development. A church and religion are like this, too. They offer us free access to the best and highest means of achievement, encourage us on the way, and make plain the path. Fellowship and helpful hands are there to assist us, and all is available within the limitations of self-discipline. But we can ESCAPE! A lot of folks do. They cut themselves free from church and religion—they think they ESCAPE. Some do it by just not going to church on Sundays, and

THE TEACHER'S FRUIT BASKET.

"Miss Allen has been so nice to all of us," sighed Paul. "I'm going to miss her."

"So am I," declared Mary. "She has been so kind to me. She always gave me special help with my spelling."

"And me, with my arithmetic," joined in Lewis. "I surely hate to see her go. I don't see why she had to be transferred right now. Why can't the superintendent wait until school is out in June?"

"Or why can't they transfer some other teacher?" demanded Nell.

"Wouldn't it be great if we could give her something?" Ernie questioned. "You know, something for a good-bye gift."

"It certainly would," agreed Lawrence. "But where are we going to get the money for a gift?"

"I can bring a nickel," offered Jane.

"So can I," promised Mary Lou.

"Well, that's not enough," Lawrence told her dolefully. "Gee, I wish we could give her a box of candy. A real big one with a red ribbon on the lid."

"Or maybe a basket of fruit," suggested Polly. "I saw a beautiful one down in Burk's window. It was the most gorgeous basket filled with the most delicious looking fruit, and it had a most beautiful satin bow on the handle," she continued in her dramatic way.

"Sure you did," agreed Peter. "And so did I. But did you see the most wonderful price on it?"

"Look, kids," began Lewis seriously as he elbowed his way to the center of the group, "recess is almost over. What do you say if we all think hard and decide what we can do for Miss Allen. Tomorrow is her last day with us, so we have got to think of something now. The box of candy is a good idea, but it is out. We can't get enough money for it. And neither can we buy a basket of fruit."

"Oh, but the basket was such a beautiful one," sighed Polly.

"Well, we couldn't get enough money to buy it if we all saved our nickels for a whole month," said the practical Lewis.

"I've got it! I've got it!" Lucille suddenly exclaimed. "We can give Miss Allen a basket of fruit, and a fine one too. A long time ago, when Grandmother broke her ankle, our church sent her a beautiful basket of fruit. We still have the basket, and I know Mother will give it to me when I tell her we want to give it to Miss Allen as a good-bye gift. We each bring an apple or an orange or a peach or a pear or some other fruit as part of our lunch, don't we?" Twenty-five heads nodded eagerly. "Well," Lucille continued triumphantly, "tomorrow, bring along an extra piece of fruit. We'll all meet right here in this corner of the schoolyard especially early. Then we'll have plenty of time to arrange the fruit in the basket before the bell rings."

Shouts of glee filled the air. Bud even put his two fingers in his mouth and whistled in his sharp way. The rest of them cheered as if at a circus.

Just then the bell rang, announcing that recess was over and it was time for the children to return to their studies. But the little group over in the farthest corner of the schoolyard lingered. Now they were all looking at Polly who seemed to be bubbling over with enthusiasm.

"I'll bring my brand new hair ribbon," she was saying. "It's beautiful red satin. And I'll tie it on the handle just like the one in Burke's window!"

"Just like the one in Burke's window!" echoed twenty-five happy boys and girls as they ran across the schoolyard to join the other children who were already assembled in their proper lines to pass into the building.—Exchange.

FOR RENT—NO CHILDREN.

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Have landlords any real reason for not allowing children to live in their houses and apartments, or are they just bent on curbing the population?

If you depend upon rents for your livelihood, you will know the answer only too well. If you are a parent looking for a place in which to live, probably you will feel outraged—other youngsters may be undesirable, but not yours! Entirely true, perhaps, but what proof has the landlord?

Let us try to find the real causes for this attitude of mind on the part of landlords. One, when asked reasons for barring children from her apartments, replied, "The older boys and girls are apt to be rough and noisy, so they annoy other tenants; the younger ones are usually destructive. It doesn't pay to rent to those who have children."

The best place for us to bring up our boys and girls is in a house of our own—preferably outside the city; but to find and keep such a nest is not always possible. Respect for the wishes of others and an understanding of the right treatment of property—both public and private—should be a part of every child's education; and when he is brought to live in rented quarters, it becomes unquestionably a must to make sure that he really has this understanding. In this, as in other ways of behaving, children usually make grotesque copies of the examples set by the adults around them.

I once remonstrated with a neighbor whom I really liked. "My dear, those chairs have been left out in rain and sun ever since you took that house—they'll be ruined, won't they?"

"I should worry—we're paying good rent!" was the retort.

"But rent won't also cover the price of chairs," I said.

"Well, what's that to me? It's no concern of mine." Then she turned suddenly, "John, Mary, run out on and play. Stop listening to everything we say!"

The children went, but too late—they had already been given the wrong impression with regard to other people's property.

Boys and girls are never entirely to blame for their faults. Baby is spun around on the gramophone disc. Davenport and mattresses are used as bouncing machines—more for the amusement of adults than for the youngsters. Naturally, these children continue this kind of fun when they are far too heavy, and the furniture is thereby ruined.

The very young, if they once experiment, find it interesting to mark on walls; but if you provide scribblers on low tables and a piece of black board on an easel, they will be quite satisfied, for these are much better than walls for artistic effort. Even a dog or cat can be house-trained—so can a child learn seemliness and develop a sense of values, if anyone will take the trouble to teach him.

Noise is another disturbing element. Have we a right to require youngsters to be quiet, or must they be permitted to make all the racket

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

RALLY AT WINSTON-SALEM.

On Sunday afternoon, March 30, 1947, at 4:00 o'clock, a Youth Rally was held in Winston-Salem, N. C., at the Congregational Church, for the young people of Ivey Hill, Elk Spur, Rocky Ford, Pfafftown, Salem Chapel, Belews Creek and Winston-Salem Congregational Christian Churches, and their leaders.

A worship service and reading of parables was led by Baxter Twiddy.

After the worship service and one drama, we went down stairs for recreation, which was led by W. J. Andes, and supper. During this time we planned an organization for these young people in which we will meet quarterly. We selected officers which are as follows: Grady Young, Winston-Salem, president; Marie Cole, Elk Spur, vice-president; Jeanniene Mabe, Belews Creek, secretary-treasurer.

This was planned by the Winston-Salem young people to have these meetings so as to get better acquainted with other young people of other churches of our type.

The theme for the evening was: "Christians Are Different." We brought out this theme by dramas of Biblical and modern stories. The dramas presented were: "Talents," and "The Uninvited Guest," given by the Salem Chapel young people, and "In the Bethany Home," by the Winston-Salem young people.

About ninety were present at this Rally. We hope we can keep up the good work started. Our next meeting is to be in Carroll County the last week in June.

ASHEVILLE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

The Youth Fellowship of the Asheville Church is planning a series of five supper meetings to study the history of the Congregational Christian Churches. The meetings will be held Sunday evenings, beginning April 20. They will use as their study book the pamphlet, An Adventure in Liberty, which is published by the Missions Council. The pastor, Aubrey Todd, will lead the studies.

The young people made their own plans for the Sunrise Easter Service and had complete charge of the program. The service was interracial, with Negro young people on the planning committee and taking part in the service.

The Youth Fellowship sponsored an art exhibition at the church on Sunday afternoon, April 13. Tea was served and there was special music during the exhibit.

CELEBRATING CHRISTIAN FAMILY WEEK.

By MRS. ROBERT M. KIMBALL,
Family Life Superintendent.

Now that the Easter rush is over, I hope you will start making plans to observe Christian Family Week, May 4-10, in your church. There are so many things that might be done. Here are a few suggestions:

(1) Make a special drive to have your members attend church on May 4 as families. It may be helpful to do this through the Sunday school. There is a lot of truth in the words, "A little child shall lead them," and if the children ask their parents to attend church, it often has more influence than the invitation of anyone else. It would be good for the minister to recognize family groups in some special way, and of course he should be on the look-out for new faces. The mother or father of one of the Sunday School children may be a prospective member for the church who has been previously missed. Be sure that you do not let the spirit created on that day wane, continue to stimulate the interest of families to attend church together.

(2) Why not have a picnic supper at the church on Sunday evening and invite all the church families to attend? Plan a really worthwhile program, advertise the meeting, make a lot of personal calls, try in every way to get a large group to come out and eat supper together and stay for the evening worship. It might be that everyone would enjoy the evening so much that they would decide to have monthly Fellowship Suppers. Not only would this be good for the whole spirit of the church, but it would help to increase attendance at the Sunday evening services.

(3) You might plan a special program, or just a social, for the parents of young children in your church. Try to arrange for members of your young people's group to act as "sitters" that night free of charge, and endeavor to get all the young couples of the church out to this meeting. It is very seldom that husbands and wives of young children get to attend church meetings together, so you would want to see that the program was especially interesting and worthwhile. Maybe you would like to have a speaker, or just an evening of games and singing and good fellowship, and of course, refreshments. If this program was well planned and proved worthwhile, it might be the beginning of a "Married Couples Club" in your church. In almost every church there are young couples who have not found a place to work and serve in the church. If your church is faced with this problem, let "Christian Family Week" be a means of drawing these people into the church.

(4) Then the young people might like to entertain their parents during "Christian Family Week." For your program you might borrow the film strip and records from the Conference Office entitled, "Is Your Home Fun?" I know every church could not have this program the same week, but it is an idea to tuck away for some convenient time. The program might consist of a panel discussion by parents and young people on a subject such as, "Things I Like and Things I Dislike About My Home." It would also be nice for the young people and their parents to have a social time together. If you have folk dancing in your church, it would be an interesting experiment to have the group join in folk dancing together. Many a boy or girl would get a new sense of appreciation for Mother and Dad if they could see with what ease they can "swing along."

(5) The Saturday before Mother's Day might be a good time for the younger children in the Church School to plan a program for their mothers. They might have a little play or have a display of some project they have been working on each Sunday.

It would be a good thing if every church would have a committee appointed to make plans for "Christian Family Week." Study your local situation, decide upon the things you would like to do, appoint your committees, get to work at once, there's no time to lose. Make "Christian Family Week" work for your church by binding the family together in closer bonds of fellowship to each other and to the church of which they are a part.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 72.

A Blank Check.

"Ask what I shall give thee." What would you ask if you had your choice of just one thing? What would you like best of all as a gift from God? It is a searching question. And a revealing one. It puts in the spotlight one's sense of values. And, of course, all of us answer it in our own way. All of us have something, or some things which we think are of supreme value, things for which we are willing to pay the highest prices, not always in money, but in toil and sacrifice and character and life itself. God does give us a blank check, signed. And in a very real way each one of us fills in the thing he wants most.

A Wise Choice.

This young man, Solomon, made a wise choice, in response to God's offer. Instead of asking for riches, or the life of his enemies, or many other things for which he might have asked, things good in themselves, the young king asked for wisdom. In words that are models of gratitude and humility he asks for an "understanding heart," for the ability to discern between good and evil, for wisdom. He perhaps instinctively knew that the fear of the Lord was the beginning of wisdom. He felt a deep sense of responsibility. At first he looked upon public office as a public trust. He wanted to be "able to judge this thy great people."

A Wise Man.

"And God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding, exceeding much, and largeness of heart, even as the sand of the sea-shore. For he was wiser than all men . . . and his fame spread in all the nations that were round about." Here was a man who had been richly endowed with sagacity and insight and practical commonsense. He knew plants and shrubs and trees and animals. He coined wise and witty sayings, proverbs they were called then and now. He wrote songs according to the record. His fame spread far and wide. People came from long distances to hear him talk and to feed on his wisdom. And not only common folk, but even kings from far-off places came to hear his wise sayings. His short, crisp, wise sayings were especially acceptable to the oriental mind.

A Builder.

It was appointed to Solomon to build the first Temple, although it was given to his father, David, to dream of it and to make preparation for it. And right well did Solomon do the work that was assigned to him, for Solomon's Temple was a magnificent structure. No cost was spared in making it imposing and splendid, both in structure and in appointments. And of course without modern methods of construction, there was a prodigious amount of work involved. It would appear that thirty thousand men, working in relays of a month away from home and two months at home, and also one hundred fifty thousand "forced laborers" were at work for a long time in building this mighty and majestic Temple for the worship of Jehovah and for His dwelling place.

A Big Business Man.

Solomon was also a big business man. He owned fourteen hundred chariots and he employed twelve thousand horsemen. In today's language he had quite a sizeable fleet of trucks. He made money hand over fist—silver became as mere stones in Jerusalem, and cedar became as plentiful as old sycamore. He bought horses and linen, and held them at high prices and at big profit. He made so much money that he probably did not know just how much money he did have. If he were alive today, the government would get a big slice in income taxes. But as later records show, he made much of this money at the expense of the common people. Their work was hard and their taxes heavy. And as a poet wrote hundreds of years later:

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay."

An A La Hollywood Idol.

This fellow, Solomon, outdid anybody that Hollywood ever dreamed of. He had hundreds of wives and even more concubines. And many of them were women of strange religions and pagan ideals. To be sure we must not judge Solomon by the standards of our day. It was the custom in those days for people to have more than one wife, and a king could have as many as he wanted. But the fact that custom allowed it did not eliminate the danger in it. There was jealousy and intrigue in the harem. And worst of all, these women of foreign religions and strange cults, gradually and perhaps unknowingly to the king, weaned his heart away from the worship of Jehovah. He built high places for these heathen gods and sacrificed unto them. He compromised his ideals and broke his covenant. He was not the first man with a wife who did not have the moral sense of a rat who has caused a man to compromise his love for God and to lose his devotion to God.

A Wise Man and Yet a Fool.

Solomon was a wise man, and yet he made a fool of himself. His heart was turned away from Jehovah, the God of Israel. There are many smart people who do not have commonsense. And there are many intelligent people who are not really wise. Any man who leaves God out of his life is not wise no matter how much he knows.

"ESCAPE . . ."

others do it by an indifference and intolerance to all things religious. Any kind of excuse will do for a pass: skiing, fishing, golf, fresh air, sunshine, exercise . . . anything!

ESCAPE is easy, but RETURN is hard! A real life is bounded by restrictions self-imposed. We are set free from the imprisonment of the Law to become "slaves of Christ." If one is going to be attached or confined it at least should be to something high and fine!

NOT BY BREAD ALONE.

By C. B. RIDDLE.

The recent request of southern Korea for financial aid from the United States spotlights the long struggle of "the hermit kingdom" to survive as an independent state.

Korea is only a symbol of a strife-torn world where food can relieve hunger, but cannot uproot the evils of war.

The history of Korea is long, its modern civilization dating from 1122 B. C. Once independent, and to a degree prosperous and happy, for 500 years Koreans have faced numerous difficulties. Korea is often called the land of sorrow.

Korea is a peninsula between the Sea of Japan and the Yellow Sea, separated from the Japanese islands by the Strait of Korea. The country has an area a little less than that of North Carolina and Virginia combined, and a population approximating three times the population of these States.

When Korea was freed from Japanese control in 1945, the country was divided into two zones, one occupied by the United States Army and the other by the Russian Army. The zones were fixed not so much by agreement as by accident. Our soldiers entered from the south and the Russians from the north.

Thus geographical entrance was the main factor in the zoning, but Korea's coal and the bulk of other natural resources are in the northern section of the peninsula. Russia's so-called iron curtain stopped the flow of commerce between the two sections of the country, and as a consequence, the southern portion is now in dire economic straits. This situation resulted in the request for financial aid.

One must go back a few centuries to realize how long Korea has suffered from outside interference. Its shores were ravaged by the Japanese at intervals throughout the 15th and 16th centuries. In 1592, Korea was invaded by 300,000 Japanese. China aided Korea with an army of 60,000 but too small to be of successful assistance. The main cities of the peninsula were overrun, and the art treasures as well as the artists carried to Japan.

After this harrowing experience Korea closed its doors to the outside world and became known as "the hermit kingdom," although Japan had been likewise classified by other nations. When missionaries from France and the United States sought entry into Korea they were killed. Both nations sent punitive expeditions to Korea in 1866, 1867 and 1871 but without diplomatic success. The Koreans had written into their history a vivid description of what happened to their land when the Japanese gained entry.

In 1882 and 1883 the United States and Great Britain negotiated treaties with Korea, but soon after commerce began to flow between these countries and Korea, Japan again became hostile to the Koreans. After Japan's victory over Russia in 1905, Japan renewed its attacks on Korea. In 1910 Korea was forced to surrender.

However, the national instinct of Korea never died, and the zeal of Koreans for freedom was stirred anew in 1919 by Woodrow Wilson's "declaration of independence" for this centuries-old race which had fought so long and so valiantly for the right to be left alone.

When the Big Three met in Cairo in one of their historic conferences pertaining to World War II, the conferees agreed, and so announced, that Korea was to have its freedom after the war's closing. The conferees reiterated their statement at Potsdam. Obviously, this gave Koreans their fondest hope. Failure to realize that hope makes the present situation all the more disappointing to Korea.

Since the inhabitants of southern Korea cannot get needed supplies from the northern section of their country, they are holding out solicitous hands to the United States. Their appeal will likely be met, for there is something in the sadness of this white-robed race which compels sympathy and respect. Their stoic dignity is also compelling.

The name which the Korean people apply to their country is Chosen, and which was once the official name. The word means "morning calm." But it is paradoxical that there is no calm in Korea. Only the spirit of Christ accepted and applied by Korea's oppressors can calm the storm which rages in other frustrated parts of the world.

Thus, Korea, especially the southern portion, is a symbol of war-torn countries that may eat today by the generosity of other nations, but cannot live tomorrow unless the spirit of war is supplanted by the spirit of Christ.

She invested the amount in founding the now famous Berry Schools, and then informed Mr. Ford what she had accomplished.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Making a garden has kept us busy for nearly a week. Preparing the ground and planting a garden to take care of nearly a hundred, takes time to do if it is to be done right. We plant a little of everything in the beginning, and in a few weeks will plant more, so when the first crop runs out we will have another supply ready. It takes a lot of planning and quite a lot of work to keep something coming in in the place of some that has matured and has been used up. But it is interesting to try to work it out this way.

We try to have green vegetables from the time they first come in until the frost bites them in the fall. Sometimes the weather conditions prevent us from making things work out as we had hoped or intended. But most of the season we will have green vegetables. There is nothing like going to the garden and getting green cabbage, beans, corn, or a basket of beautiful, luscious, red tomatoes, and get them fresh from the home garden. It beats having to go to the store and buying them in a paper bag. Then think of buying for a hundred! It makes quite a difference.

Your Superintendent had the opportunity to attend the annual meeting of the Tri-State Conference of Orphanage Superintendents and Workers, which met on April 7 and 8 in Charlotte, N. C. It was one of the best we have ever attended and one of the most interesting. In listening to the splendid addresses, we learned that all orphanages have about the same problems. The children in all of them are about alike. The writer sometimes will have a child to do some little aggravating thing, but when we look back at the time when we were that age, we can see that we did things just about as aggravating to our fathers and mothers as the child does here. I could not see it then, but I can see it and realize it now. The children are no worse now than they were when I was a little boy. We hear more about it, because there are so many more children than there were in that day. All of them have good and bad points. We try to develop the good points so they will outgrow the bad points, and grow into fine young men and women.

national heterogeneity, for he has gone with his family to the neighborhood church. If he has gone to college, he has met men of other churches there, but they have all been churches he has heard of before—and the college chapel has provided a religion of the highest common denominator. But in the Army or Navy, he enjoys the dreadful opportunity of seeing the entirety of American ecclesiastical life in microcosm. On his left is a Catholic and on his right a Mormon, before him a Nazarene and behind him an Orthodox Greek. He may come to enjoy them. If he is the right type he will try to understand them—but in the meantime, if he lets his imagination give him the eye through which the God and Father of Jesus Christ looks at the world, he must shake his head and sadly admit that the Church is anything but a brotherhood. To dream that this blotched canvass of tensions and misapprehensions is what Christ died for is, of course, the most unadulterated nonsense. We tolerate it only because the walls of our routine protect each one of us from seeing the country or the world as it is. Said Arthur Henderson a generation ago, "However much Christians may console themselves that a church divided into numerous sects is justified, and as they think, a source of strength, the multitude is slow to believe in a Christianity so divided"—and Arthur Henderson knew the mind of the common man.

The necessity of unitedness is equally clear from the point of view of our message to the world. Though we shall glance later at the condition of the world to which the Church is appointed to minister, we may provisionally agree that a chief ailment is its brokenness, its un-brotherhood, its stratification into classes, and coagulation into competitive groups. Nation builds up walls of steel and hatred against nation, group maneuvers to exploit group, man organizes inhumanity to man. What is needed is obviously community of purpose, a substratum of acknowledged unity—but how can a Church of over 200 sects impart unity of purpose to anything or anybody? If in a theatre a spectator fainted and, a doctor called for, forty doctors crowded around the patient, it is to be feared that the last state of the man would be worse than the first. The state of the body politic of this country or of the world cannot be said to be improved by the numerousness and lack of organization of the ecclesiastical doctors available. When we say to the nations: You should get together—what response can we rightly expect from them but a smile of disillusionment, if not of contempt? The denominations, lodged as each tends to be in a particular class in society, have a special entree to the groups to which they belong, but how can they promote reconciliation between the classes as long as they, the religious spokesmen for the classes, remain unreconciled themselves?

Albert Peel underscores the contribution that denominations have to make to democracy:

The churches must still continue to set a pattern of democracy to the world. In their harmony and tolerance they should set an example to those who are without. "See how these Christians love one another," must not be said in scorn and irony, but as a sincere if maybe reluctant tribute. By this constant and sustained witness the churches will do more to win the world to the democratic way than by any other means.

I have spoken of each denomination being constituted to conquer the world: Congregational groups will not cease till the whole world is Congregational—Presbyterians till it is all Presbyterian—Episcopalian until it is entirely Episcopalian. Now that idea is not so evil as it may at first sound, provided these claims are not mutually exclusive—as I do not think they need to be. When Mr. Smith and Miss Jones marry, their ancestral families do not become extinct but are carried on jointly; and I know no Mendelian law of the genus ecclesiastica which would prevent the same issue there. Indeed, denominations which are not conscious of value in themselves can have little to contribute to the united Church. Surely communions which do not possess a HARGROVES.

On January 29, 1947, God in His great wisdom and love called Mrs. Luciphene Everett Hargroves from this world to a world of greater service above. She was a member of Berea Christian Church, Nansmond, and its auxiliaries. She was faithful in her duties and took an active part in all the work until her failing health. She will be greatly missed.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we have lost a dear member and a consecrated Christian.
2. That she bore her heavy burden of suffering bravely, and remained cheerful and bright, and great was her faith in God whom she loved and served.
3. That her many friends were evidenced not only by the great number present at the funeral but also in the tributes of the many and lovely floral gifts.
4. That we, the members of our church auxiliaries, extend our deepest sympathy to each member of her family, and pray that God may bless and comfort them in their great loss.
5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one to "The Christian Sun" for publication and one placed upon the minutes of the church auxiliaries.

SAUNDERS.

On October 25, 1946, God called to rest Mrs. Maggie Saunders. She had been an invalid for a number of years. She was a loving mother, a true friend and a devoted Christian. She was an active member of Bethlehem Christian Church and its Ladies Aid Society until her health failed.

Therefore, in recognition of her service as one of our loyal members, we offer the following resolutions of respect to her memory:

1. That we humbly bow to God's will giving thanks to Him for a useful life devoted to the church and consecrated to the cause of Christ and His kingdom.
2. That we extend our sympathy to her family, praying that in their sorrow, they may find peace with God.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be placed upon our church records.

HARRIS.

In loving memory of Miss Bessie Harris whom God called to rest on January 28, 1947.

We, the members of Bethlehem Christian Church, desire to express our appreciation of her life. She was an active church member until her health failed. She was truly a good woman, a true friend and a devoted Christian.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we humbly submit to God's will, giving thanks to Him for a useful life.
2. That we extend anew our sympathy to her family praying that in this sorrow they may find the peace of God that passeth understanding.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy placed upon the church records and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

PIERCE.

On October 28, 1946, Bethlehem community was shocked at the sudden death of our dear neighbor and friend, Mrs. J. C. Pierce. She was a devoted member of Bethlehem Christian Church, a member of the Ladies Star Class, Ladies Aid and Missionary Societies. She was always ready and willing to help in every way possible, a good neighbor and a true friend. We will never cease to miss her smiling face and kind words.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.
2. That we extend our heart-felt sympathy to her devoted family and commend them to our Heavenly Father for comfort and peace, and pray God's richest blessings upon them in their sorrow.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication and a copy placed upon our church records.

CULIFER.

On January 16, 1947, God in His infinite wisdom and love, saw fit to call from our midst, Mrs. Betty Raiford Culifer. She was an active member of Bethlehem Christian Church until failing health prevented her. We desire by these few remarks to express our appreciation for her life which was lived in consecrated service to God, her family, neighbors and friends.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of her church, bow in humble submission to God's will.
2. That we extend our heart-felt sympathy to her brother and sister and all her loved ones commending them to our Heavenly Father for comfort and peace, realizing that His grace is sufficient for all our needs.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be placed upon our church records.

NOTICE!

When you send in an obituary notice, it should be typewritten. But if it is written in longhand, be sure that the proper names are written distinctly. You know these names, but it is quite often that the printer does not, and if the writing is not legible, he has to guess, and he usually guesses wrong.

they wish? Noise, even to the young, is wearing and unnecessary; and the more it is controlled, the more likely will the child be to grow up sane and attractive.

A spoiled child should not be taken to live in rented quarters; it is not fair to anyone, not even to himself. A troublesome youngster is disliked and avoided, while the one who behaves and considers others comes to move among people with assurance and pleasure—he has a priceless gift for all time.

But even when we have taught our boys and girls to be well-behaved and considerate, how are we to convince the landlord of this? Perhaps a sum of money deposited by parents and to be returned if no damage is done would serve. Any marked walls could be redecorated from this fund, broken windows replaced, soiled mattresses renovated, and ink-stained carpets cleaned. Surely, if we who are parents held a right attitude toward rented property, applied the Golden Rule, and brought up our offspring to be desirable to live with, we should go a long way toward destroying the prejudice which has been caused by annoying and destructive youngsters.

humble self-belief are a useless encumbrance to the earth: who wants to have to do with the sentimental "I love everybody" kind of church member? Better a Covenanter who loves the memories of the moors with savage affection, a Moravian whose heart burns at the mention of Herrnhut, than a tepid Christian-in-general in whose arteries runs only milk. We like denominations which are streams of pure rushing water, but is there any reason why these waters should not some day reach a confluence and make a mightier stream that includes them all?

BOMBS OVER INDIA

By JOHN J. BANNINGA

Emeritus Missionary of the American Board

An atomic bomb fell on Hiroshima last summer, killing not less than 100,000 people. The whole world was horror-struck and has not yet recovered from the fear then engendered.

But listen! Atomic bombs have been falling on India every year for decades, destroying more lives than were lost at Hiroshima. The tuberculosis bomb kills 500,000 persons every year. The malaria bomb kills upward of 1,000,000 men, women and children each year. The leprosy bomb destroys hundreds of thousands yearly not merely through death but by terrible mutilation and suffering. The bombs of cholera, elephantiasis, infant mortality, mental diseases, and so forth, keep falling on India day by day, causing millions of casualties, far more in number than ever were slain on battlefields.

No defense has as yet been found against the atomic bomb. But thank God, year by year better means are being discovered to combat the terrible diseases mentioned. It looks as though the day might shortly come, when, if men everywhere would unite in the effort, medical science could wipe out these dangers and make the world a safer place in which to be born, live and work.

The Medical College and Hospital at Vellore, South India, is an outpost in the army of health which is not only healing those already sick but trying to prevent sickness through proper hygiene, sanitation and other protective measures.

Vellore is the growing result of the experience of its founder, Dr. Ida S. Scudder, in coming into direct contact with the suffering women of India, and of her determination to do something to help them. The present college and hospital are something far beyond her fondest dream in those early days but those now associated with "Dr. Ida" realize that the institution is not yet equipped to accomplish the great task before it.

There are 388,000,000 people in India and only about 50,000 doctors of all grades, most of them of insufficient training. Vellore hopes to prepare both young men and women for efficient medical service. The college is now recognized by Madras University as qualified to train students for the M.B., M.S. degree, the highest obtainable in India. The governing board of the former Woman's College, the Medical Association of India and over forty missionary societies of Australia, Great Britain, Denmark, Canada and the United States have worked together toward this end.

New buildings have been planned and are being erected as fast as materials can be obtained, and new members have been added to the staff. The government of India has assisted. The end is not yet, for special institutions for research in leprosy, tuberculosis, mental diseases, and so forth, must be established. The 700,000 villages of India still need a real medical service. India has all too few nurses, but Vellore now has a college giving nurse's training of university standard and seeks to train many in the nursing profession. And so on through a long category of needs and opportunities confronting the Christian Medical College at Vellore.

A Moslem in India watched a doctor perform a serious operation on one of his friends. When the operation was over, he remarked, "That was the most Christlike service that I have ever seen."

"The Call of India"

By REV. ALBERT BUCKNER COE, D. D.

I went to India with open mind—searching for truth. I myself had not been free of doubts. Now that I have seen and heard I bring you this message: First—India is three-fifths as large as the United States, with three times the population. Second—India is a land of intense religious feeling, with 275,000,000 Hindus, 90,000,000 Mohammedans, 7,000,000 Christians, 5,000,000 Sikhs, also Parsis and Jews. Third—The caste system of the Hindus still dominates India. The Brahmin is first; the learned man. The Kshatras, second; the military. The Vaisyas, third; the traders. The Sudras, fourth; serving the other three. Outside, the Untouchables. While caste shows signs of breaking down, it will continue for a long time. Fourth—Our Congregational Christian work is concentrated in (a) the Marathi area, around Bombay, (b) the Madura area, in the south of India around Madura, (c) the Ceylon area, about the size of Chicago. Fifth—Our Congregational Christian work in India and Ceylon is well organized, with a church-centered plan. Near the churches are schools and hospitals. Sixth—Church union is in the air, cf. the United Church of Northern India and the South India United Church. Seventh—The religion of the Indian Christian is for the most part marked by the simplest of interpretations, an acceptance of the literal in scripture. Eighth—All denominations in India and Ceylon have been for the past twenty-five years turning the leadership of the church and the institutions over to the nationals. Ninth—Though Christians in India are only 7,000,000, their influence is greater than the figures suggest. Tenth—Christianity has brought great value to India and Ceylon. The women of that land have come forward. Outcaste people have taken on new life. National leaders have been developed from our Christian groups.

Problems: A climax had apparently come in the long fight for freedom. Such a national drive is having its effect upon missions. As the political scene changes, changes must come in the missionary life of India. The missionary, once a benevolent master, is now turning the leadership over to the churchmen of India and Ceylon, but only as rapidly as strong national leadership comes forward. We cannot make strong leaders over night. Because of poverty the Indian churches cannot provide adequate funds. Money and missionaries must still go from America to help. You would be proud of the schools and colleges and the churches and the work of the Bible women. But our missionary work is shorthanded.

Some suggestions to you: First—Hold up the hands of the American Board for a stronger national ministry with scholarships. The writer is asking our church in Oak Park, Chicago, to assume the responsibility for the full college and seminary education of (Continued on page 9.)

RADIO BROADCAST.

Vengeance and the Golden Rule struggle for a man's soul in "The Greatest Story Ever Told" program on Sunday, April 27, over the ABC network at 6:30 P. M., EDST.

In the countryside of ancient Galilee, the old man Seth and his wife Ruth face the hazardous future with no financial security save the pittance paid Seth by his miserly employer, Ebenezer.

When Seth asks the avaricious Ebenezer for a raise based on his ability and long service, the employer threatens him with dismissal. Affairs are further complicated when their widowed Rhoda and her small son Philip come to live with Seth and Ruth.

Ebenezer finally seizes on the pretext of Seth's listening too closely to the Nazarene's message ("Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them") to discharge his faithful bookkeeper.

So a bitter and saddened Seth searches in vain for new employment. Shortly thereafter Ebenezer is seized by government tax officials from Rome on charges of tax evasion brought about by the faulty methods of Seth's successor.

It is then that Seth, despite the treatment that he had received at the hands of Ebenezer, and despite the vengeful attitude of his family, finds that the words of the Master are more important than anything else.

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION LAYMEN'S MEETING.

The Laymen's Committee of the Southern Convention will meet at Alamance Hotel, Burlington, N. C., Saturday and Sunday, April 26-27, when Mr. Walter A. Graham, executive director of the National Laymen's Fellowship of Congregational Christian Churches will be present. The committee will meet from 2:00 P. M.-5:00 P. M., and at 6:30 there will be a Fellowship Supper and Laymen's Rally, when it is hoped that as many laymen as possible will be in attendance. Reservations for the Fellowship Supper should be sent to Superintendent Scott.

We are fortunate in having Mr. Graham present for these meetings. Much strength can come to our churches if we can rally our laymen into greater activity.

"Christian laymen around the world have a big job ahead of them today and they are taking a renewed interest in the daily application of Christian principles. Jesus was a layman. He worked and talked as a layman. He fixed once and for all the principles that preaching and practice must be one and the same," says Walter A. Graham, executive director of the National Laymen's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches.

Himself a Christian layman with wide experience in business, legal and government circles, Mr. Graham makes his home in Pembroke, Ky., but his duties as executive director of the Laymen's Fellowship take him all over the U. S. A. conferring with the laymen of the Congregational Christian Churches.

Mr. Graham believes laymen should put as much careful planning into their programs as into their business, and that they should advertise them. "More and more laymen are realizing that a peaceful and happy world can best be secured by beginning as individuals to practice the ideas and teachings of Christ in all their relationships," says Mr. Graham, who hopes to rally the men of the Congregational Christian Churches to renewed devotion and intelligent interest in the world-wide aspects of the Kingdom of God.

In addition to his ten years in Government service and eight years of law practice in Washington, D. C., and in Kentucky, Mr. Graham has also been a teacher of public speaking and human relations as well as a management consultant in private concerns. He is a director of the People's Bank in Pembroke, Ky.

While in Government service, Mr. Graham spent a period during World War II in Puerto Rico on a confidential assignment. In Washington he was with the Department of Commerce serving as a special contract claims examiner in the General Accounting Office and during the war as administrative and personnel officer of the Office of Censorship.

WALTER A. GRAHAM.
Executive Director Laymen's Fellowship of Congregational Christian Churches.

As a pioneer in the field of religious work for young adults between the ages of twenty-four and thirty-eight, Mr. Graham founded the Methodist Young Adult Movement and did such a fine job in this field that soon other denominations were seek-ink his counsel. He puts teaching young adults among his "hobbies" so deep is his interest in religious education, but he also enjoys bowling, golf, swimming, tennis, baseball, music and fox hunting.

Mr. Graham belongs to the International City Manager's Association, the Society for the Advancement of Management and the Kiwanis International. He has pled cases before the United States Supreme Court, the United States Court of Appeals in Washington, D. C., as well as in the courts of Kentucky.

A Kentuckian by birth he was educated at Kentucky Wesleyan College, Yale University Law School (LL.D.), Benjamin Franklin University and George Washington University.

PROMOTION.

"Thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

It is a bit difficult for us to realize that eternal life hinges on what may for the moment appear to be rather trivial things. "Faith over a few things." The irreducible minimum has never been determined, but of one thing we are certain: it is qualitative and not quantitative. The one talent, the cup of cold water given, the two mites cast in, the two turtle doves offered, all these are the reiterated emphasis on the divine recognition of faithfulness, even in its smallest manifestations. This scriptural truth should give hope to every child of God. None of us is so bereft of talent and means that we are unable to express in a tangible way our gratitude to God and love for our neighbor. The penny-a-meal plan of giving to missions, the outgrown or discarded suit given to our destitute neighbors across the water, these items are by no means insignificant in the divine economy. On the contrary, they become in reality our celestial passports. God only can compute and appreciate the aggregate influence of manifold faithfulness over small things.

"Ruler over many things." Ruler? We like that. But, note this, the rule will be over things, not people. We like to rule over people. The celestial rule is over what things? The things that pertain to the realized Kingdom of God. It is that simple and that profound. There is no limit ("many things") to its progression.

"Enter into the joy of thy Lord." Amid our tears at funerals (we see tears occasionally at funerals!), we should remember these words, especially when we sense this appropriateness. People have a way of saying, "I enjoyed myself very much." Precisely! Our joy is self-centered and essentially selfish. In the rarified atmosphere of fleshless appetites we shall learn and experience the full and uninterrupted "joy of the Lord." This is the zenith of promotion: selfless occupation and exultation.

LIFE EXTENSION.

Through all man's history he has been confronted with the brevity and transiency of life. "The days of our years are three score years and ten, and if by reason of strength they be four score years yet is their strength labor and sorrow." Man must adjust himself to this cramped and limited span. "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

How can one break through the narrow confines of life? How can the life cycle be extended? Biologically of course. The prophetic and startling words announced to the patriarch Abraham were fulfilled: "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Immortality has its genesis on the physical, biological level. Thank God for noble families.

The benefactor, the philanthropist finds another way of extending and multiplying the life cycle.

Through legacies, bequests, and endowments, the dead live and speak. This avenue is open for many. One need not be a millionaire in order to be a benefactor. Everyone should remember the Church and its institutions in his will. This kind of will perpetuates the influence of the departed among the living.

Just as the human body contains within itself the biological heritage of previous generations and is capable of propagating it, so the personality resident within the body contains even more strikingly the impress of creative ideas and influences of the past and is capable of transmitting them. As Carl Wallace Miller has suggested, that which was of paramount importance in Jesus, the vital flood of religious and ethical insights that welled up from the depths of his being, lives today in the countless lives of his followers. If this is true of the contributions of previous generations to those of us who live today, is it not just as true of our own influence on future generations? Perhaps Jesus had this in mind when he said to the woman of Samaria, "The water which I shall give him shall be in him a well of water spring into everlasting life." George Eliot has not exhausted the meaning of immortality, but has laid a sure foundation for it in the well-known word:

Oh, may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence, live
In pulses stirred to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
Of miserable aims that end with self
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
And with their mild persistence urge men's search
To vaster issues

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.

Seventy-five years of achievement was marked on April 18 by the International Uniform Lessons, used in churches throughout the United States and Canada, when the anniversary of its origin was celebrated, according to the Rev. Philip C. Landers, associate general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education.

For it was on April 18, 1872, that the International Sunday School Association, which later became the International Council of Religious Education, approved the adoption of the International Uniform Lessons. This was the first major effort in which Protestant Sunday school forces of America united, and it provided a series of uniform lessons which could be used in each department of the entire Sunday school based on the same Scripture text.

"It is impossible to estimate the spiritual influences of the Uniform Lessons, taught by thousands of teachers and studied by twenty million (Please turn to page 14.)

The Idea of a Denomination

By DR. DOUGLAS HORTON

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF A TRULY CHRISTIAN DENOMINATION.

What constitutes a truly Christian denomination? What are the characteristics of a communion preparing itself in God's good time to add its strength to the ecumenical Church? All denominations claim to be Christian: it is therefore necessary to examine their attitudes and activities rather than their words. On the negative side I suppose that we must say that if their deeds are not such as to permit or foster the coming of the ecumenical Church, they are so far forth unchristian.

I. Let the Church Be the Church.

The communion which accords with the mind of Christ will be in the first place, I believe, a church, in the sense of a company of declared believers. The battle for this conception of the Church seems to have been fought and won in the Protestant world, but the victory is forever threatened. This conception of the gathered church tends constantly to be known by that of the society church.

For a contemporary illustration of a Church which has soaked so thoroughly into the fabric of society that it has lost its own fresh and vital character, look at a typical Hindu village in India today. The temple in the center, whither the people go for worship, is regarded as the residence of the god from which he participates in the regular life of the community, but that temple has a very different effect upon the community from a gathered church, such as we know in a living American community. Dr. Arthur E. Holt was once talking to an Indian savant. "Do you, as an observer of the ways of religion in India," he asked, "notice any differences between Christianity and the other faiths?" "The difference," said the other, "is manifest for any but the blind to see. The Hindu temple belongs to the village. It grows up out of the village life, like a tree out of the village soil. It is a phase of its being. The priest's duties are assigned him by the recurrent occasions of village existence: he must bless the seeds at seed time, give thanks for the crops at harvest time, perform the due rites at birth, marriage, and death, and in general serve as the religious voice of the people.

"In contrast consider a village with a missionary Christian church in it. The church is not indigenous. It may not be foreign in point of architecture, leadership, or any other human attribute, but it never, as long as it remains true to its own character, seems to have grown up out of the village life. It is never quite of the society there: it stands over against the society. It is not a phase of the village existence: it is a phase of another and higher existence, which touches the village most closely at that spot. In order to bring the life of the village into line with this other life, the minister preaches reform and calls for new commitment, as a priest, being part of the scene, would not dream of doing."

Enlarge the instance to national proportions and you have a distinction between the Christian and the Hindu religions in India. It is understandable why the latter is called an ethnic or natural religion. It belongs to the people by virtue of their birth. It is apparently the oldest kind of religion, and today rules by far the largest segment of humanity.

The Gathered Church Degenerates Into the Society Church.

The illustration of the Hindu community applies to our discussion because it is this kind of society church into which Christian denomination constantly tends to lapse, becoming merely the religions of Christendom and not expressions of vital Christianity.

It was this kind of church which prevailed for the most part in the England of the Tudors. When Elizabeth came to the throne, the more sensitive Christians saw little difference between the Christianity of the day and paganism. The parish church of the ordinary village, in spite of its Christian name, was as much a part of the community as such as the manor house and the common. It counted as its members, with accidental exceptions, the total number of the citizens of the hamlet. The baptism of infants was part of the mores of the place. Confirmation was also sometimes available to infants, and in any case was bestowed on those, according to contemporary critics of the system, "that lacked both discretion and faith." (H. F. Wood.) No act of will or dimmest sense of dedication to the highest need be involved. The priest was to all intents one of the officials of the village, often the nominee if not the appointee of the local lord. When England as a whole, as in Mary's day, was Roman, the little church on the green was Roman; when Anglican, so also was the church. And to effect the change from the one to the other called for no more alteration in the life of the ordinary village, its Vicar of Bray, and its church than in the contours of the neighboring hills. The church life was simply a phase of the life of the hamlet.

In the face of this situation, the early sectarians who were to become the founders of American Christianity, in the not idle belief that they were returning to the church relationships of the first centuries of the Christian era, began to agitate for a gathered church. A Christian church, according to Robert Browne, is not the total population living within geographical limits or in a certain social status but "a companie or number of believers, which by a willing covenant made with their God, are under the government of God and Christ, and keepe his Lawes in one holie communion." He and his friends fought the hidden naturalism of the old Anglican system, erecting against it a stronghold of faith to which entrance was had not by virtue but only of rebirth and commitment. In the Calvinistic apprehension of God's sovereignty and His election of particular people Puritans of all complexions found a theology not lacking in dynamic, which made them, in war and peace, redoubtable. It was an irresistible sense of mission which animated the earlier Puritans: their sense of mission was a source of strength to them in their day—and is a quality which a denomination can hardly lack today and still rightly regard itself as part of the Church of Christ.

The long, long struggle was not ended in the sixteenth century: every denomination today has to keep up the fight to be something more than the religious front of an essentially irreligious culture—a company of believers consciously committed to the life which is hid with Christ in God.

The gathered denomination of committed members illustrates the emphasis that psychologists put upon the factor of will in human growth. A generation ago William James remarked, "Writing is higher than walking, thinking is higher than writing, deciding higher than thinking, deciding no higher than deciding yes." A gathered church is one which says "no" to the social average and seeks what it regards as the best.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I am writing from my room on the top floor of a lovely little hotel in the thriving North Carolina city of Reidsville. It is my good privilege to be here assisting Rev. Joe A. French and his great church in a revival meeting. Let me warn my fellow pastors that if they are invited to assist Rev. Joe A. French in a meeting that they will find plenty to do if they keep up with him. He has the happy faculty of getting everyone connected with his meeting to work.

The sky is clear. The air is sweet and fresh from recent rains and the fragrance of blooming shrubs and orchards is in the air. Memories deep and olden stir in my mind. In this city I did my first years away from the old childhood home in school. I began here eleven years of formal schooling—preparatory, college, and four years of post-graduate study. I was only moderately dumb. Now my son tells me that my D. D. means I am "decidedly dumb." At any rate it is refreshing indeed to meet several who remember the oft-times lonely lad who began the more than pleasant years that have intervened.

My Uncle Jim Simpson was here then and heaven only knows what I would have done without him. And he is still here—eighty-two years old and still working. He came up to my hotel room yesterday afternoon, and when we sat together alone he looked at me like he loved me. Formerly he had been aggravated with me at times but now through his generous smiling face I could see he did not regret the many generous things he had done for me.

When I began to write I had a notion I would comment on the subject I have just read, announced on the bulletin of a neighboring church: "Life—You May Hoard It, Squander It, or Invest It." Perhaps, but I have a feeling that we may not hoard life. We shall either squander it, or invest it.

As I sat in today on the District Missionary Rally which has been held in our Reidsville Church, I felt that these far-seeing women are investing their lives in the world's best cause, and its greatest hope. So many young women were putting renewed consecration into the work of rebuilding a torn and tragic world. They are achieving good success and doing great credit to those who faithfully set their feet upon the paths of righteousness which followers of the world's Savior are commanded to trek to the uttermost part of the earth.

AGED DAUGHTER OF JUBILEE SMITH DIES AT RICH- LANDS, GA.

From a local paper of recent date we quote the following:

"Funeral services for Mrs. Sallie Bostwick, eighty-nine, were held Friday, March 14, at 3:00 P. M., at the Richland Christian Church with Rev. C. L. Wall, pastor of the Methodist Church, officiating.

"Mrs. Bostwick died Wednesday at her home in Webster County one month before her ninetieth birthday, after an illness of several weeks, three weeks of which were spent in the Columbus City Hospital, until a few days before her death when she expressed a desire to return home.

"She was born April 11, 1857, at Richland, the daughter of the late Rev. and Mrs. Jubilee Smith, pioneer settlers and extensive farm owners of Stewart County. Richland's Cedar Wood Cemetery was donated by the late doctor who also was the founder of Richland Smith-Masonic lodge which bears his name. Her mother was the former Miss Mary Ammie Audolph.

"In December, 1874, the deceased married William Henry Bostwick, who passed away in March, 1880, leaving his widow with four children who later moved to Savannah to reside. She, however, returned to this section for her remaining fourteen years."

Rev. E. M. Carter, secretary of the Eastern North Carolina Conference and formerly a member of the Georgia and Alabama group, in sending us the clipping, says that her father, Dr. Smith, was one of our pioneer preachers and was associated with Rev. J. D. Elder in establishing the Christian churches in Georgia and Alabama. The first churches, he says, were New Hope Church in Chambers County, Ala., and Providence Chapel in Stewart County, Ga. Kernodle's Lives of Christian Ministers tells us: "He joined the Christian Church about 1845, in Harris County, Ga., when Rev. W. M. J. Elder was pastor of the only Christian Church then in the state so far as is known.

By this church he was licensed within two years to preach. . . . He soon organized a church in Stewart County, Ala., one at Red Hill, and one in Randolph County." Dr. Smith is quoted as saying that in 1846 or '47 he met two of the O'Kellys, relatives of the founder of the Christian Church, and "we organized the Georgia Conference." He served as president of the Conference for several years, its name being later changed to the Georgia and Alabama Conference. Rev. Jubilee Smith died in 1901 at the age of seventy-five years, and he, too, was buried at Richland, Ga.

CONFERENCE ON OVERSEAS RELIEF.

Dr. Robbins W. Barstow, director of Church World Service, and Roy LeCraw, director for the committee on war relief of the Southern Presbyterian Church, will be the headline speakers at a one-day conference April 28 in Richmond, when plans for a State-wide program for Virginia will be set up whereby residents of the Old Dominion may contribute food, clothing and funds for overseas relief. It is a part of the national program in the work of the Church World Service whose objective is to aid by giving $12,000,000 during 1947 for overseas relief and collection of 12,000,000 pounds of clothing, shoes, and household articles for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the people in war-torn areas of the world.

The one-day session will open at 11 A. M. and continue through 4 P. M., and is jointly sponsored by the Virginia Council of Churches and the Protestant Ministers' Association of Richmond. The morning session which will close at 12:30 P. M., will be held at the First Baptist Church.

A luncheon session for the State Committee will be held from 12:45 P. M. to 2:15 P. M. at St. Mark's Episcopal Church with Dr. John Marion, chairman of the State Committee for overseas relief, presiding. At this session plans for the State-wide program will be discussed.

The final of the three sessions will open at First Baptist Church at 2:30 P. M. and continue through 4:30 P. M. when a schedule for relief collections of material goods in the Commonwealth will be formulated by the delegates and church leaders.

In addition to church leaders and representatives of civic organizations attending this session, all women's church and club groups have been invited to send three delegates to

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

SUMMER SCHOOL AT ELON.

For the past fourteen years Elon College has conducted a summer school. Prior to the war the regular college operated on the semester system. Under the semester system there are two terms of eighteen weeks each. The summer school was divided into two terms of six weeks each. This gave Elon College an all-year-round school.

When war was declared and the need for universal training became apparent, the Government requested colleges and universities cooperating in the selective service training program to inaugurate what it called an "accelerated" program. In compliance with this request, Elon College changed to the quarter system. We have not yet returned to the semester system. In the total college year as now operated there are four quarters of equal length. The summer quarter begins June 2. Registration has already begun. We are anxious that all of our own church young people and the sons and daughters of Elon alumni who wish to avail themselves of the superior advantages offered by their own college be given the privilege.

There are many more young people wanting to go to college today than can be admitted. There is not enough room nor a sufficient number of instructors available. The question to the forefront is: "Who shall be admitted?" Some schools are admitting only those who are in the upper half of their class as to grades. If all schools should adopt this plan, fifty per cent of the young people desiring to enter college would be denied the privilege. High school grades do not always determine the intellectual ability or the desirability of the individual student. Elon College will not adopt any such plan. When an application is received, it will be evaluated on its own merit and disposed of accordingly. We shall continue on the principle "first come, first served." On this principle it is necessary that our own young people apply. Please apply as early as possible.

Our summer school faculty is complete. It is constituted from our regular faculty and by visiting instructors who are coming to Elon for the summer quarter only. The curriculum for the summer quarter will be slightly more selective than the curriculum for the regular session, but the same high quality of instruction is assured.

Don't forget that the summer session begins June 2. All applications should be received at once. The rates will be slightly cheaper than those of the regular session.

Don't forget that the regular session begins September 2. Should you wish to enter Elon College, you should apply now.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We have a very good report this week considering the amount of money received, and that is always vital; but considering the number of contributions making the total, the report is not so encouraging. Only nine of our churches and Sunday schools encourage the college with contributions to be included in this report.

Elon College occupies a strategic position in our church program. Its contributions are essential to the progress of the church. Other interests of the church should be supported, and they are, generously. The church is becoming more conscious of its college and of the need of the services that it renders. It must realize the necessity of a more generous support for its college than it has been accustomed to giving. In the past current funds have been diverted to causes that should have been cared for by special donations. At present and for the future it will be necessary to receive increased support from the church for the regular causes of the college. It will be necessary to receive special donations for buildings, improvements and similar demands.

I know that our people will be consistently generous in their support of the college when they realize fully the necessity for a thoroughly trained leadership.

1946 CENSUS OF RELIGIOUS BODIES.

All ministers of parishes and churches in Virginia are urged to cooperate with the census of religious bodies now being taken by the United States Census Bureau for the year 1946. This census, first taken in 1906, provides the only official government figures on the membership of the numerous religious denominations and organizations in the nation, and requires full cooperation of all pastors or clerks of churches.

Appealing to the church bodies in the Old Dominion to fill out the questionnaires sent out by the Census Bureau, the Virginia Council of Churches urged that the individual churches give the requested information to the official census schedule which has been mailed out to the pastors. Moreover, a spokesman explained that the Council will assist any church or pastor in filling out the data-seeking questionnaire.

The task of tabulating official religious census of the United States is a tremendous one, covering some 250,000 churches. To be of maximum value, the returns must be accurate, complete and cover every church or religious organization in the country.

Urging full cooperation and prompt return of the answered questionnaire by all church pastors, Leon E. Truesdale, chief of the Population Division, Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce, expressed appreciation to the Virginia Council of Churches for the assistance it can render in doing this task.

"We shall appreciate anything you can do to accelerate the filling out and returning of the schedules," he added in a letter to Henry Lee Robinson, Jr., Executive Secretary of the Virginia Council of Churches.

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
April 4, 1947.

Dear Friends:

Last night you were much in our thoughts as we recalled the Maundy Thursday services we had had together in past days at Waverly. This Lenten season like the preceding Advent season, has been very different from previous ones. So we have found great comfort and inspiration in using the Fellowship of Prayer, our denomination's devotional booklet. Many of the thoughts therein have come to us just the day we needed them and through all our mornings' devotions we feel we have been drawn closer to our Christian friends in America as well as strengthened for the work here. Surely, you have been remembering us in your prayers, too. Thank you.

There was communion service this afternoon at South Gate Church in memory of Christ's suffering and death. How many Christians round the world were remembering the last hours and the last words of the Master, how many in the midst of their own darkest hour thought of the Master's cross and how many grasped the hope that Easter promises. Easter this time reminds us again how great is the responsibility for us who have not experienced their suffering.

Though Easter will be weeks in the past when you read these lines, we hope its inspiration and resolution will be still strong in your hearts. Perhaps if I tell you a bit about the communion service here in Shaowu, you can more vividly think of these Shaowu Christians when next you remember the Lord's Supper.

For all worship services the women are seated on one side of the center aisle; the men on the other; and so the pastor called a man and a woman to serve the elements—Mrs. Ywan and Mr. Jang. Sweet little Mrs. Ywan of the Minoka Community House came forward on her little bound feet, and dignified Mr. Jang left his place beside Dick and me to receive the plates of broken bread from the minister. The minister invited the Christians to stand and after each was served, we all partook of the bread together, then sat down for prayer. The minister called two men and two women to serve the wine and again invited the Christians to stand and receive the symbol of the Lord's blood. Tiny white china cups such as are used in the homes were served from small lacquer trays. A prayer and a hymn concluded that portion of the service.

In the second half of the service Pastor Lyau preached on the Seven Last Words of Christ on the cross, those words which have equal meaning for all men whatever their nation or color.

On this first Easter in a foreign land, on a mission field, we realize anew how basically alike all people are. Under the strange customs and language of these people here, we are constantly catching glimpses of the same human nature and needs that we saw in America. I just heard a child in the hospital yard talking excitedly. The childish treble and the expression of his voice were no different from that I heard among children at play on the Waverly playground. Among the faithful in the church are some staid old members who seem quite self-satisfied, some old members who are truly concerned about the church, and some young members who feel the urge to do something about the Christian church in Shaowu. Many of the needs are like the needs in American churches only greatly magnified. The needs of the wider community are so much greater than for a comparable community in America that they seem utterly different. But no, American communities, Chinese communities, all need health, cleanliness, knowledge, peace, Christian homes, and faith in and reverence for God and man.

It is the mission of all of us to bring these to whatever community we serve. The need staggers us; but thus overwhelmed must those disciples have felt after the first Good Friday. Easter came to them and enabled them to carry on the Master's work as though Jesus' body had rather been multiplied than removed from the world. May Easter so increase our hearts and hands, too—yours and ours in His name.

THE CALL OF INDIA.

a young man, as an extra—$200 to $400 per year. Second—We must broaden our missionary work. Our Congregational Christian hospitals in India are outstanding. But they are limited in their equipment, and are kept from greatness by the matter of a few dollars. They need to extend themselves into the thousands of villages of India, where most of the sick in the villages die without help. Let the city hospital be provided with medical automobile vans to go by schedules to the villages to treat the sick. Similarly, we must give more attention to higher education, provide scholarships to enable poor boys to become doctors and business men as well as ministers. We must go further in our agricultural work, to show the Indian farmer how to use the soil, how to prevent animal disease. Social work in India is another crying need. We have in Bombay a famous Congregational Christian social center. We have others just beginning at Sholapur and Satara. They should be multiplied indefinitely. Third—We need more missionaries—young, alert, consecrated, intelligent, world-minded. We never needed them as now. Our missionaries deserve our enthusiastic support. I find myself in a repentant mood for my personal negligence of them in the past. With others I have gone through the form of supporting them, but I have not given them the support they deserve.

It is good to dream, but it is better to dream and work. Faith is mighty, but action with faith is mightier. Desiring is helpful, but work and desire are invincible.—Thos. Robert Gaines.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

JIMMIE GREEN'S NEW TOY.

Jimmie Green's new toy glowed with a shiny coat of red paint. Its two wheels were as black as midnight, as were the sharp blades winding between the wheels. Jimmie pushed it back and forth, back and forth in the green grass that grew on the Dodd's lawn. Whir-r-r-r-r, clip-p-p-p-p sang the blades as they ate through the leaves and blades of April grass.

It was only last spring that Jimmie's mother died of cancer. Now Jimmie lives with his father and grandfather in the stucco house with a green roof on Lookout Road. He goes to Junior High School every day but as soon as he gets home he wheels out that new toy and tidies up the neighborhood with it. He is about five feet tall. His friendly smile twinkles up his dark eyes. When he pushes the red lawn mower his dark hair is always tumbling right down into his eyes. Jimmie stops the mowing to push his hair up out of his eyes. It gives him a minute to get a "breath" also.

"Hello there, Jimmie! How would you like to cut my lawn this summer with that new mower?"

"I'd be glad to cut it for you, because I haven't got this thing paid for yet. I'll need to do some extra lawns this summer to get it paid for in a hurry. When do you want me to cut it?"

"There's no rush, but the sooner you get to it the easier the task will be for you!"

"I'm sure that I can get to it before the last of the week!"

"Thank you, Jimmie! We'll be looking for you!"

"Thank you, Sir. Good-bye."

Jimmie came to cut the lawn on Thursday. All of the little boys on the street were soon gathered about to see if they could help him. The little new dog across the street came flying across to chase the bright new toy across the green grass. "Get back, Rascal, or you'll get those brown ears clipped along with the grass!" scolded Jimmie.

Rascal went running over to dip his red tongue into the cool water of the fish pool. The rock that he stepped on with his front feet was sort of slippery so right into the pond he slid. All of the gold fish went scampering for their hideouts among the deep-down rocks and moss. Rascal just swam across the pool and climbed out at an easier spot. All of the boys laughed loudly at his slip-up!

At the end of two hours the lawn was all finished! A lovely job! The only kind that Jimmie turns out.

"How much do we owe you, Jimmie?"

"I think that fifty cents is about right for this job, if that is all right with you?"

"Yes, that is fair enough I think and you have done a beautiful job on it!"

"My new lawn mower gets the credit for that!" said Jimmie as he put the fifty cents into his pocket. "I'll keep an eye on it and come back with my mower as soon as the grass needs cutting."

"Thank you, Jimmie!"

I don't know why all of the little boys like Jimmie so much. It may be his new red lawn mower! But our boy would rather be with Jimmie than come and have ice cream with his family. That means that Jimmie is "tops" with him.

CHILDREN READ NEWSPAPERS.

By J. C. BAKER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Menace, or educator? I wondered concerning newspapers when I saw Judy and Davey, not yet seven, first try to read—with the spectacles they thought necessary for adult material—parts of the newspaper other than the funnies. Their recently acquired ability, vast to them, was prompting them to tackle anything, sex offenses and murder included. Soon they would be reading understandingly.

Before Judy and Davey could read at all, my husband and I had read to them from the paper. This, we found, made it possible now for us to guide them tactfully.

We realized that it would be wise for us to select a newspaper more conservative in reporting the details of divorces and shocking crime. Through habit, we had continued to receive the once satisfactory daily that had since fallen into habitual sensationalism. The paper we now chose being a morning edition, we had time to look it over before the children saw it.

Their attention was specially directed to the puzzles and the nature column. This paper, like most newspapers, had columns of odd items. Being short and pointed, these delighted Judy and Davey. The juvenile stories were sometimes a bit difficult for them, but we willingly pronounced words when they wanted to read these stories themselves. These words were no more difficult than those in the undesirable matter which they might otherwise be reading.

News about children, trees, toys, and and pets interested them greatly. The story of the boy who owned 236 dogs excited Davey. When he found that their owner was pluckily winning the fight against an illness and that the dogs were miniature ones, he began collecting dogs.

As Judy and Davey grew older, we helped them widen their reading interests. They debated over which page, the woman's or the sports, was the more important. And, "Does the editorial page have any use?" they questioned. As they matured, they saw that more serious topics were worth-while to them.

Also, the newspaper had a positive effect which we had not anticipated. Besides being education, as they read it, the accounts of juvenile delinquency, wholesomely written up, often gave thorough moral instruction without preachyness. When Judy read of the two little girls who "played hookey" in the park to escape going to the dentist's, she remarked reprovingly, "They were bad, weren't they?" And Davey added, "Silly, too!" Both were pleased that the naughty truants had to go to the dentist the next day.

will be carried out, ending early in the evening for those who will have a long distance to travel or for those who would like to ask questions of the leaders and look at the exhibits which Mr. Powell will bring with him.

This is our opportunity to attend a Leadership Training School to learn of the newest Sunday School materials available and to become better teachers and superintendents in the use of them. The Institutes are not just for Sunday School workers, however—they are for all of you who wish to see your church grow and wish to help it to grow. Any interested church person is eligible. Take it upon yourself to see that at least one person from your church (and we want more, of course) attends the Pilgrim Series Institutes! For more information, write: Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Elon College, N. IDEA OF A DENOMINATION.

II. The Catholic Quality.

The communion which has a destiny upon it is, in the second place, I believe, one which has a catholic quality. Here I use the word not in its original sense but with the meaning it has come to assume: according to it a catholic church is a fellowship consciously historic. As the gathered church tends to degenerate into the societary, so the Catholic drifts, if it is not guarded, toward the traditional. Catholic and merely traditional are therefore terms which are at war with each other.

I have in my ecclesiastical-horrors file a pamphlet headed, "Why the Baptists Will Not Yield." I hardly need say that its relation to the Northern Baptist Convention is purely coincidental. It was in fact put into my hands by a Baptist who was chuckling over its contents. It came from Harlan County, Kentucky, and was written in 1922. Let me read you the data on the various denominations it presents:

Catholic, set up by Gregory I, A. D. 590.
Present age 1,332 years.

Lutheran, set up by Martin Luther, A. D. 1520. Present age, 402 years.

Episcopalian, set up Henry VIII, A. D. 1534. Present age, 388 years.

So follow statements regarding the Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist, Campbellite, and Mormon Churches, including with the following:

Christian Science, set up Mary Eddy, A. D. 1884. Present age, 38 years.

Baptist, set up by Jesus Christ. Amen.

In the same file is a chart published in England and now out of print which was shown me by an Episcopal bishop—and again we must point out that there is no connection between this chart and the Episcopalians whom we know and admire. At the top center of the chart is a picture of our Lord on the cross, from whose side grace is depicted as dropping like blood into a long pipe which is named The Anglo-Catholic, Orthodox Catholic, and Roman Catholic Church, one section of which is called the Episcopate and another and lower one the Clergy. At its best it divides into seven sections called the Sacraments, fauceted off ad libitum. At the top of the chart to each side are other figures corresponding to that of our Lord. There is John Knox, John Wesley, Robert Browne, and other founders of denominations, and beneath each of these is a long pipe—but with nary a drop of grace in any. There is a faucet at the bottom of each (just one, not seven) which is open, but in vain.

Add to these a third illustration in praise of folly: Dr. Palmer records seeing a sign in front of a church in a Texas village which read:

THIS CHURCH WAS FOUNDED
IN ANTIOCH, 38 A. D.

Now what is the difficulty here? That these denominations have a feeling for history is sufficiently clear. They recognize that they exist by virtue of their connection with an event that happened many centuries ago. Their only fault is that they do not appreciate the living quality of that which makes them the Christian Church a historical fellowship. At their center they place not Christ but a form—be it a mechanical succession or a particular rite—which in their minds is so rigidly related to the living essence of our faith that it becomes sacrosanct.

What is the essence of the Catholic tradition? It is, as the Jerusalem Conference of 1928 put it: Jesus Christ himself. It is not a book about him, else we should have been a church of professors—not a creed, nor a ritual, nor a particular pattern of government. All these are adiaphora. What brought the early Church into being was the consciousness that Christ was not dead. Dead his physical body was, yes: they would not longer see him, hear him, or touch him, but his love for them was still felt—and not as a memory but as a fact as palpable as ever it was during his earthly ministry. It was this which they began to preach: this it was which they made others feel—and this became the tradition of the Church. The Catholic element in the Church is that which is given, and the given element is the fellowship with Jesus Christ as its center.

Jesus Christ is the center, but he is not all: the total fellowship moving from generation to generation is communion of Saints. The way of detachment is the way of death, as Nels Ferre says. "Saints" is a word often found in the New Testament but never in the singular, except once, and then with a plural implication, "every saint," Philippians 4. God can have no private blessing for any man apart from his brother man. Dr. Emil Brunner says:

Only in the bond which unites me to the historical fellowship of my fellow believers—to be more exact, in the fellowship of those who believed before me—is my faith possible. . . . I must, so to speak, submit to becoming myself a member of the fellowship, if I wish to enter into relation with God. God will not bind me to himself on any other terms than these, that he binds me at the same time to my brother.

We owe no little to the scholars of the Formgeschichte school for teaching us afresh that the earliest Christian missionaries did not tell the story of the life of Jesus but preached the salvation which had come in Jesus Christ. They did not concern themselves primarily with transmitting a record but with developing a fellowship of the redeemed around the living person of their Lord. It was this revelation that brought completeness into the confusion of life and gave to the early disciples and to all disciples since, an experience which supplies a basis for thought, a reason for reasoning, a meaning for existence.

The Catholics are right in viewing the Church as a particular fellowship which can be recognized in history and not a mere abstraction. At this point the Catholic tradition sustains the idea of the gathered church, for it furnishes an object for commitment. Jesus Christ was a particular individual who by his life, teachings, death, and apprehension, imparted to the world the truth about the love of God. This created and continually creates a definite order of human beings called the Church which extends from age to age. The human mind has felt the intellectual implications of it and produced the creeds. In it men have felt a summons to worship and produce the rituals. It has given a particular orientation to all codes of ethics and government which it has touched. The Christian tradition is as individual as Christ, because it is Christ and the fellowship which Christ calls into being.

In spite of all the sermons I have heard to the effect that Protestantism is the doctrine which continually cuts its ties with tradition, I am impressed on reading the Church Fathers, with the fact that this is precisely what Protestantism has not been, in its earlier and in all its most vigorous days. It has been interested in throwing of the trammels of a false tradition, to be sure, but it recognized that there was a life-giving truth brought into the world by our Lord and handed down from generation to generation, and that the business of the Church is not to break the tradition but to keep it true to itself. This is the reason that in our church groups in their more primitive days prospective members were carefully examined before they were admitted to the sacrament. Our fathers knew that the only substitute for the Gospel adulterated by unworthy editions is not no Gospel at all but a Gospel kept pure.

Catholicism Tends to Drift Into Traditionalism.

THE REVOLT OF THE NORTHERN TRIBES.

LESSON V—MAY 4, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: A man's pride shall bring him low; but he that is of a lovely spirit shall obtain honor.—Proverbs 29:23.

LESSON: I Kings 6:1, 7-14, 38; 11:26-14:31; I Chronicles 28:9-11.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 127.

A Heavy Public Works Program.

In a way the building of the Temple under Solomon was a public works program. It involved thousands of men working at virtually forced labor for seven years and it cost a tremendous amount of money. It was financed by levies and taxes and its erection put a heavy burden on the people of the nation. Nations and states can overdo public works programs. They can launch out on public works that immediately or in the future put heavy tax burdens on the people. At present our nation and many other nations are groaning under the burden of impossible national debts caused, not of course by public works programs, but by the tragedy of World War II.

An Energetic Labor Leader.

This young man, Jereboam, was an energetic, courageous labor leader. His valor and his industry attracted the attention of Solomon during one of the building projects of the king. While building the city of Milbo, and while repairing the breaches in the walls of Jerusalem, Jereboam was made foreman or ruler over all the men. But he got in the bad graces of Solomon when it was made known to both the young man and to Solomon that Jereboam was to fall heir to the larger part of the Kingdom, in fact to ten tribes out of the twelve. No Oriental ruler would brook that threatened stroke at his power and Solomon sought to put the young man out of the way. Thus it was that Jereboam fled to Egypt where he remained until after Solomon's death.

Out of Exile.

When Rheoboam fell heir to his father's kingdom, the people felt that the time for the redress of their wrongs had come. They had suffered grievously at the hands of Solomon. They needed a leader to present their cause and to redeem their fortunes. They had not forgotten this young labor leader, and forthwith they sent to Egypt for Jereboam and with him they went to Shechem where Rehoboam was to be crowned as king. History is replete with instances in which exiled leaders have been called back or have come back to lead disgruntled people or revolutionary forces. In fact there are instances in the contemporary life of Europe at this present time.

A Fair Grievance.

The people had a grievance, and they presented it fairly enough. They reminded Rehoboam that his father had put heavy yokes upon them and had called upon them for grievous service. They said that they were asking for a "new deal"—they simply wanted their service and their yoke to be made lighter, and they pledged the new king their loyalty and allegiance, on this basis. In the end the worm will turn. It comes sooner or later. And as a rule the longer it is delayed the worse it is when it comes. The "haves" will do well to share with the "have nots" in our modern world, ere disaster comes. The spirit of justice and fair play will go a long way toward solving most of the world's complex and compelling problems.

The Counsel of the Mature.

Rehoboam, one likes to think, showed wisdom, in consulting first his older men, counsellors, who had been his father's consultants. Perhaps they had seen the injustice of the old order, for they told the young man that he would do well to lighten the load, and ease the burdens. They felt that such a policy would win the loyalty and love of the people. They suggested that public office was a public trust.

The Counsel of the Immature.

Perhaps Rehoboam, like so many of us, was not seeking advice, so much as approval. In any event he turned from the counsel of the older men to the counsel of the younger men, the crowd with which he had grown up. They reversed the decision of the "old men" and told the young king to make his measures harder even than those of his father. It was bad advice and it led to the rending of the Kingdom into two nations. Only the other day I was reading an article about the late genius, Henry Ford, and it quoted Mr. Ford as saying that if the world depended upon the wisdom and advice of men under fifty, it just could not get along. To be sure youth has its place and its important place. Business, government, education, religion need the enthusiasm and idealism and initiative of youth. But they also need the balance and insight and practical wisdom that can come only out of experience. The world needs both, and it cannot very well get along without either. With only the old it might go to pieces.

A Divided Kingdom.

The men from the Northern Kingdom had "had enough." They did not propose to take any more, and they promptly revolted. Thus ten of the twelve tribes of Israel, from that time to be known as the Kingdom of Israel, went their own way and established their own national life. But they did not permit any cleavage of religion, except for a brief period, and Jerusalem remained the capital of the Jewish religious life.

Politicians and Religion.

Jereboam, like so many politicians, was looking out for Number One. He feared that if the people went up to Jerusalem, they would be weaned away from him. So he constructed an altar at Dan and Bethel and suggested that the people go there to worship. He also made high places, and he ordained priests from the common people, in direct violation of the divine command. He changed the feast days. He was astute even if he was also dumb. Like Hitler he knew that religion was his biggest rival to the full allegiance of the people.

Robinsons, "calls himself truth not custom," but it is remarkable in how many ways the Church has contrived to set custom upon its altar.

Bibliolatry.

Catholic emphasis on the fact that God has acted in history in such a way that He does not need to act again to assure us of His concern and our salvation and that therefore there is a glorious tradition to be carried on from generation to generation is the soundest of attitudes; but unfortunately Jesus Christ and the Church are confused with the book about Jesus Christ on the Church.

So it is with all of us in the beginning, but it is not so today. If the higher criticism has done nothing else for us, it has at least made us aware that the living God is one who cannot quite be reduced to a recital of events and principals which dissolved in printer's ink can be spread upon the pages of a book. We do not believe that He who made heaven and earth can shrivel into the limits of a thing in such wise that when the thing is subjected to criticism He Himself is torn and dismembered. We have come to see the inconsistencies and lacunae of the Bible in fitting perspective, against the grand background of its positive revelation. The Bible has done its work for us when it has revealed the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ and called us into the company of believers: it may be a vehicle of many defective parts, but it at least carries us to our destination—and that is all we ask of it. Long before the historians have finished their argument about this feature or that, we have encountered God in its pages.

Confessionalism.

Strangely enough some denominations seem to be more jealous of their creeds than of the Bible—perhaps because the Bible belongs to all but their creed only to themselves. When the latter becomes the palladium of their particular faith, they will as easily see it adulterated as the British will see their king marry a divorcee. There is a man who would risk dropping the Little Apocalypse out of St. Mark but a line out of the Westminster Confession, never. All of us know the value of creeds: denominations which claim not to have any might as well claim not to have any consensus of opinion about anything. There is a man who disclaims allegiance to any confession, but you do not need to talk with him two minutes before discovering a fine tribal loyalty to Alexander Campbell and to everything he ever did and said. His creed may not be written down in black and white, but he and his fellows are knit together into one communion because they believe something in common. As long as a creed remains a confession fidei, it is a sharp and even necessary sword in the hands of a man: it is only when it becomes a lex fidei that it turns into a sword of Damocles swaying over his head. It is true that the creeds of the Church cannot command a total act of the whole moral being, but they have their place when like the Bible they are used to introduce us to Jesus Christ and his Church who in turn introduce us to a living God.

Ritualism.

Few of us have been tempted to write any part of our ritual into the fundamental tradition which makes us a Catholic Church. Even the Roman communion permits the great Uniat Churches of the Near East to maintain their own time-honored rites, and of course the older monastic orders under the Roman see long ago had their own forms approved. Protestantism has inherited this tradition of freedom. It is worth our while to pause to reflect that it is at the point of prayer and worship that all of us, Roman and non-Roman alike, have best preserved the right relation between Christ and the symbols which point to Christ.

The custom which is followed by some of the more sectarian denominations of shutting off their table of Holy Communion from Christians not of their order is not to be regarded as "a ritual insult to the rest of Christendom." Here the question is simply whether the service of communion ought to be reserved as a symbol marking and crowning the visible unity of believers. One is bound to feel the value toward which the exponents of this theory are reaching, but in the meantime the effect of excluding other Christians from the sacrament is so thoroughly bad—disheartening to those who look upon the communion mystically as a sacrament of the Una Sancta and generally interpreted as a piece of ecclesiastical snobbery—that one questions whether the fencing of the table can be decently carried over into our present ecumenical era.

Politism.

By politism I shall ask you to understand a practice whereby church government is lifted to a point of absoluteness and regarded as a part of the sacred tradition.

It is at this point that Congregationalists should laugh a little at some of themselves. John Cotton had no less rigid idea of the succession of the Congregational ministry than the highest Catholic churchman has of the succession of the episcopate. Anyone who has anything to do with suggesting change in the practices of the Congregational Churches, even when all the contemporary facts seem to counsel the change, such as the suppression of the vicinage council in favor of the Associational council (I speak the dialect of my ecclesiastical family), knows that ancestor worship may be encountered outside of China.

I trust that no one will construe what I have said about various forms as a repudiation of them. It must be efficiently obvious to all that symbols are indispensable in a human society: they are our only means of communicating with one another. For you and me to share the truth we have to use words and gestures, and to carry it into execution we have to have common agreements. The Church cannot dispense with government and discipline, creed, and ritual. These are its language. But just as there is little to be said for the superiority of French over German, or German over French, so it ill befits any Church to hold its own particular language sacrosanct. More than one language can tell the same truth. Quaker succession can tell the same fundamental truth as episcopal succession. What we should look for in symbols is relevance to reality. We cannot dispense therefore with the Apostles Creed, for it alone on the liturgical-intellectual side unites the Christian fellowship of today with that of the earliest centuries. Neither can we dispense with contemporary statements of faith, which set forth the social implications of the Gospel. But we dare not forget, even of our favorite symbols, that they are forms which point to the truth and are not the truth itself.

In sum, the second characteristic of the denomination of the future, prepared in God's time to enter the One Visible Church, is its Catholicity—but it dare not be forgotten that that Catholic quality which unites it in fellowship to the past is Jesus Christ, and nothing else. The forms which we absolutize, making them tests for church validity, become monuments not to him but to our concern for ourselves. It is unlike any other tradition that ever was, for it is not something handed down by men from generation to generation, as a creed or code or a ritual can be—it is rather like life itself which, though it may be said to be handed down, is not something that the hands can actually handle or that men can invent or control. It has its own laws, which men must observe, or perish. It is a living traditum, which we must obey.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Weather man has certainly blessed us with plenty of rain and foggy weather. We did try to plant our garden last week and got right many things planted; all except our snap beans. We had just started on them when the rain caught us, and it has not let us get them in the ground yet. We have not had an opportunity to get our sweet potatoes in the bed yet. This is the latest we have ever been, and at this writing, it is still raining.

We could get in the forest between the rans and got a neighbor with his power saw to cut timber for four hours. We had been told that he could saw a tree, two feet in diameter, down in one minute. We did not doubt but what the man could, but just wanted to see the machine work. When he clipped off a tree two feet in diameter in less than a minute, I had no more doubts. In four hours he cut rown and saved up more trees than we could have done in several days' work. "It is a machine that does the work."

The weather has detained the painters very much in their work, it being so wet and damp. They have succeeded in getting one coat of white paint on the Old Building, and are half over with the second coat. It made a wonderful change in its looks and is good to look at. Any time you are in Elon, run over and see it. It will be worth your trip.

The cry to take helpless dependent children still comes. We had applications to take five this week. They were all in need of a home, and some of them were badly in need. But in this work we take one needy case after another till we just have to call a halt. We have no room at the present for children under ten years of age, until we have a vacancy. We wish we could meet every worthy call, but that is impossible. Sometimes we take little children, and after they get here we are happy that we did take them. We had an urgent call from Eastern Virginia a few weeks ago to take a little girl and boy. We took them because we could not refuse. We find the little five-year-old girl to be a real sweet child. She is a perfect blond with big brown eyes and a very friendly little child. One could not help but love her. The little boy is much younger, and is a very pretty little boy with red cheeks and big brown eyes. We are happy that we did take these children, as they had no home and their father was dead. They needed to come.

Nothing gives us more joy than to give a helpless child that is worthy and needs to come, a home here. Orphaned children who have no home are wards of the church, and the church should make a strong effort to give them a home, care, and training.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.

scholars, as they are used in Daily Readings, in family worship, and in the Golden Texts each Sunday," said Mr. Landers. "The average laymen's ability to understand and appreciate sermons and to participate in public worship has been greatly increased by knowledge gained from the Bible through the teaching of Uniform Lessons for three-quarters of a century. Friendly discussions in adult Bible classes have helped to form public opinion. No lessons today, after seventy-five years of constant use, are as widely known or as consistently studied as these."

Founder of the International Uniform Lessons was the Rev. John H. Vincent, later Bishop Vincent. He was a young Methodist pastor who in 1855 began experimenting novel ways of teaching religion. He was the most progressive Sunday school leader of his day, and was a co-founder of the Chautauqua movement and founder of the first Teachers Training Institute. He organized the Oxford League which later "grew into the Epworth League.

The growth of the Uniform Lesson System has been described as "one of the greatest cooperative movements of Christendom." It was estimated that in 1873 three million people were using the Uniform Lessons. By 1890 more than ten million people were using it, and later in the 19th century, the late Dr. John R. Sampey, widely known Southern Baptist, then chairman of the committee, put the estimate as high as thirteen millions.

The Committee on Uniform Lesson Series is composed of representatives from forty denominations, and represents the combined thinking of Protestantism. Together these representatives select the Scripture passages to be studied during varying cycles of about six years. Together they decide upon the lesson topics, upon the memory verses, and upon the graded emphasis for the various departments of the Sunday school. The recommendations of the committee are approved by the International Council of Religious Education. Then the outlines are sent to more than one hundred publishers of Sunday school lessons throughout the United States, Canada, Great Britain and the missionary world.

Leaders of the Congregational Christian Church on the committee are Charles A. Butts, associate editor, Pilgrim Press Division, and the Rev. Ralph Douglas Hyslop, minister for student life for the denominations, both of Boston, Mass.

participate in the discussion at the conference.

Dr. Barstow, the chief speaker at the one-day conference, recently returned from Europe where he visited seven countries and conferred with church and civic leaders on the needs of the peoples in the war-torn areas. Commenting on his observations, he reported that "the future of Europe and the very survival of Christianity rests upon a greatly increased response in aid from the people of America."

Dr. Barstow is a noted Congregational minister, and former president of Hartford Seminary.

The Lynchburg Church has made extensive improvements on their church property, including painting the exterior of the building, building new front steps, and installation of an oil furnace.

MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY.

MAY 2, 1947.

So many people have written to me about the program for May Fellowship I am asking that it be printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I am sorry that I do not have programs to mail out, but hope this may be of some help to you:

THE FABRIC OF FELLOWSHIP.

HYMN: "The Church's One Foundation."

INVOCATION—

Leader: Almighty God, Father of all mankind, to Thee we raise thankful hearts for this day of nationwide fellowship of church women. Grant us in these hours such a sense of Thy presence that we may walk in Thy companionship.
All: Help us to know Thy constant nearness, to walk and work with Thee.

Silent Meditation (Play softly: "O, Jesus, I Have Promised").

Leader: Father, we open our hearts to Thee. Search them.

All: Teach us how to let go our secret faults, our pride, prejudice, complacency and contentment with life's lesser loyalties. Cleanse our hearts and fill them, dear Father.

Silent Meditation: (Play softly: "My Faith Looks To Thee").

Leader: Since Thou art the Light which dwells within, as we keep silent, illumine our minds, shine on our path ahead, and help us to see Thy plan for us.

All: As Thy disciples of the first century were illumined and empowered at Pentecost, so may we, Thy disciples of the 20th century, be moved to witness for Thee. Multitudes of men, women and children, hungry in body and spirit, concern us. Father, we do not dare be weary in well-doing. We must continue as witnesses to Thy love, who can never stop sharing what Thou dost keep giving to us.

Silent Meditation: (Play: "Let There Be Light," tune—"Pentecost").

INTRODUCTION TO THE SCRIPTURE—

Leader: Our fabric of true Christian fellowship is woven of the love of God, the Father, and of love for our neighbors. Mrs. Uemura, of Japan, at the Biennial Assembly in Grand Rapids, nobly testified that with all the tearing asunder of war, Christian fabric held together in her country. Let us look afresh at the words Jesus left for us as recorded in Luke.

SCRIPTURE: Luke 10:25-37.

Leader: Help us as Christian women to live Christ in our neighborhoods.

All: May we have homes with windows that look out on the world, seeing all passersby as children of our Father, each a sacred part of the fabric of mankind.

PRAYER HYMN (Seated; sung softly as prayer) "Let There Be Light" Tune—"Pentecost."

Leader: May we never rest content with a divided Christianity.

All: Free us from any sense of partisanship. May the church seek not so much to solve the world's problems as to dissolve them in the power of Thy grace and love at work in her midst. Let us in America see that the nation that has disintegrated the atom has a responsibility to integrate mankind.

Leader: These are the days and months for healing the wounds of war and making the peace. Father, we would remember that peace-making must be a continuing function, until nations learn to live as a family of nations, reconciled and redeemed.

All: May we, as church women, bring to our tasks qualities so curative and creative that our fabric of fellowship may be akin to the seamless robe of Christ.

DEDICATION OF OFFERING (All stand as offering is presented and read together).

RE-DEDICATION OF OURSELVES—

Together, Lord, we kneel before one Cross. Together now we pledge our loyalty; one prayer is ours; one song our hearts shall sing, "All men, all races, one in Christ our King." (Remain seated for moment of silent meditation while following-hymn tune is played.

HYMN (Standing) ("Spirit of God, Descend Upon My Heart").

Only together, Lord, can we be true
To Thy commands. Each selfish purpose dies,

And in the power of Thy glorious Name
Reborn, we see the Church's body rise.
Only together, Lord, can we be wise—
Thy spirit's gifts in many ways are given;

We need each revelation of Thy grace;
Thy beauty shines through many doors to heaven.

Only together, Lord, can we restore Thy bleeding Church. Oh, use us, Lord, that we
As willing channels of Thy healing life
May food and drink for weary pilgrims be.

Together, Lord, we kneel before one Cross;
Together now we pledge our loyalty;
One prayer is ours, one song our heart shall sing:
"All men, all races, One in Christ our King." —Stella H. Black.

AFFIRMATION (In unison, remain standing)—

As members of the ecumenical fellowship, we believe in the one family of the whole church throughout the whole world—interracial, interdenominational, international and eternal, with one God, one purpose and one great love. Amen.

LUNCHEON BLESSING (in unison) (if desired)—

Lord Jesus, be our holy guest,
Our morning joy and noonday rest,
And with our daily bread impart
Thy love and peace to every heart.
—Amen.

PRAYER—

As we go forth, we humbly pray
In all we think and do and say,
Thy Kingdom come in us today.
—Amen.

This worship service is included in booklet form, along with instructions about planning the day and a skit to be used in the program. It may be ordered from the United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, New York, for 10c each. The main idea is to emphasize our fellowship with all women of all denominations, particularly in our home communities. You may use this worship service at a regular meeting or at some other time if you cannot plan a luncheon.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME XCIX.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1947.

NUMBER 18.

A Call For Subscribers

The month of May has been designated by the Board of Publication as "Christian Sun Month" and the third Sunday has been set as the date on which all churches in the Convention are to receive subscriptions to the "Sun."

All ministers in the Convention have been asked to give special attention to the "Sun" on May 18 and appropriate topics have been suggested for us at the church service. Perhaps the quickest and easiest way to secure subscriptions is to ask for a show of hands of the people in the congregation who will subscribe for the "Sun." In part-time churches the minister will designate a Sunday near the third Sunday in May and observe it.

Many methods may be used to promote the campaign. Those of you who get the "Sun" can take copies to church and give them to non-subscribers. Subscribers can either ask fellow members to subscribe to the "Sun" or can make gift subscriptions. Subscriptions should also be given for hospitals, public libraries, and other institutions where religious literature is needed. A folder and subscription blank has been prepared and can be secured from Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Elon College, N. C. These blanks should be distributed to non-subscribers. The minister, Sunday school superintendent, Sunday school teachers, and organization officers should urge people to subscribe for the "Sun."

Organizations desiring to make money by securing subscriptions are paid 20% on new and 10% on renewal subscriptions.

Our goal is 1,000 new subscribers.

JOE A. FRENCH, Chairman,
Board of Publication.

SOUTHERN CONVENTION LAYMEN'S MEETING.

A significant meeting in the work of the Southern Convention was held at the Alamance Hotel, Burlington, N. C., Saturday, April 26, when the Convention Laymen's Committee met with Mr. Walter A. Graham, Executive Director of the National Laymen's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches, followed by a Laymen's Fellowship Supper held in the banquet hall of the hotel attended by 73 men from 25 churches and four conferences of the Convention.

On Saturday afternoon the Laymen's Committee four of the five man Convention Committee—A. H. McIver, Sanford, N. C.; Cyrus Shoffner, Liberty, N. C.; Harry W. Lee, Portsmouth, Va.; George D. Colclough, Burlington, N. C., and S. H. Pell of the Western North Carolina Conference and W. T. Dunn of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference—laid plans for development of the Men's Work of the Convention and prepared recommendations which were presented and approved at the Fellowship Supper. An enthusiastic response on the part of the men in attendance at the supper gave promise of greater activity throughout the Convention.

George D. Colclough was named chairman of the Committee and Harry W. Lee was named Secretary. The Committee presented the following plan of organization and promotion of the Southern Convention Laymen's Fellowship:

Realizing the steadily growing interest of men in Christianity and the church and feeling a need for improvement of the total church program of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, we, the Convention Committee on Laymen's Work, recommend the following:

1. That every local church appoint a chairman and secretary of laymen's work for that local church.
2. That every unit of men's work in a local church, such as a Bible class, men's evangelistic group, laymen's brotherhood or similar group to be considered jointly as the laymen's organization of that local church.
3. That the Convention be divided into several geographical districts and that each of these districts appoint a chairman and secretary of laymen's work.

4. That the Convention Council of Laymen's Work be created to be composed of one representative elected by each of the five conferences, together with the chairman and secretary of each of the geographical districts.
5. And that the Convention Council establish and maintain a working relationship with the National Committee of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches.

ENLISTMENT FOR FULL TIME CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

The Committee on Ministry of the Southern Convention at a special session on Tuesday, April 22, voted to ask the churches and pastors of the Convention to emphasize Christian Vocations during the month of May. There is great need for Christian ministers, teachers, and other full time services within the church. The youth of the Convention are splendid material. It is earnestly hoped that pastors, Sunday school teachers, and parents will lose no opportunity in presenting the claims and needs of the church for the talents of our young people.

There is nothing quite so dead as a self-centered man—a man who holds himself up as a self-made success, and measures himself by himself and is pleased with the result.—Huber.

CERCIS CANADENSIS.

A trip from Richmond to Elon College was made pleasant by the company of the Reverend Robert Kimball and Dr. Will O'Neill and by the scenery along the two hundred mile wayside. The dogwood was in the initial stage of blooming. The tree which appeared most frequently in bloom was the Judas Tree, a tree so named because of the tradition that upon one of this family Judas Iscariot hanged himself. Its pink buds mildly suggest the shed blood of the betrayer and the betrayed. Or another version has it that the tree on which Judas hanged himself has blushed for shame ever since. Some call it the redbud.

There is probably no connection between this tree and the Old-World species as that is a low, bushy tree with a flat head which bears purplish-pink flowers which appear before the leaf, and the tradition probably has no foundation in fact. But the fact remains that just as Judas trees are scattered throughout our country (Cercis Canadensis which grows wild in North Carolina and Virginia) and the world, just as they may be found in unexpected places, just so the results of treachery and the evidence of suffering are universal. The scarlet thread of vicarious suffering enters every land.

Judas Iscariot, the man of Kerioth, brought shame upon his home town and disgrace upon his fellow-disciples. He sold the Lord to the high priests for thirty pieces of silver, the price of a slave (Exodus 21: 32). This dire treachery contributes one of the hardest problems of the Gospel history. Why was he chosen? Was he chosen because he would turn traitor, or because at the outset he had in him the possibility of better things? Most theologians would agree that the tragedy of his career was this, that he obeyed his baser impulses and surrendered to their domination. Covetousness was his besetting sin. His attachment to Jesus was accompanied by a growing expectation of rich reward when his Master was seated on the throne of David. His later discipleship was a process of disillusionment. He saw his worldly dreams fading and decided to make the best of the situation. Since he could not have a place by the throne, he would at least have the thirty shekels. Judas sinned terribly and saw the dreadful error of his way. One wishes that, instead of destroying his miserable life, he had rather fled to the Cross and sought mercy at the feet of a forgiving Savior. Even Judas might have enjoyed a glorious entrance into Paradise.

The observance of Easter has not annulled the reality of Holy Week and Good Friday. The evidence of covetousness and cowardice, bickering and betrayal, are on every hand. Our every decision is fraught with destiny. Our unwise, unChristian decisions bring suffering to us and others. Greed and lust for power has so recently hurled our world into armed conflict. The crimson hue of blood-soaked battlefields is a dreadful reality of our generation. Every gold star mother who looks upon a Judas tree realizes that war came only because Christ was betrayed at the hands of selfish men.

The lovely Judas Tree has a sermon for all who admire its delicate buds. It seems to whisper to us not only of Judas, but of Christ. The loveliest things of life have come to us because someone suffered. The diffusion of beauty and the beneficent results of vicarious suffering know no barriers. We, too, can breathe the faith in which Christ died.

This is my Father's world, And to my list'ning ears,
All nature sings, and round me rings The music of the spheres.
This is my Father's world, I rest me in the thought Of rocks and trees, of . . . skies and seas—His hands the wonder wrought.

This is my Father's world. The birds their carols raise,
The morning light, the lily white, Declare their Maker's praise.
This is my Father's world, He shines in all that's fair;
In the rustling grass . . . I hear Him pass, He speaks to me everywhere.

This is my Father's World, O let me ne'er forget That though the wrong seems oft so strong, God is the ruler yet.

This is my Father's world, The battle is not done,
Jesus who died shall be satisfied, And earth and heaven be one.

THE LEGEND OF THE DOGWOOD.

In these days when the country is made glorious with the dogwood trees, the legend of the "Crucifixion Tree" is of interest to us. The bloom, as everyone recognizes, forms a cross, with two long petals opposite two short ones, and on each a brown scar and sometimes a crimson streak from the scar.

"The Cross on which Christ was crucified was made of dogwood, which was at that time one of the largest and strongest of trees. The tree sorrowed for its part in the death of Christ. He, to comfort it, told it that it would never grow large enough again for its timber to be of any great usefulness, but that it should beautify and should also remind men of His death upon the Cross, for each bloom should form a cross and on each petal should be a nail print, and when men saw the beautiful flowers, they would remember that He died that they might live."

LITERACY.

A majority of earth's citizens are illiterate. At least a billion people living today can neither read nor write. Can democracy and the four freedoms live in a world like this? "No," cry prophetic voices. Nations are beginning to attack this problem with amazing results. Missionary leaders like Frank Laubach and Hugh Hubbard are the apostles of a new freedom gained through literacy. We are at the start of the greatest movement in education the world has ever seen. Millions now unable to read will have their eyes opened to another world through the printed page. But, what shall they read? Herein is our opportunity and duty. The production of Christian literature for new literates must become a major concern of the Church of Christ.

The Idea of a Denomination

By DR. DOUGLAS HORTON

The Characteristics of a Truly Christian Denomination.

These characteristics have been previously discussed under two headings: First, "Let the Church be the Church;" and, Second, "The Catholic Quality." We now come to the third:

III. THE EVANGELICAL QUALITY.

The third quality which distinguishes the denominations which together will bring forth the Church that is to be is the Evangelical element. I suppose that if the average Protestant were asked what it is that he has which the Catholic lacks, he would say, Freedom. And indubitably Protestants seem to have enjoyed more of freedom than the Catholics. The almost unlimited ramifications of Protestant sectarianism advertise the liberties which non-Catholics have claimed. A horrible example of denominational extremism comes out of a history of early New England:

Mr. Farnum taught the people that they were all in great danger of being lost on account of their pride and disobedience to the commands of the Saviour. He told them the Master said distinctly that except they be converted and become as little children they could not enter the kingdom of heaven. He soon found followers. When they met for worship, they laughed, played, and talked in a childish manner: they would climb trees and bark like dogs when out of the house. At their homes they would build stick houses, run under the bed or table when strangers came, and perform many other such pranks as might be expected of very silly and untaught children. (S. M. Andrews, Sketch of Elder Daniel Hicks, p. 21.)

An example such as this illustrates the possibility of the decline of liberty into license.

The great slogans of the Reformation—Sola Gratia, Sola Fides, and Dei Sola Gloria—though they do not mention freedom, do point to the source of freedom. Many early Calvinists, to be sure, carrying their doctrine of predestination to its logical extreme, eschewed the idea of individual freedom, regarding it as part of the illusory world induced by original sinfulness, but Calvinism as a whole undeniably played its part with the other movements issuing from the Reformation in bringing to the human spirit a new sense of liberty.

It is not difficult to see how freedom followed from the emphasis on Grace, Faith, and God's Sovereignty. The great discovery of the Reformation, that God still loves and redeems sinners, is a message of salvation. One is freed from the wheel of existence. According to the Hindu doctrine of Karma, which is an Oriental version of the idea that this is a moral universe, you may if you have wrought nobly in this life, expect a higher status in your next incarnation. If your morality has been lower than average, you will find yourself, on your next rebirth, to have slipped down the scale in the direction of the earthworm. No more precise system of divine justice as applied to this earth has ever been devised, so far as I know. The Christianity of the Medieval Church set forth a different philosophy but it was no less a closed nexus of causes and effect within the limits of birth and death. If a man committed a sin, he might attempt to atone for it by undergoing prescribed penances, and so keep his name on the Book of Life of the Most High. But the Reformers saw that this system rested upon a cheap and unworthy understanding of the divine justice. That justice was absolute: if a man sinned against it, he occasioned an absolute break between himself and God—and God was no easy-going Oriental potentate to be wheedled back into the original relationship by a spurt of good works on the sinner's part. The whole world of humanity, since all men had sinned, lay under the condemnation of God, and was bound to a wheel of life, from which as from its Hindu counterpart no principle of escape and renewal could be envisaged. I have put the matter in the past tense, but it is just as true today as it was in the sixteenth century. The contravening of the absolute justice of God does entail absolute retribution: every person who sins has a blot on his record and no matter how long he lives his record will be different from what it would have been if he had not sinned, and he cannot make it the same. In a real sense he remains in bondage to his sin. According to the standards of the Medieval Church, the system of divine retribution awarded you precisely what you deserved, but sensitive souls like Martin Luther came to see that this was the opposite of salvation—for what man could deserve perfect salvation, what sinner could make himself worthy of the awful perfection of God?

I mention the Hindu in connection with the Medieval conception because it is probable that in the Orient today we have the best opportunity to see the Middle Ages contemporaneously. In the year of the Madras Conference a Hindu guide was showing a very small group of us about the palace of Amber, out of Jaipur. As we started to enter one of the buildings, he restrained us. "This is a temple—only high-caste people are allowed inside," he said. Being thus thrust down to our proper level, we reminded him that we had just been allowed to look into a shrine to Ganesh, the elephant-headed god of wisdom—why shouldn't we go into this one? "Oh," he said, "this is not a temple to any of the 33,000 ordinary gods of India: this belongs to one of the six really great gods—to Kali, the goddess of destruction. We pressed him further—How did he know that Kali outranked Ganesh. His face grew grave. "Last year my only son was born," he said. "He lived only three hours. Kali took him. In a week Kali took my wife. I know Kali is a great goddess; and now I am thinking of becoming a holy man, so that I can take the name of Kali upon my lips in every waking hour." And it is true that one often on a crowded Indian street passes a fakir muttering the names of a god or the names of gods. Next we asked our guide how, if he only said the name while he was awake, he would ever dare to go to sleep, since Kali would know that if he had only put enough will power into it he might have stayed awake a little longer. He had thought of that: "I shall go to a monastery, where some of us will be awake at all times." We laid before him the simple arithmetic of the situation: the brothers might say the name ten thousand times in twenty-four hours, but how would that avail for a grim goddess who might be expecting to hear it a hundred and ten thousand times? They would always have the shadow on their minds that they might have done better if they had tried—and how could one, in any case, by adding finites to finites reach infinity: how could mortals ever assemble enough good works to merit the approval of the eternal God? The guide was bothered. "What would you Christians say to that?" he asked. And then we told him that our good works were never regarded as fitting us for the blessing of the Most High, but only as deeds of gratitude for something, a final thing, that He had already done for us. We tried to describe to him the new life that poured into a man's spirit when he recog-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It takes a lot of work to build an issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It is work that we take for granted little realizing how busy all the people are who are connected with it. Its editor, the Rev. Robert Lee House, is a busy pastor. He has the work of a great, strategic church on his hands. A busy church in a big city has to have a lot of thinking, planning, working, and study. There are many church organizations that need the help of the minister. Many committees with important duties involving the present and future destiny and growth of the church must have something of the mind of the minister, as well as his time. There are the sermons to prepare—two of them each week, and various other addresses, and speeches. And the calls—calls on the sick and shut-in, calls on the new prospects, and calls seeking new contacts.

If the church is to be a part of the great community in which it functions it must have a community-mindedness. Its minister must represent it, and in a careful and effective way. He must take upon his shoulders a part of the life of the community. He is a community leader and his church's place in the hearts and minds of the community is to some rather large extent dependent upon the pastor. There are meetings, and still more meetings. And also if the church is to have a growing impact in the family of churches he must attend many of those meetings. Furthermore if the church is to be at the hub of a great city thinking in terms of the other sister churches of one's own denomination the minister will have to share a part of the work of his denomination. And there is the home, a family, and all the work and thought that that entails.

Each week—each week without fail—there is THE CHRISTIAN SUN. There is not a let up there. So I think we should all remember Editor House and seek in every way we can to make his work pleasant, effective, and creative. Perhaps he has received many letters. Some of them should be congratulatory, in fact most of them should. And considering the strain under which he works we should be more tolerant when he upsets us with his editorials. And we should remember that he is doing a good job. He is a student and a Christian, and has the work of the church at heart.

Again I should like us to think of the Managing Editor, that Christian layman and true churchman who has stood by THE CHRISTIAN SUN through thick and thin—sometimes very thin—for a quarter of century this July! He brings us a good paper every week. Well gotten up, well printed, and backed up by the finest loyalty of which any church can boast. He has work to do, too. The business of publishing a paper is no child's play in these changing, increasingly complex times. And John T. Kernodle has more than a day's work every day in his own business, besides there is his home, and all the other work he does as a well known citizen of his city, and his contributions of thought, time and energy to his local church. I have served as chairman of the Board of Publication and I know something of the work and loyalty shown every week—week in, week out—by the managing editor.

But somehow you and I know that those presses are going to roll whether we give these two fellows a pat on the back or not. And yet THE SUN would shine brighter, and our hearts, and their loads, would be lighter if we dropped them a line of gratitude and praise.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

DAMASCUS CHURCH, SUNBURY.

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield and his splendid people of Damascus Church, Sunbury, N. C. (Eastern Virginia Conference), realized a long sought for goal on Sunday night, April 20, when their new church building was formally opened for services. A capacity congregation filled the beautiful sanctuary and seven new members were received.

Damascus Church a few years ago sold its old site near Sunbury and began plans for erecting a new and more adequate building in the town itself. Through the devoted and sacrificial labors of congregation and pastor they achieved success, and no church of the Convention has a more lovely church building. It lends itself well to worship, teaching, and Christian social and community activities. They have had the assistance of the Eastern Virginia Conference and Christian Missionary Association, the Mission Board, and the Congregational Christian Building Society of New York, but without the labor and money sacrificially given by the members of the Damascus Church this new building would not have been realized. It is but another evidence of the fact that where there is love of church and loyalty to its causes success is certain.

Damascus has many consecrated members who rejoiced in their success as a congregation and will find joy in Christian service within the church in the days to come, but the new building is in a measure a tribute to the late Deacon John E. Corbitt who worked for the new building until his death some months ago. Mr. Joe M. Byrum served as building committee chairman.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN LAYMEN AT WORK.*

One of the hardest jobs that men face all around the world today is to be Christian. It is easy to talk about it and most church people have been adept at speaking their minds, but it is still a genuine task to be Christian in all relationships. I have traveled in 36 states during the last seven months and I have seen signs which indicate that more businessmen are practicing Christian principles in all of their daily dealings than ever before.

To me the point to cause us alarm is that a large number of these men say they are not churchmen and do not want to be known as churchmen. Why? I, too, always ask that question and find a number of reasons, the main one being that we have not maintained our church life, programs and all of our religious approaches up to modern day standards.

Many of the people who have visited meetings of the United Nations agree that one of the most hopeful signs for a genuine just and durable peace is the emphasis which is being placed on the worth or value of human personality all around the world. The Master of Galilee placed all his hope in individual people. What finer thing could the churches of America, in fact of the whole world, do during 1947 than evaluate clearly the innate power of every single person within their constituency.

We do not expect people in 1947 to go to church or to give to finance it just because it is their duty. To be

LABORERS.

The apostle Paul said, "Jesus looked upon the multitudes. He was moved with compassion on them because they fainted and were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd. Then, he said, unto his disciples, 'The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into his vineyard.'"

There weren't enough laborers in those far away days; there aren't enough today. Then the disciples were commanded to pray the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers. Perhaps if we would pray God for an increased number of ministers, the Church would be blessed with a more abundant leadership.

But why do you think people offer themselves for the gospel ministry? Is it because they believe in the Church, know that must have ministers, and they simply offer themselves to meet the need? Or is it because they consider the various professions open today and choose the ministry simply on business principles as they would any other business or profession? Or do they look upon the masses in their plight and conclude that as a minister of the gospel they could be of help to them and could perhaps do as much or more good as a minister as they could in any other profession? Or as they come under the influence of the Church and the power of the gospel, they are convinced that God needs them and that they should enter the ministry? Then they hear the voice of God within them and their own hearts begin to speak to them, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel."

I don't know what you think causes people to enter the ministry. I know what I think should be the deciding factor. I don't know why you are not in the ministry today or why you are. I know why I am. I know what the compelling cause was.

As we consider our Church today and its future, see how the Church is lacking in leadership, would it be profitable, do you think, for the ministers and laymen to begin to pray, to take this need of the Church to God in daily, earnest prayer, praying Him to lay his hands on our young people—our sons and daughters—and bring them into his service and the service of his church, into the sacred ministry of his church? You may enter the ministry simply by choice as a business or profession but to me this is a highly spiritual service, significantly so, and as such, something is needed other than human agency. The would be minister needs the power of the Spirit moving in him. He needs to hear the call of God, bidding him enter his holy service.

I fear that in this important profession there is a tendency to turn away from God for assistance and help, and turn to material resources and human assistance.

We may be trying to achieve in the realm of the spirit without relying upon God. Looking simply to material resources and trusting confidently in our own ingenuity and ability for successes. Paul may plant and Apollos may water, but it is God that giveth the increase.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The college is not self-supporting, nor is any one church able to support the college, neither the several churches of any one of the conferences constituting the Southern Convention. It is obvious that the college is needed. We must have an institution where our ministers, Christian workers, and ordinary laymen are trained in the fundamentals of Christian education—this education to be effective must be under moral and religious influences. If the church does not have its own college, it could hardly expect other colleges to train its workers in the spirit and traditions of the church as well as in the fundamentals of education. While neither individual churches nor individual conferences are able to support the college, all churches and all conferences cooperating together and pooling their contributions, if they are generous enough, the college can easily be supported. All through the years, the church has given encouragement and partial support to the college. The financial support has been comparatively small. We are increasing our contributions for this necessary cause year by year. This year we are considerably ahead of any previous year. If all of our Sunday schools and churches will cooperate gladly and generously, there is no question about proper support of the college. One thing is certain: if we do not support our college, we cannot expect other individuals and other churches to support it for us. The college is most grateful for the consideration and support received from the church and is appreciative of the prospects in view.

NATIONAL FAMILY WEEK.

Our hopes and despair root in the home, whether we think in terms of recruiting strength for the church of tomorrow, rearing a generation of young Christians, or of achieving a brotherly world, according to Dr. T. T. Swearingen, director of adult work and family education of the International Council of Religious Education.

Expressing his belief that Christian living in the home is more imperative today than ever before, Dr. Swearingen announced in a personal statement that 1947 National Family Week will be observed May 4-11 by Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths using the theme, "Christian Living Begins at Home," giving recognition to the tremendous importance and influence of family life.

"The home is where children acquire their sense of life values," Dr. Swearingen declared. "Whether we wish it or not, learning constantly takes place within the family circle. It never ceases. Ideas are fashioned and the emotional quality of the family relationship transforms ideas into prejudices, ideals and purposes."

"Therefore," he continued, "the matter of teaching in the home is not an optional matter. The church must face the fact that it cannot decide whether or not learning takes place in the home, but it can affect what is learned. The church can help to determine the kind of attitudes which develop there."

"Christian parents, therefore, must become the teachers of religion as they are already the teachers of growing children," he pointed out. "Our first job is to grow genuine Christians, and if the home is the most

IDEA OF A DENOMINATION.

nized this situation in an act of fundamental faith. We tried to speak to him of the liberty of the Christian man.

This is the new liberty which the Reformers discovered, the liberty which is given through faith alone in grace alone and for which glory is due to God alone. This is Evangelical freedom.

The Meaning of Freedom.

In order to understand the freedom which a Christian enjoys, and how to remark how it differs from license, it is necessary to note that freedom always has two references, to the subject and to the environment. It requires correspondence between the desire of the subject and the possibility of the environment. The environment may be as narrow as the lines of a racetrack, but if the subject is a runner who desires nothing so much as to try his speed on the track, he is free. The racetrack would be confining only to those who wished to roam rather than run. Only he is a free man in this universe who desires to conform to its design. It is the discovery that it is presided over by a God of love that imparts to Christians their sense of freedom. The Hindu guide was not free because he had set out to fulfill the infinite demands of his environment, that is, the will of Kali—an impossible task for him in his finitude. The Christian is free because while still a sinner he can accept in gratitude what God has done for him. There is a correspondence between his desire and the possibilities of his environment. The discussion of the high God's purpose in Jesus Christ is the truth that makes him free.

There is nothing which quickens a man's felt liberty like a voluntary loyalty: nothing can be conceived which could bring a person a greater access of freedom than his discovery that Almighty God, the Creator and Preserver of all things, is one to whom a man may give his complete loyalty. This freedom is something that "lures and liberates." This is what St. Paul meant by freedom from the law: his message therefore became not "On top are the everlasting demands," but "Underneath are the everlasting arms."

Freedom gives a man a sense of himself. The liberty of the Christian is the liberty to attempt to repay to God in gratitude all that He has done. It is, therefore not part of the tradition in any exact sense: Christian liberty is not brought to a man from an outside historical source. The appearance of Christ in history is the occasion of one's sensing it within himself, but strictly speaking it is part of the testimonium Spiritus Sancti internum. There is that in the Christian life which is not given to a human soul from the outside to accept but is given him from inside whereby he knows what to do with what he accepts. The Church, when it is really the Church, has always asked the question, What think ye of Christ? This is the essential content of its tradition—but tradition cannot supply its own answer. That remains for the free soul, in response to the urging of the Spirit. Though the Church tradition stands on its own over against the believer, in such a way that the truth of Christ is not affected whether you or I believe it or not, the individual soul with the collaboration of the Holy Spirit possesses its own independence whereby after it has made the assent of faith, it can actually add to the tradition by becoming a new member of the fellowship

Undoubtedly the denominations have misunderstood the meaning of this liberty. They have caught only part of the significance of Augustine's celebrated "Love the Lord and do as you like." They have done as they liked. They need to be reminded of the retort which Spurgeon is supposed to have made to a cynic who said, "So long as you are child of God you can sin all you like!"

"Yes," said the divine, "and how much sin do you suppose it would take to satisfy a child of God?"

With the new sense of himself which he enjoys before God, the Christian has sometimes gone off on his own. He has come to believe not merely that this is a universe whose laws are such that he can freely glorify God by his life and work but that it is a universe whose laws are such that he can flout them. He is free not merely to be grateful but to be anything. An electric cutting tool can be applied to cut the wire through which it derives its own power. So, many a Protestant sect has used its felt freedom to cut itself off from the very fellowship in Christ from which it derived that freedom. It is the sin of the sects that their freedom, which finds its satisfaction in Christ and only in him, and which therefore cannot truly be directed to anything but the unitedness of all things in Christ, is allowed to apply at random. They sever the bonds which join them to other members of the Church without feeling any loss—indeed, with a

HALIFAX DISTRICT RALLY.

The Halifax District Rally was held at Lynchburg, Va., on April 15, 1947. Mrs. T. W. Chandler presided. The meeting opened with the singing of the hymn, "O Young and Fearless Prophet," after which we were in a period of worship conducted by Rev. J. J. Rives, pastor of Court Street Methodist Church of Lynchburg, an uncle of Dorothy Jackson. Dr. W. T. Scott introduced the ministers and visitors.

The roll call of churches showed that there were present from Ingram, 4; Union, Virgilina, 3; Liberty, 3; Pleasant Grove, 4; Lynchburg, 13. Each society gave an interesting report of the work done during the last year. Mrs. R. A. Whitten was present and gave a report of the work done in the Valley Conference.

The theme of the Rally: "The Lord Thy God . . . and Thy Neighbor," was presented by Mrs. F. C. Lester, president of the North Carolina Conference. She emphasized the theme and mentioned different activities in which we cooperate. After the hymn, "At Length There Dawns the Glorious Dawn," we heard Miss Pattie Lee Coghill in an interesting talk on "India As I Saw It." She brought out the conditions in India, industrially, politically and religiously. The greatest asset of India is her 400 million people. Poverty and hunger is widespread. The caste system has a great hold on the people but it is gradually breaking down. Mahatma Ghandi has been a great help in this. She gave other interesting facts about her visit in India.

Mr. A. J. Jefferson sang a solo accompanied by Mrs. Russell Leftwich. The offering amounted to $15.50.

At the afternoon session Mrs. F. C. Lester presided. The pastor of the local church, Mr. G. William Wolford, offered the prayer. A conversation period was conducted by Mrs. Lester, Miss Betty Chicoine, Mrs. R. A. Whitten and Mrs. T. W. Chandler in which ways of making our work more interesting and profitable were discussed. This was followed by a talk by Rev. J. L. Houff of the Virginia Council of Churches, in the interest of Church World Service. He gave us instructions on how we may help with this work, also showing us the desperate need in the overseas situation, he presented the sound movie, "The Seeds of Destiny."

Miss Coghill gave an interesting and informative Travelog of her visit to India, Greece, Turkey, Syria, Palestine, Italy, Denmark, The World Council of Churches headquarters in Geneva and welfare work in England.

The officers were elected as follows: Mrs. T. W. Chandler, superintendent; Mrs. Leroy Adams, assistant superintendent; Mrs. W. T. Dunn, secretary and treasurer.

Each society was requested to give a Memorial Membership for Mrs. C. H. Rowland, our past president. All societies were urged to cooperate in the program of relief sponsored by the Church World Service. Dr. W. T. Scott presented the mission program of the Southern Convention, and stressed the need of supporting the Shaowu project and the use of the cent-a-meal plan and the Easter offering for missions.

A LETTER TO SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS AND SOCIETY PRESIDENTS.

Dear Friends:

The Board of Publication has set May 18 as CHRISTIAN SUN Day for the Convention and on that day we are making a united effort to increase subscriptions to THE SUN. Our goal is 1,000 new subscribers. This means one new subscription for every 25 church members.

If the Missionary Society has an agent for THE SUN, this is the time for her to make some money taking subscriptions. If there is not an agent, then talk with your pastor and see that someone is appointed to receive subscriptions.

The Sunday school superintendents should bring this to the attention of the Sunday school and urge folks to subscribe for THE SUN. Ask subscribers to bring copies to church to give to others.

If you do not have church every Sunday you will arrange with your pastor to observe some day and receive subscriptions.

You can get folders from Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Elon College, N. C., to give to your people.

Thank you for helping get THE SUN into the homes of our church folk.

Sincerely yours,
JOE A. FRENCH, Ch'm'n,
Board of Publication.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

"RASCAL."

Hello, Boys and Girls:

My name is "Rascal." I have white and brown hair on my body. My sense of smell is very keen. I have two bright eyes, two ears, a nose, a mouth that so often has a pink tongue sticking out of it, four active little legs with paws on the ends of them and a short tail that has a hint of a curl to it, a very waggy! Yes, you guessed it! I am a cunning puppy!

You would like to meet my mistress also. She is an only little girl who is six years old. Her name is Jennie Lou Pangle. Mrs. Pangle got me for Jennie Lou so that Jennie Lou would not be too lonely while her mother is in the hospital for an operation. Mr. Pangle is a lawyer and keeps very busy during the day. Jennie Lou and I are staying out on her Grandfather's farm in the country while Mrs. Pangle is in the hospital. We have lots of lovely green grass to romp and play in. There are lots of bright colored flowers, too, that Jennie Lou is forever telling me to watch for and keep away from them with my scratchy toes!

Jennie Lou's Grandmother has a time getting the tangles out of her hair each morning. It is fine, soft reddish brown hair like her mother's. Jennie Lou tries to be brave while it is being combed but sometimes I see tears come into her brown eyes that look down into mine. That's the way I feel when someone accidentally steps on one of my paws. Jennie Lou looks so nice when she gets the braids finished and a ribbon to match her dress tied on each one.

Last night we came back into town to Jennie Lou's home. Then we went to the hospital to see Mrs. Pangle. I had to stay out in the car. Jennie Lou was all smiles when she came back to the car, so I know that her mother will soon be well now. I am very glad, too, because it is a big job to try to keep a little girl happy when her mother isn't around! The country is grand but I miss all of the little children on the street in town and the big dog that lives across the street from me there. When I'm at home I go walking with the big dog almost every day. We have lots of fun.

The lady who writes your Page for you lives on our street. She says that she would like for you to write about your pets so that she can put them in this page. Goodbye now!

"RASCAL."

P. S.: I do try to be good even if I do have such a naughty name.

TODDLE TALK.

Grandmother Davis had come to see her new grandson, John, Jr. Mrs. Davis was talking with her daughter-in-law when two-year-old Louise left her older sister, Susie, and came up to her grandmother.

"Granny, I want your teeth!" commanded the little miss.

"What would you do with Granny's false teeth, 'Honey,?' You have almost a mouth full of your own!"

"I want them for baby brother 'cause he hasn't any!"

OBEDIENCE.

By MARIE MURRAY HUGHES.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Dear Auntie:

I'm troubled and need your advice. Here is the story.

On Bobby's third birthday — observing the old rule,

"In all wise party plans
As the natal days nears,
Hosts or hostess and guests
Equal number of years,"—

I invited Jack and Don, the little sons of my friend Mary Croy, to help Bobby celebrate the occasion. Jack is four years old and Don, three. Mary accepted for them and brought them to the party.

"Jack," said his mother, "give Bobby his gift."

"Don't want to," Jack answered truthfully. "I like it."

"Well, let's both give it to him," she answered, gently taking hold of the package with him and extending it. "Happy birthday, Bobby!"

Now it was my turn. "Say 'Thank you,' Bobby," I reminded him.

"Let me see it first," said Bobby. "If it's a ball I'll say 'Thank you.'" He shook out a bright red woolly sweater. "Clothes!" he ejaculated disgustedly. "I like toys."

"But this is lovely, Bobby. Think how warm and comfortable you'll feel on cold days. Say 'Thank you, Jack and Don.'" "

"If they'd brought a ball I'd say 'Thank you,'" persisted Bobby. A smile of mutual understanding passed between Mary and me.

Ice cream and cake were next on the program, with jolly little Don piping a shaky "Happy birthday to you," but Jack sitting tight-lipped—not for a moment entering into the festivities. Suddenly Bobby noticed that Jack was not honoring the occasion and he became quite insistent that Jack should join in the song.

It was only when I pointed out that Jack thought the singing so lovely he just wanted to listen that further difficulties were averted.

The party over, Don said, "Good-bye, and thank you," and skipped out to the car. Jack stood silent, by the door.

"Say 'Thank you,' because it was such a very nice party," urged his mother.

He remained speechless.

"Well, thank you for both of us; we have enjoyed the party so much," said his mother, and at this Jack's smile verified her words.

As far as the practice of the social amenities were concerned, we mothers had not been very successful with our sons that afternoon. Suddenly, we both laughed and we agreed that life is too short to make an issue out of such situations. Children forced to say "please" and "thank you" at every turn, we felt sure, come to bitterly resent all similar courtesies.

A few days later, when Jack stopped in with his father for a book which I had promised to lend him, I saw a very different theory tried out.

"Say 'Good-bye,'" ordered Mr. Croy.

Jack was silent.

"Say 'Good-bye,'" — this time more severely.

I was embarrassed, and offered weakly, "You'll say 'Good-bye' next time, won't you, Jack?"

"He'll say it now, or get a good whipping," said his father sternly. "Say 'Good-bye.'"

Bobby came upon the scene in time to see Jack receive a sound spanking. He, also, began to cry, and it seemed to me that if this kept up much longer I'd cry, too.

"Now will you say it," demanded Mr. Croy, even more angry than before.

Too disconcerted to witness any further discipling, I withdrew to my living room, where sounds of the application of two successive punishments reached me. Then a few moments later, a triumphant father and a very shamefaced lad stood in my doorway. Jack said, "Good-bye," and Mr. Croy added his farewell to that of his son after remarking, "You mustn't let these youngsters get the best of you once, or they'll do it always."

SUMMER CAMP.

Now is the time to begin making plans for the yearly fellowship of inspiration and instruction offered at our Summer Camps. Many of you who read this will recall experiences in days past when the young people of various sections of the Southern Convention have met in their Summer Sessions. These are the highlights in our young people's program for the summer. All of you who have attended in days past will want to return again this year. Many of you who have never attended such a camp will want to have that experience this summer. I hope none of you are disappointed. However, the attendance at the camp must be limited because of limited facilities. Those of us in the Convention have no control over that. You, however, can be of much help in seeing that your group is represented by at least one delegate. If there is room for more, you will be informed.

The Junior High Camp will be held at Camp Hanes (YMCA), twenty-three miles from Winston-Salem, N. C. It will begin Tuesday, August 12, and will close Sunday (after breakfast) August 17. All boys and girls from the Congregational Christian Churches of the Southern Convention, ages twelve, thirteen and fourteen; or those entering the seventh, eighth and ninth grades may attend. The cost will be $12.50 per camper for use of the camp and $1.00 per camper for registration fee; a total of $13.50 per semester.

The Senior High Camp will also be held at Camp Hanes (YMCA), twenty-three miles from Winston-Salem, N. C., beginning Sunday, August 17, and closing Friday, August 22 (after breakfast). All boys and girls from churches in the Southern Convention, ages fifteen, sixteen, seventeen and eighteen; or those entering their sophomore, junior or senior years of high school, or those who have graduated in June, may attend. The cost will be $12.50 per camper for use of the camp and $1.00 per camper for registration fee; a total of $13.50.

Camp Hanes is located in a lovely valley in the mountains, with a lake, tennis court, baseball diamond, volley ball and basketball equipment, a big dining room, an outdoor pavillion, a place for evening camp fires, and other additions which make for a good summer camp. The entire camp is furnished with electric lights—the cabins, the dining room, the kitchen, the pavillion, etc. The YMCA furnishes the food, complete dining room and kitchen force, and provides the experienced waterfront guards and recreational force. Every necessity for a smooth-running and effective camp routine is provided. Thus one can see that the $2.50 per day cost is very low.

You will be hearing more soon concerning the camp schedule. Watch for it.

CAST THE FIRST STONE.

Benevolence in the Judgment of Others is the theme of the "Greatest Story Ever Told" program on Sunday, May 4, 1947, ABC, 6:30 P. M., EDST.

In all the Holy Land there is no finer mind than that of Nathaniel. But with all his brilliancy, he is a bitter man, bitter because he never found the truth for which he sought all his life. Everywhere he turned, disappointment was his, and eventually he became associated with thieves and beggars for want of better company.

Two of Jerusalem's scoundrels, Raphael and Lemuel, seek out Nathaniel who they hope will be able to formulate a plan to discredit the Master and His teachings. Nathaniel, however, has listened to Him in the temple several times and seriously doubts that He can be discredited but is willing to try.

Nathaniel presents a plan to the plotters which they think will force the Master to publicly choose between lawlessness and forgiveness, thus casting doubt on His sincerity before the very eyes of His followers.

They find a woman whom they drag to the temple and accuse of adultery for which the punishment under law is stoning. The Master is asked to pronounce sentence. Instead, He says, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her."

Raphael starts to throw the first stone but stops when he notices what the Master has written on the floor about him—the truth about his sins. Then, Raphael and Lemuel leave hurriedly.

After their departure, Christ asks the woman, "Hath no man condemned thee? To her negative reply, He says, "Neither do I condemn thee; Go."

All Nathaniel's doubts were dispelled; at long last he found truth—in Christ.

NBC's summer series of inspirational talks by Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, "The Art of Living," will be broadcast for the first time this year on Saturday, May 3 (6:45-7:00 P. M., EST), replacing "Religion in the News." Dr. Peale is pastor of New York's Marble Collegiate Church. Topics for the first month's broadcast will be: "How to Break the Worry Habit," May 3; "Nerve Balance for Days of Stress," May 10; "There Are No Hopeless Situations," May 17; "Do People Like You?" May 24; and "There Is an Answer to Your Problems," May 31.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

Don't you think the father's behavior was brutal, Auntie? I pity Jack's mother. But on the other hand, since Mr. Croy is so strict, would it be better for Mary to be firmer with Jack? And should I insist that Bobby say his thank you's?

Your loving niece,
Dorothy.

The response to this letter was brief and to the point.

My dear Dorothy:

It is every parent's sacred duty to teach obedience. This can't be done by the use of the rod. That is an obsolete method—attempted now only by the bully or the ignorant. Let Bobby understand the difference between a command and a request—when you are telling him to or not to, and when you are asking if he would like to. Give very few commands, but always insist, gently and firmly, on their being obeyed. Teach your child to enjoy granting your requests, but never insist upon his doing so. My dear, examine the daily conversations to which Bobby listens. If the home atmosphere is as it should be, under ordinary circumstances he will want to please you. He will love to give, too, and will be happy to express pleasure for any gift he receives. Teach the form for such expressions of appreciation by example only—not by commands.

With love,
Aunt Edith.

THE STRUGGLE AGAINST BAALISM.

LESSON VI—MAY 11, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Hear me, O Lord, hear me, that this people may know that thou, Lord, art God.—I Kings 18:37.

LESSON: I Kings 16:29; II Kings 10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 138.

The Influence of a Bad Woman.

Ahab, king of Israel, married Jezebel, a Phoenician woman, who did not have the moral sense of rat. She was a worshipper of Baal, one of the gods of the Phoenicians, who was a god of the soil, with both beneficent and destructive aspects. He was the Sun-god, and gave light and warmth to his worshippers. On the other hand the fierce heats of summer destroyed the vegetation he had himself brought into being. Hence human victims were often sacrificed to appease his wrath, and usually it was the first-born of the sacrificer which was burnt alive. Baals were local deities, each place having its own god. Temples were sometimes built for local Baals, and more or less elaborate rituals were devised for worshipping these pagan gods. There was nothing uplifting or character-changing for the better about Baal worship.

When Jezebel came from her native land she brought her gods with her. She was a shrewd, calculating, unscrupulous woman. She exerted a powerful influence over Ahab, and for the worse. Like so many women before and since she caused her husband to compromise his religious faith and to lose his religious heritage. Alas, for the men who have wives or mothers who are either indifferent to the high claims of religion, or openly opposed to it. A bad woman is one of the worst curses of mankind.

Wickedness On High Places.

Ahab, as king, should have been more careful of his manner of life and his measure of faith. His religious professions and policies set the pattern for his people. He caused the people to sin by building high places for Baal and by himself worshipping Baal. Leaders can be influential by setting a good example for their people.

Enter Elijah.

It was against the background of this evil king and wicked woman that Elijah enters the scene. Corruption and immorality as well as religious compromise abounded. The worship of Jehovah had almost gone into eclipse. Many of the prophets had been killed or imprisoned, and there was no freedom of speech for those who thus far had escaped. Then Elijah strides upon the scene. He is a man of vigor, of courage, of conviction, of intense loyalty to his God. He was not afraid of anybody, not even the king or the queen. He is jealous for the Lord God of hosts. He yearns for the redemption of his people from the evils of Baalism. He is a man of fire. Where he goes there is action. He is stern, uncompromising, fiery. The sacred record tells how he went to heaven in a chariot of fire. It was as it should be. He blazed across the political and religious horizon as a ball of fire and burned his way into the heart of the nation's life, and it was only poetic justice that he should go out as he lived.

A Practical Test.

There are many incidents in the life of Elijah embodied in the scriptural background of today's lesson—there are sixteen chapters in all—which are interesting and informative. But the heart of them all is the well-known conflict between Elijah and the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel. There are few incidents in Biblical history which pack more drama in them than this decisive event. Here on this majestic mountain peak jutting out into the Great Sea, and towering hundreds of feet above it, there took place as a single act what summed up in reality a long period of conflict and struggle.

The story is more or less familiar to the average student of the Bible. With a courage that is sublime and with a faith that is just as sublime, Elijah challenges the prophets of Baal, four hundred of them to a practical test. He suggests that they as the representatives of Baal call upon their god to come down with fire on the altars which had been dedicated to him. Elijah in turn will call upon Jehovah to do the same. The deity which answers by fire is to have the allegiance of the people. This man, Elijah, not only had courage but he was willing to challenge the forces of paganism and evil and to withstand them to the face. But he was eminently fair. He gave them all the odds. He met them on the place that they held sacred to their god, he pitted himself against four hundred of them, he gave them first "go," he took great pains to eliminate anything that might be misunderstood or minimized as the action of God, and he expressed his willingness to follow the deity that answered by fire. It was, of course, all because he had faith in the living God, because he knew he represented a better way of life, because he knew that God could vindicate himself. We can hardly expect such a test now—there is no need for it. But our God is still able to establish His sovereignty, and His way of life is still manifestly superior to that of any pagan god.

As Dean Brown writes, "There is no difference in belief worth talking about which does not make a difference when brought to the test of experience. Let the pragmatic (the practical) test be applied today by rival claimants for our adherence. Let the religion that answers by renewed hearts, by loftier moral purposes, by increased spiritual vigor, by finer forms of unselfishness and usefulness stand supreme! Let paganism and infidelity cease plying us with cleverly devised theories—let them make a show of moral results consequent upon their interpretation of the supreme verities and then we shall have something to speak to and not a mere array of idle talk."

Religious Mugwumps.

Some wag has said that a "mugwump is a politician sitting on the fence with his mug on one side and his wump on the other." There are a lot of religious mugwumps, people who are halting between two opinions, people who are dilly-dallying about the supreme business of life. They know enough, they simply are not willing to act, to follow the light they have, to obey the truth they know. There is a clarion call today for men and women who nail their flags to the mast and take their stand for Christ. Today is no time for indecision and moral compromise and indifference.

May has been designated as "Christian Sun Month," and the third Sunday (May 18) has been designated as "Christian Sun Sunday." Pastors and members are urged to promote subscriptions to THE SUN. The goal is 1,000 new subscriptions to THE SUN. This goal can be reached easily if each church will obtain one new subscription for each 25 members of the church.

IDEA OF A DENOMINATION.

certain glad independence—but who can do so and still be sensitive of the claim of Christ for his own? Who can do so and continue to believe that he is respecting the source from which his very freedom came?

Evangelical Freedom May Be Corrupted Into License.

So we have bowed before strange gods, allowing the essential humanism of the sectarian motive to dominate us. Christ has caused a light to burn within us, but its illumination has been so bright as to have obscured the very source from which it came. We have taken the living Christian tradition for granted and forgotten it. Christ and his Church have diminished, while we as individuals increased. We have been as gods knowing good and evil.

We Congregationalists have come by our humanism of the last generation honestly in New England. It was Emerson who wrote:

Standing on the bare ground—my head bathed by the blithe air, and uplifted into infinite space—all mean egotism vanishes. I become a transparent eye-ball; I am nothing; I see all; the currents of the Universal Being circulate through me; I am part or parcel of God.

Here you have the situation: The power of God washes through the human spirit giving it life—but the power of God comes from the blithe air: it is everywhere. Let us stop right there: there is the basis of the lie. The spirit of God is not equally available everywhere. A seed with life in it may grow into a full-blown plant, but it will only do so in a certain environment. The human soul, empowered with the incipient life imparted to it by the Holy Spirit, possesses all the possibilities of growth into the eternal dimension—but it is a law as inviolable as any law of biochemistry that that soul will come to its destined own only in the proper spiritual environment—and history makes it clear that there is no environment for the soul quite like Jesus and his Church. It is not the blithe air which gives a Christian his sense of freedom, and if he uses his freedom to cut himself off from the true source of freedom, that very freedom will perish in the end.

The Liberal Christian College.

The disease of autonomy that has prevailed in our Protestant denominations is most clearly seen in our Christian colleges. I do not mean the autonomy of college government, for that would seem to be necessary to save the colleges from clericalism: I mean rather the autonomy of thought which has prevailed on the campuses—and I am speaking only of the campuses of the so-called church-related colleges.

When men of my age were pursuing the liberal arts—and I doubt if the situation has greatly changed—each department in our Christian colleges (I speak at least of the majority) was a spiritual law unto itself. It sought to make itself not merely a center of interest for the student but the one center of interpretation for all of life. Existence could be explained, for instance, from the point of view of chemistry: the story of mankind could be told in terms of starches, proteins, and minerals, not to mention Vitamins A, B, C, and D. But when one left the nine o'clock class for the ten o'clock lecture on psychology, he was given a complete picture of human life in terms of the "six principle fundamental temperaments"—hypomanic, syntonie, and four others, equally high-sounding. The economics classroom provided its own complete philosophy as did the departments of sociology and geography. All these were to be preferred to the humanities, where we learned not that the humanities are the center of life but that there is no center at all. I note with interest today that in the churches on the edge of college campuses it is more likely to be the scientific men of the institution that one finds in the pews than the professors of English and tributary subjects. The effect upon the students was in either case the same: whether there were many philosophies competing for acknowledgment or none at all, the upshot was bewilderment. The student felt himself not in a university but in a multiversity—or a nihiloversity. The college has prided itself on teaching truth, but if anything is certain it is that truth exists and that it is one: the college which in its supposed freedom has taught that there are many conflicting ultimates may have taught truths—and there are undoubtedly an infinite number of truths to be taught—but it has certainly failed in its fundamental purpose of imparting the truth. It is as if the Einsteinian geometry were taught in one classroom and Euclidian in another and no attempt were made by the department to unify the two. Under this system any professor could feel at liberty to develop a universe with himself as the center. Like the Gnostics of the early Christian centuries, one could "substitute diversion of the brain for conversion of the heart: you merely thought out a cosmic system and were spared the troubled of obeying a historical revelation." (Rosenstock-Huessy.)

Christians have made a discovery, comparable to but far more important than any discovery of science, namely, that the basis of life is the love of God as it is revealed in Jesus Christ through the Church. This basic Christian dogma is "not a mere topic of thought but the presupposition of sanity." Were this not true there would be no universities. I do not mean by this that the universities would not have been founded, since the Church is historically their mother, but rather that there is no hope for integrating the mind to embrace the entirety of the facts of human existence except on this premise. In a Christian college or university the fact of God's love is proposition one in every classroom. The whole of science becomes the discovery of the methods of God's love and the development of the ingenuity of human love. Art becomes the divine pursuit of seeing the world as God made it and interpreting it in the realistic beauty that it invariably presents. That college is free, that college teaches the liberal arts—that is, the arts which befit a free man—which understands the meaning of freedom, which keeps free the channel of access between the soul and source of freedom, the God of love, and which knows that in order to do this it simply cannot teach that all other channels between the soul and the various other aspects of the world are equally important.

The ordinary liberal arts college is the instrument for developing men and women for our normal, secular American life, that is, the life of free enterprise. The Christian liberal arts college, according to its idea, is devoted to developing men and women who as good members of the Church will impart Christian character to our American life in all its relationships. There is a third type of higher educational institution among us—the State college or university, which in its essence is devoted to the things of the State. It is through these instruments that the three groups, the Church, the State, and free enterprise—which is virtually American business—contend for chief influence. My fear is that the influence of our secular economic life has captured most of the Church colleges and that in turn, at least during these war years, the State has taken over the two other types as well as its own. The free-enterprise college leaders are now beginning to worry whether their colleges will be returned to them intact by the State. I wonder if they can make a case for them-

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt

Dear Friends:

Have you made your will? If so, did you put a clause in it which reads something like the following: "I will and bequeath to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., the sum of dollars for its general uses and purposes." You may will us a few hundred or thousand dollars, whatever you desire, and it will be awfully nice of you to do so. You can be assured that it will be used for the care of little children who need your love and care. It makes no difference how much you have accumulated, because it is an assured fact that you will not take anything with you, but the good deeds you have done on earth. If you have already made your will and overlooked the Christian Orphanage, you can add a codicil designating some amount for the Orphanage. Do it before it is too late. We have been remembered in wills from time to time, and the amounts that have come from wills have always come at a time when there was a need to be met. We are calling your attention to this matter so you will not overlook it.

The repair work on the Orphanage buildings has been moving along very nicely so far. The painters have been working every day. We have a lot of painting to do on the outside and inside, too. When the weather will permit, they work on the outside, but when it rains they move inside. So they have been able to keep steady at work.

Out of the goodness of his heart, a fine young contractor pulled his men off another job and did several days of carpenter work for us that just had to be done so we could go on with the painting. We hope within the next two weeks, weather permitting, to have a large part of the work done. It has cost us a lot of money, but we will have a beautiful plant when the work is finished. If you will mail us a check to help us bear this heavy expense, we will be very happy.

selves. I have read many impassioned pleas for the return of the college to the ways of liberal education, but the protagonists of free education will have to prove that such-and-such a college makes better citizens or better human beings than West Point, Annapolis, or any of the State-controlled institutions. They will doubtless be able to do so, but it will not be an easy task.

And at least it is not my task here: I speak for a return to the idea of the denominational college—not the narrowly but the broadly ecumenical denominational college. We know that the State institutions did not save Germany from National Socialism. There was apparently nothing in those universities which made them aware, as the living part of the Church became instantly aware, that there was that in the new philosophy which robbed them of their birth-right. They did not really know, as Christians know, what freedom in this universe is, and did not therefore realize that it was being taken from them. Undoubtedly it is necessary for the State to have something to do with the education of its own sons and daughters. The State has to protect itself and develop its own welfare, but the State as such can hardly supply that knowledge of supranational brotherhood which is the one hope of the world.

The secular arts colleges undoubtedly make for greater skill in business and professional pursuits, and are therefore highly necessary—but do they provide the one thing needful? We know that in general they are distributing centers for knowledge—but do they pretend to develop men and women who are ready to die for the one truth that links humanity together, the truth of the love of God? They are spiritually neutral. We have to ask ourselves whether life is to be taken seriously or not. In ordinary times, in the midst of our routines, we are accustomed to laugh at if not shudder at the thought of the necessity for dying for anything. But unless a person has something to die for, it is quite clear that he has nothing to live for, and that meaning is seeping away from his life. The young man who tonight is waiting for the zero hour of attack tomorrow morning is probably better able than most of us to realize the truth that it is because we have been so indifferent about the meaning of our education and so ready to turn out men and women whose lives were almost completely aimless that we are today sacrificing the sons and daughters of humanity by the hundreds of thousands. I could wish that our Church colleges would return to their own, that they would stand for something, that they would build their curriculum around a purpose—the purpose of the Christian Church. Given the necessity for training men for the State, given the equal necessity for training them for secular American life, I could wish that in our Church colleges the Reformation would overtake the Renaissance—and the Roman Empire—and academic freedom be used consciously to the glory of God and the welfare of God's children.

The denomination which is building toward the future world will be a Church, a group of people committed in belief to the most high God as He reveals Himself in Christ: it will be a Catholic Church not because it clings to old forms but because it is related to Christ, the same yesterday, today, and forever, and it will be Evangelical in the full meaning of the term, using its freedom not to cut itself off from its own source of vitality, but maintain its life-giving contacts and to be its true self. This kind of Church would illustrate life at its best, conserving its gains by repetitions, fixations, patterns, habits, institutions, customs, traditions, but never lifting any of these to the pitch of absoluteness—but reaching out tentatively, experimentally, gropingly, toward new achievements. The Catholic principle in itself might deaden in to stagnation, the Evangelical principle might be provocative to the breaking of continuity; but each supplements the other and the Evangelical Catholic Church will be one which uses the treasures brought to it by tradition for a free but not discontinuance advance into the future.

Charity is injurious unless it helps the recipient to become independent of it.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

A LETTER TO PASTORS.

Dear Fellow Pastor:

Every pastor in our Southern Convention wants to do more effective work and lead his church in a progressive program of spiritual growth, and he wants to use every legitimate means to accomplish this great task for our Lord.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is our own publication which is designed to help do this work among our church people, and we want THE SUN to render this service in the most effective way. In order to do this THE SUN must be going into the homes of our church folk.

The Board of Publication has set May 18 as "Christian Sun Day" for the Convention and on that day we are asking all churches to receive subscriptions at the morning service of worship. In part-time churches the pastor will set some Sunday for this purpose and observe it.

Our goal is 1,000 new subscriptions to THE SUN. This means one new subscription for every 25 members of your church. Thus you can easily figure the quota for your church.

We believe we can depend upon you to help us put THE SUN into the homes of your members. Thank you for your help.

Fraternally yours,
JOE A. FRENCH, Ch'm'n,
Board of Publication.

DR. SOCKMAN TO BROADCAST.

Dr. Ralph W. Sockman will deliver the last four sermons of the current season of "The National Radio Pulpit" (NBC, Sundays, 10:00 A. M., EST) during May.

He will speak on "The Length of a Full Life" on May 4; "The Future of the Family" on May 11; "How Secure Should We Be?" on May 18, and "The Lord's Prayer" on May 25.

The sermon for May 25 is being repeated by popular request.

"The National Radio Pulpit" will be replaced during the summer by "Highlights of the Bible."

Get all you can without hurting your soul, your body, or your neighbor. Save all you can, cutting off every needless expense. Give all you can. Be glad to give, and ready to distribute; laying up in store for yourselves a good foundation against the time to come, that you may attain eternal life.—John Wesley.

A man who dares to waste one hour of life has not discovered the value of life.—Darwin.

HISTORY OF THE "SUN'S" MOTTO.

Many sayings, slogans and mottoes are often used without knowledge of their origin. The motto of THE CHRISTIAN SUN—In essentials, unity, in non-essentials, liberty, in all things, charity—may, to many, be a case in point.

THE SUN's motto comes from the Latin maxim: In necessariis unitas, in non necessariis libertas, in utrisque caritas. The correct translation is: Unity in essentials, freedom in non-essentials, charity in both.

The maxim first occurred in a small tract published in 1626 by Rupertus Meldenius, headmaster of a college at Augsbourg, Bavaria. The tract was a plea for peace within the church, and especially for a cessation of dogmatic wrangling between Lutherans and Calvinists.

The tract struck a sensitive chord in many hearts, not only in the author's homeland, but also in England, and elsewhere in Europe where the message chanced to be circulated. The maxim was widely used, and often inscribed over the entrance to churches.

May THE SUN's motto be a daily guide to all its readers, and not mere words on the publication's front page.

sure, it is their duty, but they will give and care more if they really want to, and more important, if it is presenting an energetic and challenging program that they can not only be a part of, but talk about enthusiastically with all their outside friends and acquaintances.

Let no one fool himself that status quo programs or preaching will be enough to meet 1947 needs, except in a pitiful minority, or among a very small handful of churches.

If people can become concerned about their own religious life and at the same time become aware of the need of God and Christian fellowship and not be satisfied until these two needs are met, we will have a good year and no conditions need be expected. Incidentally, isn't it interesting how being a part of the other fellow's needs always helps us spiritually?

The trouble with too many people, and this includes too many church people, is simply that they do not expect anything to happen. Not expecting, we are not surprised or disappointed when nothing turns up. No church is too small, either in size of building or number of members, to make a really distinct contribution to its members and a profound impression upon the surrounding community. It can establish a warm fellowship and draw into it all non-churched people adjacent to it. It can point out a problem facing a community; get all the facts; study possible solutions and finally lead united efforts toward solving or eradicating the problem. It can sponsor some civic improvements by supplying either the incentive, the means, the human strength or acting as the organizing or coordinating agent. It can, in short, do anything it wishes if it can arouse its leadership and its members to want to do something.

The church has a wonderful heritage but nothing in our world of 1947 can or should live on heritage alone. We must still be pioneers in the highest sense of the word.

powerful agency for achieving this purpose, then our first job is to help the home effectively to discharge this duty."

Methods suggested by Dr. Swearingen included pre-marital counseling as couples are establishing their Christian homes and anticipate the rearing of children within the Christian tradition; creation of special literature for reading in the home; giving attention to the effect of community forces on family life, such as housing problems, need for recreation facilities, creating of correct standards of success; and developing a realization of "the Christian religious significance in growing life of every thought, every word, every act and every relationship, which makes religion a spirit and direction giving meaning and value to every life experience."

CHURCH ETIQUETTE

By DEAN JAMES MALLOCH

St. James Episcopal Cathedral, Fresno, California

There is a very close connection between etiquette and ethics. Tennyson wrote in "Idylls of the King": "For manners are not idle, but the fruit of loyal nature and of noble mind." Cardinal Newman in his "The Idea of a University" wrote: "It is almost a definition of a gentleman to say he is one who never inflicts pain." Goethe, the great German poet, said: "There is no outward sign of courtesy that does not rest on a deep moral foundation."

With that fundamental principle in mind, I list a few important rules of church etiquette.

1. Don't call a minister "Reverend." Call him "Mister" or, if he has the degree, "Doctor," or in the case of most Roman Catholic and certain Episcopalian clergy, "Father." If he is a dean, call him "Dean." If he is a Monsignor, call him "Monsignor." If he is a Bishop, call him "Bishop."
2. Don't be a snob in church. Everybody is equal in God's House. A snob is just a shoddy human being on the way to Purgatory.
3. Respect the religious convictions of other people. People who make fun of honest religion are boorish and stupid, and maybe psychopathic.
4. Be loyal and kind to your pastor. He is a man of religion, and, consequently, can't swear back at you.
5. When you move into a new town call on your pastor at once, not just to ask him to help you overcome the housing situation, but to line up with your new parish church. Make a financial pledge to the church, too.
6. Get to church on time and stay until the service is over. However, it is better to go to church a bit late than not at all. Worship is essential. It is worse to ignore God than to ignore man. Be reverent. It is impolite to disturb the devotions of others.
7. Don't tell a clergyman how to conduct a wedding or a funeral. He is a professional man. The presumption is he knows his job better than you do. And don't choose secular music for weddings or funerals. They are sacred services.
8. If you are a woman, stand up when you are presented socially to a minister of religion. He represents the Holy.
9. Have your children baptized as soon as possible. They are entitled to the courtesy of being introduced to God.
10. Add thanksgiving to your prayers. Ingratitude is ignoble.
11. Do your part in keeping your church building in a good state of repair. It is an insult to God and your town to permit temples to deteriorate.
12. Give your children a good religious education. It is declassé to have religiously illiterate offspring.
13. Respect and practice the highest morality. It is noble to be good. Join the nobility of the spiritual realm.
14. Don't give parties during the hours of church services. It isn't decent to be a rival of God Almighty.
15. Be courteous to Jesus Christ. He asked you to go to Holy Communion in remembrance of Him. You have an appointment with your Blessed Lord. It is good etiquette to keep appointments.

National Family Week

The White House
Washington, D. C.
March 1, 1947

My dear Friends:

The American home, in peace as in war, stands four-square as our first line of defense. It is therefore encouraging to know that National Family Week is again to be observed during the period from May 4 to 11, 1947.

It is of happy significance when three great groups representing differing religious convictions and allegiances in our American life can unite in a common undertaking. It is, I firmly believe, decidedly in the national interest that representatives of the Synagogue Council of America, representing the ancient Jewish culture; the National Conference on Family Life, representing the Catholic faith; and the Intercouncil Committee on Family Life, representing the Protestant faith, can unite in the observance of National Family Week. This joint effort gives the Nation and the world an example of the spirit of toleration and forbearance which must prevail if we are to maintain our democratic institutions. Not the least of our freedoms is freedom of conscience.

I trust that the forthcoming observance of National Family Week will emphasize the principle that in all that affects our well-being as a Nation we strive for unity in essentials; liberty in non-essentials; in all things charity.

Very sincerely yours,

/s/ HARRY S. TRUMAN.

"UNIQUE"—DR. AND MRS. C. E. NEWMAN.

For the writer, the word unique has been clothed with a meaning whose profundity was never before realized. This revelation of its hidden depths is the result of a practical observation of the effects of the life and ministry of two veterans of the Cross, Dr. and Mrs. C. E. Newman. This observation is being made in their former pastoral field, from which they have recently retired—the Virgilina group—and to which the writer has been called as pastor. This field is comprised of four

OVERSEAS RELIEF.

There is urgent need for clothing, bedding, and shoes for Overseas Relief. Our churches in North Carolina and Virginia are urged to give their support to this application of the Christian principle of sharing with the needy. This is an opportunity to demonstrate our profession of love for Jesus Christ. "In as much as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye did it unto me." Consult your pastor for full particulars.

SECOND SERIES OF RURAL LIFE INSTITUTES.

To aid in adjusting the rural church programs in Virginia to meet the rapidly changing conditions confronting people in small towns and agricultural regions of the Old Dominion, the Rural Church Department of the Virginia Council of Churches will conduct a series of six Rural Life Institutes throughout the Commonwealth.

Featuring local, state, and national leaders in all phases of community living, each institute will be conducted to acquaint the people in hamlets, small towns and rural communities with the place of the church in the life of an individual, the family and the community at large. It will emphasize the resources available in each community that can be utilized in bettering the life of the people and indicate how a closer coordination may be effected among the various agencies and resources.

Among the subjects to be discussed and considered at each of the six institutes are the rural church; the rural school; home and family life; the rural church and the community; land policy and church stability; the ministry and the rural church; health and the church; coordinating rural agencies and resources; surveys and how to conduct them; and recreation.

To make the programs effective, representatives of various departments of the Virginia Council of Churches will be available as speakers and leaders at the institutes. Among these are Rev. Luke G. Beauchamp, chairman of the Rural Church Department's Committee on Rural Institutes; Professor B. L. Hummel, of the V. P. I. Extension Service, and chairman of the Rural Church Depart; as well as his associate, Professor W. W. Eure; and James W. Sells of Mississippi.

Following is the schedule of the Rural Life Institutes for the Spring of 1947:

May 5, Ferrum Junior College, Ferrum; May 6, Roanoke; May 7, Central Methodist Church, Staunton; May 8, Amherst Court House; May 9, Green County, Episcopal Church, Standardsville; May 10 (tentative date), Bowling Green.

The Christian Sun Wants 1,000 New Subscribers

"THE CHRISTIAN SUN" SUBSCRIBERS

WHO ARE THEY AND WHAT ARE THEY DOING?

It may be accurately assumed that the ministers and church members who read "The Christian Sun" regularly are the persons largely responsible for the ongoing of the work of our churches. They are informed as to the Church—its successes, its failures, and the hopes for the future. The purpose of "The Sun" is to inform and inspire. One certain way to improve the quality of the work of the Church is to put "The Sun" into the hands of more of our church members.

The month of May has been designated "Christian Sun Month." Our goal is 1,000 new subscribers. This goal ought to be easy to reach. It means that if in each of our churches we can obtain one new subscriber for each 25 members, our goal will be reached. This is an appeal to subscribers—Pastors, Laymen, and Women—"each to get one" new subscriber during the month of May.

As a subscriber to "The Christian Sun" won't you get one new subscription? You can help extend the influence of "The Sun" and its Christian messages by enlisting another reader. Please detach the blank below and insert the name of a new subscriber on it and mail with $2.00 to The Christian Sun, Elon College, North Carolina.

A GREAT FAMILY.

In one of his interesting "China News Letters," Dr. Harold S. Matthews states that Dr. Edward Riggs of Shaowu, China, is a fourth generation missionary of the American Board, and that thirty-one other relatives of the Riggs family have been missionaries. Even though this record may not be unique, it is significant and impressive. There is something amazingly persistent and containing about missions. There is a cohesive spirit which is contiguous and contagious. This spirit expresses itself at times in blood relationships. These missionary families become powerful units in extended Kingdom service. The "divine infection" seems to be in the blood stream, and the great family tradition is maintained. "God seeth the solitary in families." The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is still the God and Father of succeeding witnesses. The divine wisdom reflected in numerous Biblical genealogies asserts itself today in this family concern for a great cause.

Of course, the glory of missions is the fact that it transcends the blood relationship and makes all men brothers in Christ. The American Board is a family, a family of kindred spirits, divided geographically but united spiritually. Perhaps we might paraphrase the ancient paternal benediction: "In thee, the American Board, shall all of the great families of the earth be blessed."

OUCH!

For those who like for the preacher or editor to "step on their toes," a searing and searching statement from Wesner Fellow's book, "The Modern Parent and the Teaching Church," is offered as a special concession on National Family Week.

"The initial step in preparing to guide children in the home, as well as in the church, along the way to faith and works will take adults before a full-length mirror in which they see themselves ignorant of the Bible, uncomprehending of the meaning of Christian revelation, utterly fearful of the uncomfortable significance of the Cross and ready to bolt at the mere mention of stringent requirement in applying Christian ethics when material possessions and social status must suffer. From this candid view of self and other selves joined in the fellowship of the Church, in this clear mirror, conviction of educational unworthiness is certainly close to conviction of sin, and after sin, repentance."

WELL DONE!

One of the first ministers remembered by the editor was Dr. C. E. Newman, then pastor of Pope's Chapel in North Carolina. That was back in the horse and buggy age, far removed from the atomic age! The editor has a vivid recollection of being held by Dr. Newman as the family drove from a church service. Perhaps the favorable impression made by this beloved pastor helped predispose the writer toward the ministry.

Through all these succeeding years Dr. Newman has continued his quiet but effective ministry. By precept and example he has preached the gospel and turned many to righteousness. Through innumerable sermons, visits and contacts he has magnified the Christ and multiplied his influence.

Dr. Newman concluded his active ministry at Union Church, Virgilina, on the second Sunday in last December. He retired at the age of seventy-two after spending thirty-five years in the Christian ministry. During his ministry at Union the membership has grown from 130 to 450. On the day of his retirement a loyal and appreciative congregation gave him $1,000 and voted him a monthly allowance of $25 for life.

This tribute to a noble servant of the church is inadequate and belated, but the emphasis is apropos for a number of reasons.

1. He knew when to retire. Premature retirement would have robbed his churches of his mature wisdom and leadership. Still he retired before he had to. Dr. Newman writes: "I am enjoying retirement. Brother Andes, my successor, is doing good. Mrs. Newman and I are to live on here in our home and it is our purpose to be active lay members in the church where we hold our membership."

2. This is Family Week. Thank God for great families, for the Newman family! The impact of that family, that Christian family, has been felt far and wide in the circles of the church. Think of the influence of the three brothers who were all ministers! We need many such families today. They are the bulwark of our civilization, the hope of tomorrow.

3. Dr. Newman would probably disclaim any special qualifications as a rural pastor, but the fact remains that he has ministered successfully to rural and village churches. He strengthened every church he served. He knew and loved farmers and farm life. They sensed the fact that here was a pastor who was not using their church simply as a stepping stone to a more lucrative field, who was no fly-by-night prophet with a wildcat scheme up his sleeves. This pastor who visited the poor as well as the privileged, this shepherd who knew his sheep by name had ready access to the ear and heart of his parishoners. This, we believe, is a needed emphasis on Rural Life Sunday. Technical competence in diagnosing the ills of rural life can accomplish little unaccompanied by genuine friendship on the part of the diagnostician.

4. Finally, we are currently trying to focus attention on the need of recruits for the ministry. The solution of the problem is neither simple nor easy. The ramifications of the problem should be studiously explored. But of this we may be sure: one prerequisite is the example of a minister who reflects credit upon his profession. Religion is caught as well as taught. No one factor outweighs the magnetic influence of a beloved pastor.

The Vision, Voice and Vitality of EVANGELISM

By REV. FRANK H. LEWIS, D.D.

From Malachi to the coming of Christ was four centuries voiceless as dust. From Moses to Malachi there had always been a voice in the sky, sometimes a shepherd's voice, sometimes a fig grower's, but always a voice; then silence—four hundred years of it. Not a voice, not a whisper, not a song, not the ecstasy of a lute; not the drip of a harp. The shouting, sometimes fighting, always ecstatic prophets, hushed.

Now a woman with a dream in her heart and a babe on her bosom is singing a lullaby, saying "God hath highly exalted me that I should be the mother of His son." He came, God's son, the express image of his person. For a year and a half only, He walked the dusty ways of Galilee; but His life has fascinated the race, His teachings have changed the world, so that today one-third of mankind believes in some minor or master fashion in this amazing Christ. The secret of His waxing glory is that His purposeful passion was evangelism. Hence the sole business of the church is evangelism. Methods are not important, given a passion for saving men; methods will not prejudice nor defeat the purposes of God. The glory of the ministry is evangelism. Great oratory has wings, fine music weaves a spell, education wears a crown, but they are not worth a fleck of foam on the crest of the ocean wave unless they get men nearer God. The temptation is very real to call on an array of adjectives and adverbs to strut their finery and rustle their silken garments, while obscuring the Savior of men. It is pleasant to be a popular pastor, a good mixer, all things to all men, these are of high value in the marts and minds of men; but you can't mix much without diluting; you cannot be all things to all men and be anything significant to any man. What is the motive power behind evangelism? Love of God and love of men, that is all. If you try to aid a man you must rap on the door, if you love him you will find the door open. Jesus came to save the world. He went away and had not saved a single village. He went away and left it in our hands. I think the most gracious testimonial ever given to man, was that Christ dared to leave the church in human hands. He organized not a single church. Organization is the magic word of today, but you cannot organize a sunrise, no more can you organize spirituality. Suppose the Disciples had met in a post ascension meeting to discuss the dire situation before them. Matthew speaks, and says, "This enterprise has no future; I had a job as tax collector. It was not a pleasant job, but there was a living in it; I'm going back to it." John says sadly, "He is gone, I loved him so. I can't stand it; I'm catching the next caravan for Tyre; good-bye." Peter blurts out, "They killed Him, my best friend, the dirty cowards, I'm getting out of here. My mother-in-law keeps a boarding house in Capernaum, and she sets a good table. She is a little hard to get along with, but I am still the best fisherman in Galilee, farewell." So one by one they slipped away. What would have become of Christianity? So far as I know God had no other plan. He still has no other. If you hear from God and do not let men hear from you the matter ends there.

Evangelism is the high noon of the gospel. The most gripping thing about the gospel is Christ's purpose and power to take weakness and make strength, to take sin and make holiness, like the oyster mends its wound with a pearl. The church building was once sand and clay and trees in a dank forest. The sand was hauled to the fire, the clay was burned in a furious furnace, the logs were dragged from a reluctant woods to be ripped by cruel teeth; wither bound, sand and clay and logs? We build they cry. And now the house is done, the windows with their soft light and sweet story used to be sand. The beams lean with massive strength, a stone cries out of the wall and a beam out of the timber answers it, the organ blows its dream of storm, the preacher preaches Christ and congregations face eternity and prepare for it. Building! So evangelism is contriving by the help of God to build out of the wreckage of the race the kingdom of God. A strange phenomena is the opposition of so many to evangelism. An emotional orgy says one, too much excitement says another. Is it not that evangelism means deeper commitments than we are willing to assume? Who asks for the Holy Spirit asks for a very demanding person. He will have all or He will accept none. Are we afraid of becoming fools for Christ's sake? Milinery and mannerisms, dividing the pulpit, parting the hair in the middle and the name on the side are symptoms of a certain diletantism that has crept into the church and are lame substitutes for a flaming heart. Ministers ought to be honest with themselves, any minister who casts doubts on the gospel he is ordained to proclaim ought in all honor get out of the ministry. Someone suggests a moratorium on preaching; there ought to be a permanent moratorium on some preaching. "What will the world miss if this sermon is not preached" is a keen edge that ought to be put to the throat of every sermon. Here there is no room for failure. "I will do what I can" says one, but we are set to do what we can't, for one works with us who knows no failure. Emerson said, "I like my poems best because I did not write them." Reading a book on the new chemistry, I found this line, "The chemistry of the future will deal more with the flash and flow of the plastics and pure energy than with the mechanistics of matter." Zechariah beat the author to the statement by twenty-five hundred years when he said, "Not by might nor by power but by my spirit saith the Lord."

Let us come to grips with this matter of evangelism: In first Timothy, the sixth chapter, we have this word (Moffatt's translation): "In the presence of God who is the life of all, and of Jesus Christ who testified to the good confession before Pontius Pilate, I charge you to keep your commission free from stain." You have a commission given to no other one. God is opening through you a fresh book of revelation. Do not frustrate His purpose. The lukewarm church of Laodicea lost its commission and became the symbol of the might have been.

Ex-governor Earle said recently, "Not ten per cent of us will be alive in five years." It was an alarming statement but this much is sure: scientists, business men as well as ministers and statesmen are saying with deep conviction that there is no remedy or hope for our war torn world but a return to the teachings of Jesus Christ. Knowledge is not enough, we must catch the beauty of His truth in our souls and make it permanent in holy living. Churches need to be revived. Nearly every person over forty needs to be reconverted. We have lost the sheen, the glow of Christian experience. The down and out needs conversion desperately, but so, too, does the up and out. "To know, is present with me but how to perform that which I know,

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Home: The place where one lives, so says the dictionary. It may be a good place and a good home—especially if a great deal of good living is done there. I had not thought of the definition of home until I was wondering what I should write this letter about this week, and as I realized that next Sunday is Mother's Day I decided to write on home.

I asked myself the question: What is home? I have long since learned that there are a lot of good answers to be found in a dictionary. When I asked myself to define the word home I saw that I was not too clear cut in my own definition. I turned to the dictionary and there it was: The place where one lives! I was quite ready to give the dictionary A-1 for that answer because I knew it was true!

My mind went back to the first home I ever knew—the place where my mother and my father lived. It was the living they did there that made it home. The little country neighborhood all about was small because the roads were only for going short distances. What business did the people of that neighborhood have beyond the country store, the old mill, the little schoolhouse, and the little white church? Were not their neighbors and friends within that small boundary? To be sure I was looking through a little boy's eyes—but my mother read me from a book that knew no bounds, and my father had a way of thanking God who made the world beyond, even as far as sky, and sun, and stars, that made Him seem like a Neighbor and a Friend. They lived there, and their children lived there. It was home.

Since those days—many years ago, although they seem but few—I have called many other places home, because in many other places I have lived. But I shall never be able to go beyond the aspirations and dreams found by those parents in their Book, and in their little white church. The roads they envisioned from there were for going long distances, if we would travel them.

We need homes today in which the parents dream dreams for their sons and daughters based on a sincere faith in God, and an earnest desire for the fellowship of worship at His altar. I know many such homes. I see boys and girls today who will look back on their childhood homes with gratitude to God for those who made their homes with "a heap o' livin'." And mark you it will take a good deal of really good living in our homes to enable the children of our homes to cope with the demands of today and of tomorrow.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

A NATIVE'S RETURN.

Called to Delaware—where I had "been brought up"—by the serious illness of my mother, I had some experiences which warmed my heart, and brought light and cheer to a trip that would otherwise have been drab and sad. I will not do more than list most of them for time and space would fail me to tell about them in detail.

There was for instance, the trip across the Bay and on the train with Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Pitt, members of The Christian Temple and tried and true friends, who had me as their guest both in the Pullman and in the dining car, and with whom I spent several hours of wholesome, Christian fellowship. There was the warm greeting of my brother at the station in Dover, Delaware, and the gracious hospitality and the generous entertainment in the home of his wife's people, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Johnson and their family circle. There was the early morning walk on a glorious Sunday morning, which took me to the grave of my father and my sister, and from thence to the home where I spent most of my years in Dover, Delaware. There was the visit on Sunday afternoon to the former home of my brother-in-law, and my sister, now occupied by their son and daughter-in-law and their baby girl, mother's first great-grandchild. William's parents both died while he was overseas, and he came back to take over the gas station and lunchroom which they managed and where they made a little money and many friends by their courtesy and fine spirit of service. He has a goodly heritage, for they left him a good name, which is rather to be chosen than great riches.

Then there was the afternoon of calling in, and tramping around Cheswold, the little town in which I spent my boyhood days—a visit with my cousin whose husband had been recently killed in an automobile accident; a gab-fest with the Negro watchman at the Pennsy grade crossing, a friend of many years; calls in the homes of other relatives and friends; and a chance reunion with the local Methodist minister, Reverend Charles W. Spry, a schoolmate of mine at the Wilmington Conference Academy away back there in 1906-09. And on Monday morning I had the privilege of visiting for a few minutes the school itself, now Wesley Junior College. A flood of memories came into my heart as I walked through the halls and across the athletic field of that school which made such a great contribution to my life. There were also several other calls in offices on friends, and a visit in the first National Bank where I worked six years, and where the cashier and the head teller now, were my fellow-workers in those years now gone. Even walking along the streets brought greetings and brief visits from many of my old friends. All of these things will add another bright page to my Book of Golden Memories.

There were of course, the visits in mother's room, the satisfaction of knowing that she was comfortably located, well taken care of, and getting along as well as a woman eighty-two years of age can, who has had—and has—all the complications that have struck her down. There was the opportunity to tell her again of how much we appreciated all that she had done for us children and what she had meant to us, and the privilege of offering a brief prayer of thanksgiving and blessing. The simple, sturdy religious faith which has sustained her during the years, is giving her the victory in this hour of need.

There were two experiences, however, which I would like to mention, even at the risk of making this letter too long, for each of them has a distinctive spiritual background, and significance. The first occurred on Saturday night, when I spent the night in a tourist home, which used to be the home of Mr. G. D. Jackson. The thought of that good man, humble, sincere, friendly, warmed my heart and brought tears to my eyes. For as I stood that night in the People's Church years ago, hearing Christ's call, but lacking the power to make the momentous decision, it was this good man, who came to me, and lacking the technical knowledge of personal work, simply laid his friendly hand on my shoulder, and in a stumbling, stammering way said, "How about it, Howard?" That was all, but that was enough, and I went forward and confessed Christ and accepted Him as my Saviour. As I lay there Saturday night I thanked God Gregg Cherry, will deliver the literary address. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, pastor of the college church, will present the Bibles and President Smith will deliver diplomas to the members of the graduating class. The Board of Trustees will reassemble in the President's office at 2:00 in the afternoon for the transaction of business.

The members of the church, the alumni and friends of the College are invited and urged to attend all programs.

SUPPORT FOR THE COLLEGE.

Our churches and Sunday schools are not expected to bear the entire cost of operating our college. This would be entirely too much. The college assumes the major part of its own support. Tuition, fees, and room rent all go to the current expense budget. Income from endowment pays a small share of the current cost of the college. Churches and Sunday schools, 196 in number, are asked to raise a total of only $12,500. Each church has been apportioned its share of the total. As you consider your church's apportionment for the college, I am sure that you will agree that it is a small part in a day like this when everything is so high and money is so hard to get for the college. In the light of these facts won't you and your church set as your goal for the college an amount beyond your apportionment. Determine to go the second mile for the college. Its needs are great. Your added contributions will help wonderfully.

EVANGELISM.

I find not," said Paul. We use high pressure methods in business, in war and in daily life, why not try them in the most crucial of all relationships? God always has to wait for a man. I believe He is waiting now to show the world what He will do with one wholly consecrated man. What hinders any one of us from leading the whitest holiest life that has ever been lived by mortal man on this planet?

We ministers, lame but lovely, limp at our tasks; arduous and difficult to be sure; but the challenge should thrill us like a violin set to grief. Church work is so difficult, there are so many temptations; granted, but why stress temptations downward; there are plenty of them but there are infinitely more temptations upward. We are wooed upward by song and story; our ears are surfeited with appeals; we are seeing to the ends of the earth, our eyes are suffused with beauty, our minds are bombarded with challenging truth. Our very bodies are Christian if our souls are not. We have Christian glands; if we put them to un-Christian uses they will poison us. We have a Christian nervous system; if we put it to un-Christian uses we will become psychopathic. Any one of us could preach ten sermons consecutively on a nervous breakdown and have one. What gets our attention get us. An appeal! One of the great churches in our midst which has written some of the darkest pages of history and is a Dictatorship in every fiber of its being; does exalt Christ, who said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." The Holy Rollers and Jump Shouters are growing in spite of their ludicrous vagaries because of their zeal for evangelism. The most devastating error is one that has truth in it. Education is important; but not all important. Ritualism may help some but ritualism at best is only a crutch. I should like to see the Southern Convention subordinate colleges, religious education, ritualism, to a battle charge of evangelism; a lurching out toward God and His Christ in a trust of enthusiastic evangelism; sounding the gospel bugle in the spirit of the drummer boy who, when asked if he could sound a retreat, answered, "No, sir, but I can beat a battle charge that would wake the dead." Let us marshall our forces, close ranks with eyes front, stragglers and cowards to the rear, forward march! In the name and power of our risen and transcendent Lord, charge the hosts of sin, however deeply entrenched, and help to take this world for God.

The true origin of man's activity and creativeness lies in his unceasing impulse to embody outside himself the divine and spiritual element within himself.—Froebel.

Just as the human body grows and develops through the exercise of its members, so does the church. No member of the church can turn his work over to other members. The eye cannot hear, nor the ear see.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK

With Emphasis on Missions
 MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

RUTH SEABURY AT SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

Dr. Ruth Isabel Seabury of Boston, Mass., called "an internationalist by instinct" and one of the most brilliant speakers in American church circles, will teach the course on "World Evangelism" at the School of Missions, Elon College, June 16-20. This is the theme for the combined home and foreign mission study for 1947-48. She will also be the evening speaker on Wednesday night, June 18, during the School of Missions program. The Southern Convention women are looking forward to this "return engagement" of Miss Seabury, whom they admire greatly and who has never failed to lift them to great heights.

Dr. Seabury, who is Educational Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, the overseas service arm of the Congregational Christian Churches, spends the major part of her time "on the road" filling platform and pulpit engagements, addressing students, leading discussion groups of youth on college campuses, and in interdenominational groups.

Widely traveled, a lover of youth, Dr. Seabury is easily one of America's outstanding Christian women leaders and speakers on Christianity and the program of the church at home and abroad. She has been for several years a member of the National Preaching Mission of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Dynamic, humorous, incisive and courageous in her presentations, Dr. Seabury leaves behind her the reputation of being "one of the people who have made a difference." Her major interest is "just folks" and she never misses a chance to talk with them wherever and whenever she finds them.

Miss Seabury, who is the first woman to receive an honorary degree from Elon College, North Carolina, which conferred upon her a Doctor of Literature during its Golden Anniversary celebration in 1940, is a graduate of Smith College and has made several trips abroad, including an extended world tour during which she visited twenty-seven countries.

In 1938 Dr. Seabury was one of the only forty-nine American and Canadian delegates to the great ecumenical church meeting in India, Along literary lines Miss Seabury specializes in writing books on understanding the world mission of Christianity, her latest being What Kind of a World Do You Want?—a discussion, study and action pamphlet on world order.

An ardent advocate of world peace, Dr. Seabury believes that the foreign missionary is the best emissary of friendliness America has today. They are doing the spade work for the foundation of a just and durable peace, if the Christians at home do not fail them, she believes.

FINE NEW SOCIETY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Johnson's Grove, near Franklin, Va., was organized and had the first meeting in April, 1946. On account of our members being so scattered, we decided to hold our meetings on the third Sunday afternoon before our preaching service. Mrs. Marvin Whitley had charge of the programs, which were very interesting and instructive.

We have so few members and many of them are unable to attend, but we have been able to have a meeting each month. We gave a Thank Offering of $20.00 for the Jacksons in April and $10.00 in November. Four members attended the Conference in Holland. At our December meeting we decided to send our pastor, Rev. Robert M. Kimball, a ham for Christmas.

During the winter months we are meeting in homes. We are hoping to do more this year.

BIRTHDAY AT NEWPORT NEWS.

On Monday, February 10, the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News, Va., observed its ninth anniversary with a banquet held in the Fellowship Hall of the church.

A very interesting program was planned for the evening. It included Mrs. C. L. Pope as toastmistress, the highlights in the history of the organization as presented by Mrs. Hurley J. Skinner, and a solo sung by Mrs. Charles Heath, Jr.

The address of the evening was by Mrs. F. B. Vickers of London, England. Mrs. Vickers is an exchange teacher in our public school system. Her talk was based on the neighborliness of England to the United States. This interesting talk was enjoyed by all.

Group singing was also held. It was truly an evening of food, fellowship and fun.

JOINT BOOK REVIEW.

On Tuesday afternoon, March 18, the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church of Nansemond County, Va., was host to a large gathering of ladies from the missionary societies of Liberty Spring, Berea, and Oakland Christian Churches to hear the home mission study book, The Fine Arts of Using, reviewed by Mrs. Thomas Woodward, Suffolk.

A very inspirational worship service was rendered under the supervision of Mrs. R. O. Luter, spiritual life superintendent of the Bethlehem missionary society. She used as her theme, "The Message of Love." Welcome was extended by Rev. R. E. Brittle. The opening hymn, "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord," was followed with prayer led by Mrs. I. W. Johnson. Others assisting on the program were: Mrs. T. H. Dilday, Mrs. J. E. Harris and Mrs. Roy Mizelle, who gave readings.

Mrs. J. E. Harris introduced Mrs. Woodward, who held everyone's interest from the beginning to the close of her impressive and brilliant performance. She proved her ability as a speaker of importance when she reviewed the foreign study book on Africa one year ago for the Bethlehem society. A gift of appreciation was presented to Mrs. Woodward by the president of Bethlehem Missionary Society, Mrs. T. H. Dilday.

The meeting closed with all singing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," and the benediction by Mrs. Paul Yates.

Mrs. R. E. Brittle, Mrs. A. I. Moore and Mrs. C. W. Joyner received at the door. Everyone enjoyed the fellowship of the churches meeting together and obtaining such a wonderful message.

MRS. HARRY F. SCHADEL,
 Secretary.

HOLLAND STUDIES ABOUT INDIA.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Holland Church is enjoying a period of great interest and activity in the study of both Home and Foreign Missions, under the capable leadership of Mrs. Will B. O'Neill as president and Mrs. J. R. Darden as program chairman.

We have had an extensive study of

EXPERTS ON AFRICAN AFFAIRS
VISIT AMERICA.

Five top-ranking European experts on African affairs have recently arrived in this country to confer with American religious leaders, government officials, and educators, it was announced this week by Dr. Henry Ross, secretary of the Africa Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York. The Foreign Missions Conference represents 123 Protestant mission boards and agencies in this country and Canada.

Described by Dr. Ross as the best informed deputation ever to visit America in regard to economic, social, medical, racial, and spiritual problems of Africa, the group consists of Col. Robert E. Van Goethem of Brussels, Army Chief Protestant chaplains in Belgium and the Belgian Congo; Canon H. Myers Grace of London, secretary of the Conference of Missionary Societies in Great Britain and Ireland; Canon Gerald W. Bloomfield of London, General secretary of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa; the Rev. Joseph Ohrneman of Stockholm, general secretary of the Protestant Council in the Belgian Congo; and the Rev. Handley D. Hooper of London, Africa secretary of the General Missionary Society.

Primary purpose of their visit, according to Dr. Ross, will be to lay the groundwork for a closer working relationship between American and European agencies which have social, cultural, or religious interests on the African continent.

The deputation's itinerary will cover Atlanta and Tuskegee in the South, as well as New York, Boston and Chicago, and other cities in the East and Midwest.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

India as presented by members of our auxiliary, as well as by outside speakers. In January we had Mrs. J. G. Holland of Franklin speak to us on "India Calls." Mrs. Holland had made a thorough study of the topic, "India," in her own society in the Franklin Methodist Church and was most familiar with her subject. She had made a scrapbook of interesting up-to-date happenings in India and displayed a number of pictures culled from magazines depicting the life of the people of India. Mrs. Holland brought with her numerous souvenirs which had been collected by service men and brought back to this country. At the conclusion of this particular meeting Calendar Bags were opened and refreshments were served.

At the next meeting the topic, "India Answers," was presented by one of our own members, Mrs. Hugh V.

White. She told that India answers her own call by her urgent request to our Mission Board for help to educate the illiterate millions of her people. There, too, was brought to us the urgent need for world brotherhood and mutual understanding.

One meeting was devoted to a review of the foreign mission study book, "India at the Threshold," by four of our members, Miss Nelle Dixon Rawles, Mrs. Ann Parker Umphlett, Miss Lois Raby and Mrs. H. V. White. From them we received a vivid picture of the life and times of the Indian people which made a profound impression upon us all.

Three sister churches, Holland Baptist, Somerton Friends Meeting and Holy Neck Christian, joined with our society in a community-wide World Day of Prayer. Our Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. Clyde G. Johnson, was in charge of the program and much credit is due her for a splendid meeting with a large attendance. One of the interesting features of this meeting was the part taken by the young people of the four participating churches.

The members of the Holy Neck Society are to be our guests at a Fellowship Supper in May when we observe Fellowship Day.

Corresponding Secretary.

YOUNG PEOPLE ENTERTAINED.

The Palm Street Missionary Society of Greensboro, N. C., gave a supper at Revolution Apartment House the last Tuesday night in March, inviting the young people of the church as special guests, hoping to interest them in missions. After the supper Mrs. Russel V. Powell reviewed the home study book, "Portrait of a Pilgrim," after a very inspiring devotional program. The way Mrs. Powell presented the book was very interesting, both to young and old.

We hope from this will come an organization of young people for missions. Most of our young people were in attendance at this very interesting meeting. This project appeared worth while to the society, as only a few young people have seemed to be willing to assume any responsibility in missionary work.

If you never break a promise, if you always pay the money you owe exactly on the day it is due, nobody will know but that you are worth a billion. And you will be just as good a risk as a man worth a billion, for all that he could do would be to pay promptly on the due date.—H. Fish.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

This week in our church calendar is known as Christian Family Week. Last Sunday was thought of as Child Health Sunday and this coming Sunday, you will recall, is Mother's Day. All mothers are anxious that their children be healthy both in mind and body. When you grow up and go away to college, or to work, I can tell you when you will miss your mother most. It will be those times when you do get ill! That was the way I found it. No matter how nice my nurses were to me, I got homesick for my mother's nursing.

One of the greatest causes of illness about the home is the ugly accident. You children may all help to avoid them. Don't get into medicine cabinets unless your mother sends you. Then don't open bottles or boxes until you get in her presence. Do keep your toys out of doorways and the traffic lanes of the house. Do watch your little brothers and sisters to keep them away from fire, boiling pots, open wells, guns, and if in the country away from farm animals which could hurt them. This sort of help and keeping out of trouble yourselves will be as fine a present as your mother could ask on Mother's Day.

THE PRETTY BOX.

Mother was busy ironing in the dining room. Brother was out playing. Daddy was cleaning the high pantry shelves for mother. Little Jane was pattering from one room to another trying to find something interesting to do. Her two-year-old feet took her back into the kitchen. There in the garbage pail she spied a pretty round box. That's just like the boxes that ice cream comes in, thought Miss Jane. Taking the box into her hands she hugged it to her little body and pattered through the sun room into brother's bedroom. There she crawled upon brother's low bed and lying on her back, face up, she started working at the lid of the box.

Suddenly the lid came off! Into little Jane's face, eyes, nose and mouth, spilled the burning powder. Jane let out a yell! Mother stuck her head around the door and saw what had happened. In a flash she had Jane to the water spigot and washed the powder off her face and out of her eyes. Little Jane was having a time trying to get her breath. Mother was so frightened that her knees grew weak but she tried to keep little Jane from knowing it. In a few minutes Jane lay white and spent in her mother's arms. Tired out from trying to get her breath. Then her little tummy started swelling up just like a balloon.

What a time! Daddy hurriedly called Jane's doctor. She was out! He called another doctor. Then back to Dr. Walker again and this time she was in. Dr. Walker told Daddy to get some milk and egg white into little Jane, even if he had to hold her nose and pour it down her. Then to bring her with the powder down town to Dr. Walker's office as quickly as possible. Mother flew into her clothes while Daddy poured the milk down Jane. Then the taxi was at the door to carry them down town. Daddy stayed at home to look after brother.

It isn't a very nice story but it is a true one. Mother has been busy day and night for three days now, working with little Jane because of the thrown-away medicine that she got hold of. Her little tummy got easy and then she started coughing from the irritation in her lungs. Just to be on the safe side Dr. Walker had the mother start giving penicillin and nose drops to ward off cold germs.

Little Jane's family is one that will watch out for medicines that can harm from now on! How about your family?

EARLY CHARACTER PATTERNS.

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I was visiting my favorite niece, Mary.

"Something worries me, Auntie," confided the young mother, looking earnestly into my face. "I know pretty well how to feed and clothe Tommy and Barbara, but I want to care for them morally—I want them to be honest, brave, and kind. I feel as if I were neglecting that part of my duty to them. The books I've read don't tell how—"

My niece was interrupted by the arrival of the grocer. The children—Barbara, six, and Tommy, four, and both fine, well-grown youngsters—followed him in by the screen door. As the man placed the parcels on the kitchen table, Mary counted some money from her purse. Evidently there was not enough, for she took two bills from a small drawer.

When the man had gone, Barbara, with surprise in her lovely brown eyes, said, "Mother, you paid the grocer with some of the money from the drawer—the money we were saving for our holidays. Does that mean we can't go and stay at the beach?"

"No, dear, but we shall have to wait until we can save some more—the grocer had to be paid first, of course. Run along now; Auntie and I want to talk."

When the screen door closed behind the child, Mary asked, "What were we talking about, Auntie?"

"You wanted to know how to teach your children to be—"

Again there was an interruption. Both youngsters burst in exclaiming, "Mother!—Henry, the pedlar, has come!" There at the door stood an old man in a neat but shabby and much-mended gray suit. He entered when invited, opened up a worn, black suitcase on the table and smilingly displayed his wares, the children pressing near.

"I'd like some white thread and—"

"Mother, you bought thread yesterday!" Tommy broke in.

"Hush! I can use more," she answered. Then to Henry, "Let me have some moth balls, brown shoelaces, assorted needles, and two cards of those pretty glass buttons." Mary chose from the crowded pack. "Now, sit down, Henry; it won't take a moment to heat some coffee, and there's a piece of lemon pie in the refrigerator."

"Thanks—sounds pretty good!" His pale face glowed, tire muscles seemed to relax.

No one noticed that the children had left until they reappeared—the girl with a red apple and the boy with a yellow pear. "May we give these to him?" Barbara asked, and in answer she received a smiling nod.

"Oh, those will be fine to eat on the way home; thank you." The old man pocketed the fruit.

When he had gone, Mary sat down once more. "Dear me, we've had no talk at all, Auntie. I thought perhaps you could help me. You see, I want my children to grow up to be really worth-while adults, and I don't know how to teach them."

"Well, my dear you've given them two splendid lessons in the half-hour I've been here."

"But I couldn't have! We've had nothing but interruptions. What have I taught them?"

"First, that bills must be paid be—"

LIVINGSTON'S LAST JOURNEY. Sir Reginald Coupland. The Macmillan Co. $3.

Students and admirers of David Livingstone will welcome this another volume on the famous missionary and explorer. This publication should give fresh impetus to the current interest in missions. With the aid of hitherto unpublished material, the author brings out the steady exhaustion of Livingstone's strength, and his heroic struggle against misfortune and suffering. Letters and excerpts from Livingstone's journal reveal his persistent opposition to the notorious slave trade and his posthumous influence in helping to heal the "open sore" of the world. Descriptions of the jungle, the cataracts, the long treks by land and water, the interminable rain, give vividness to the narrative. Numerous maps chart the missionary journey and there are photographs of both Livingstone and Stanley. Second only in interest to Livingstone, is the young Welsh-American reporter, Stanley who "found" him. With the aid of new evidence, the controversial report of Stanley is carefully evaluated. The author is the Beit Professor of Colonial History in the University of Oxford.

Although this is an account of Livingstone's "Last Journey," many readers would appreciate even a brief treatment of his earlier preparation and activities. The book begins abruptly and presupposes a general knowledge of the great missionary which many people who should read this book do not have. Considerable space is given to such a treatment of Stanley's background. There are a number of unanswered questions. What finally became of Stanley, Kirk, Chuma and Susi? The author evaluates at great length the Stanley vs. Kirk controversy, deals satisfactorily with Livingstone's influence on the slave trade, but fails to appraise the true scientific value of his explorations. In this respect, was he misguided? Were his efforts in vain, his remarkable energy wasted?

But no one can read this book without a fresh admiration for Livingstone. Here is hero-worship at its best. His faults, as well as his virtues, are clearly delineated. Livingstone, pioneer missionary and Protestant saint, is given a new and deserved hold on the imagination of a credulous world.

AWARDS FOR 1946 RURAL LIFE SERMONS.

THREE DENOMINATIONS REPRESENTED AMONG WINNERS.

Interesting and constructive sermons were submitted by pastors of rural churches in the first annual Rural Life Sermon contest inaugurated in 1946 by the Virginia Council of Churches. Three ministers of three different Protestant denominations received the winning awards, while some twenty pastors submitted sermons for judging.

Murray L. Wagner, pastor of the Pleasant Valley Church of the Brethren at Weyers Cave won the first place in the contest. Basing his sermon on Psalm 84:4-8, the subject of discourse was "Watchers of the Springs."

The Rev. R. L. Gregory of the Baptist Church at Franklin won the second award. His subject was "The Good Earth," based on the scriptures found in Gen. 1:27-28 and Ec. 5:9.

MURRAY WAGNER, B.D.

The third award was presented to Rev. A. B. Berry, Jr., of a Methodist charge in Charles City County. He chose I Cor. 3:1-9 as his scripture for the subject "Back to the Soil."

The awards were $25, $15 and $10 each, respectively, for the first three best sermons.

The rural life sermon contest was inaugurated with the main objective of improving the rural church program by encouraging better sermons by ministers in charge of rural parishes. The plan is to encourage better preaching by awarding prizes for the best sermons submitted to the contest committee each year. Eventually these sermons will be published in a volume to be known as "Virginia Rural Life Sermons."

It is felt that too few ministers knew about this new program, and with the second year contest beginning now it is hoped preachers in Virginia will plan to participate in the program by submitting sermons on rural subjects by November 15, when the contest closes. All ministers are eligible, whether the charge is in the city or in a rural area, but the subject must be of rural interest.

Virginia ministers, only, are eligible to enter the contest.

DEVOTIONAL AIDS FOR THE SICK.

The Commission on Religion and Health of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America announced today the publication of three pamphlets for devotional and inspirational use, especially intended for the sick and for hospital use. Pastors are expected to circulate them to patients as they make hospital calls, said the Rev. Seward Hiltner, Executive Secretary of the Commission.

"These are the first devotional materials for the sick published by the Federal Council," said Mr. Hiltner, "and they are expected to be widely used because each of the three pamphlets has been prepared by a man with long and effective experience in ministry to persons going through the crises of illness."

God and Health is by Russell L. Dicks, Chaplain of Wesley Memorial Hospital in Chicago. In popular language it sets forth the facts about "the wisdom of the body," the capacity of the human organism to right itself after the squalls of illness. Writes Mr. Dicks, "The problem of health and of regaining health when we are sick is basically the problem of establishing and maintaining a proper relationship with God—that God who has created us and who sustains us in the very cells and structure of our body, even when our thoughts are far from him." The pamphlet is designed to stimulate faith and confidence at those times in life when most needed.

Strength in Our Sickness is by Everett B. Leshner, now a Veterans Hospital chaplain. It contains devotional meditations and prayers especially appropriate for us in the crisis experiences of sickness. In his introduction the author states, "Thoughts and attitudes affect health. Disturbing thoughts consume energies which should be used in dealing with illness. They weaken us, in many instances delay recovery. In contrast, thoughts and attitudes which involve strength, courage, and calm help to speed our recovery." The booklet contains meditations and prayers designed to foster strength, courage and calm in the face of pain and illness.

A Road to Recovery is a new and revised edition for general use of the pamphlet originally prepared during the war for circulation in Army and Navy hospitals, in which form it was part of the hospital kit used by many Protestant chaplains. The essentials have been retained in the revised edition, but there has been expansion and improvement for civilian readers. The author, who was a Navy chaplain

THE STRUGGLE FOR SOCIAL JUSTICE.

LESSON VII—MAY 18, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live.—Amos 5:14.

LESSON: Amos.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Jas. 2:14-26.

The Times.

Amos lived and prophesied in the eighth century B. C. Jereboam II was king and had had a long and in many ways a successful reign, indeed a brilliant reign. He was very successful in his military exploits, and won back much of the land that the nation had lost to Syria. He developed the national resources as well as recovering the national borders, and expanded foreign trade. Israel was respected and feared by her enemies, and there were abundant evidences of wealth and prosperity.

The Man.

Amos was a herdsman, and a dresser of sycamore trees. He was a countryman, living apart from the cities, stern, rugged, austere, disciplined, and independent. He did his own thinking and formed his own judgments. He saw both the things that are seen and the things that are unseen. He was a keen observer and would have made a first-rate commentator for the modern radio. He had no technical training as a minister, he himself says that he was neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. But he was a prophet, one of the great prophets, although his works are grouped with what we call the "Minor Prophets." He was the first of the writing prophets. His character and his message were his credentials. He was fearless, rugged, and honest. God had spoken to him, and through him, God spoke to the people of his day. And to our day. For stripped of the temporal and the local, his message deals with universal and abiding principles.

The Message.

Amos adopts a clever scheme to get a hearing. Appearing at Bethel, the center of formal worship, in the garb of a countryman, he began his sermon by arranging and indicting the neighboring nations, most of them enemies of Israel, for their sins and social shortcomings. In turn he blasted Damascus, Gaza, Tyre, Edom, Ammon, Moab, Judah—starting at the most distant nation and gradually coming closer home, denouncing last Judah. It was all very good while it lasted and the folks at Bethel "ate it up." Like folks today, they liked to hear a preacher "burn up" the other fellow, to "turn on the heat" against their enemies. But suddenly and to them, without warning, he trained his guns on Israel, and predicted for them the same tragic fate that had overtaken their neighboring nations. For God is no respecter of nations, any more than he is of individuals. And his judgment would fall upon Israel even as it had fallen on the other nations that had sinned against God and against God's children.

The man's message was one of condemnation and judgment. The times were out of joint. For although the nation was at peace and in prosperity, although outwardly all appeared to be well, the nation was rotten at the heart. Social injustice was rampant and militant. Judges accepted bribes unashamed. The poor man could not get a fair trial. Nor could he get a living wage. Many of the poorer classes were hopelessly and helplessly in debt to the money lenders. Luxury abounded against the background of deep need and even stark poverty. Economically and socially things were bad.

And religiously they were even worse. For the moral and social decadence was camouflaged by elaborate rituals and imposing sacrifices. Then as now there was the temptation to divorce religion from ethics, to interpret goodness in terms of forms and ceremonies, to make religion a thing of the head instead of a condition of the heart, to substitute creed for character. Furthermore God had sent his judgments again and again upon the sinful nation, and yet it had not repented or amended its ways. The people talked about "the Day of the Lord," and looked forward to it with keen delight, for they thought it meant the judgment of Jehovah against the enemies of Israel. This stern prophet asserted that there would be "a Day of the Lord" but he boldly stated that it would be a day of judgment for Israel. What mattered all their elaborate rituals and imposing burnt offerings and sacrifices? There was no saving merit in them, nor did they offer immunity from the coming doom,

Only one thing would avail—there must be a change of heart. Justice was to roll down as the waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream. The people were to seek good, and not evil; they were to repent and to change their ways. They were to turn again to Jehovah—only thus could they live and could the nation be spared.

The Moral.

The message of this man of God of the long ago is needed today. There is too marked inequality in the distribution of wealth; too much class privilege; too much social injustice; too much materialism; too much formality; too much lack of compassion with the needy people of the world; too little attention to the judgments of God upon the nations for their sins. The times are out of joint and an Amos is needed to declare again in courageous and uncompromising fashion, God's demands for repentance, and for social justice and for true and vital personal religion.

again for Mr. G. D. Jackson, and took courage.

Then on Sunday morning I attended the service of worship in the People's Church. It was in that church on a May morning in 1915 that Dr. A. W. Lightbourne, that man of God and prince of preachers laid his hands on "Jim" Lightbourne, his son, and me—we were both "his boys"—and ordained us to the gospel ministry. It was in that church, too, that my father one Sunday morning, all unexpectedly rose up and went forward—it was a regular service of worship—and accepted Christ. It was in that church that I preached my first sermon. The sanctuary has been remodeled and many changes have been made, but they are incidental to the basic facts of my spiritual heritage in that church. And again my heart was warmed and a lump came into my throat as I sat there and worshipped.

It was a "service of worship," carefully planned, simply presented, spiritually helpful. There was form but not formality, dignity but not stiffness, simplicity and power in it. The sermon by Reverend W. L. Edge was carefully and clearly thought out, well prepared, and effectively delivered. Those of us who were present could well say, "Surely this is the house of God, this is the gate of heaven." And again I thanked God and took courage.

WATCHERS OF THE SPRINGS.*

(PSALM 84:4-8.)

By MURRAY L. WAGNER,
Weyers Cave, Va.

Many years ago one of our towns had voted to improve its water system. Mains were laid to a network of lovely mountain springs whose pure waters flowed by gravity into the homes of the nearby town. After a season the housewives began to complain that the water was dirty; bits of leaves and other foreign matter found the way into the line.

The town fathers chose a man who lived near the springs and assigned him the task of keeping the springs clean of leaves and debris and to keep the lines open. The Watcher was a quiet, unassuming man, who seldom went to the town, but attended strictly to his assigned task and his own personal affairs.

Few people had ever met the Watcher of the Spring. He was just a shadowy figure who moved in the background and whose name was never heard by the townspeople save as they noted that name on the annual budget. No one paid special heed to the man until the depression came and with it the demand for a decrease in expenditures. The fathers decided to "lay off" this Watcher of the Spring in order to reduce the expenses.

Not long after this the mothers again entered their protest; the water was polluted and there were those who would trace the mounting illness to this cause. It was a poor economy—to reduce the payroll by laying off the Watchman and in consequence hazard the health of the community.

The Watchman was hastily sought out and returned to his old task. It was but a brief period until the public was refreshed by the pure, clean waters and knew well that "The Watcher is back at the Springs again!"

The Eighty-fourth Psalm has another picture of the Watchers of the Springs. A quiet, unassuming man, without fanfare or heroic gesture, is passing through the Valley of Weeping and converting it into a Place of Springs! This man growing ever stronger and is rendering an ever more essential service to his community as he makes his way up the Hill of the Lord that he might appear before his God.

Both of these portraits are those of the Christian Farmer.

"His strength is in God" and in "his heart are the highways to Zion." For, indeed, this world is a Vale of Tears—a Valley of Weeping—and this man rises as do few others to meet the hour's demands. Watching by the Springs he beholds the hunger and the cold, the thirst and misery of the world, and leaps to the need.

He passes through the Valley of Weeping—an angel of mercy in patched denim.

I. The Christian Farmer Watches by the Springs of Physical Life.

Every Christian farmer recognizes the soil as his special trust; to him it is holy ground and he must guard it as the source of all of man's physical needs. What have we, he asks, for our bodies, save that which comes from the soil? Food, clothing, fuel, even the air and water as well as materia medica come from the good earth. Who else is in such a position to guard this Spring?

One of America's great heroes and one of her early farmers, Patrick Henry, said, "He is the greatest patriot who stops the most gullies." From the time that God set man in the Garden to be His special assistant the farmer has been God's chosen Guardian and Watcher of this Spring which now is so vital to the world's children passing through the Valley of Weeping.

A cry of hunger comes from the throat of the world's suffering and the Christian farmer leaps to his plow with a prayer; naked groan in their misery and this man answers with longer hours in the sheepfold, the cotton and the flax; the sick in the anguish and fever of their illness may know that the Springs of Health are being guarded by the men of the soil and food is being placed in the hand of the physician at his prescription. This Watcher believes life's greatest joy will be to hear the Christ say, "I was in hunger and ye fed Me; naked and ye clothed me, sick and ye ministered unto me . . ."

The fulness of nature is his to direct. He moves quietly but joyously about his chosen and holy task. There is no fanfare as he mounts his tractor at daybreak and there is no idle chatter about wages and hours and overtime and strikes as he eats his supper by lamplight. His business is to change the world's tears into laughter, that the Valley of Weeping may become a Place of Springs. It is a Divine assignment and the man who faithfully accepts it, ministering "unto even these least" has the approval of the Christ.

Watching by the Springs the farmer sees his responsibility before God and Man. He holds within his grasp the power to make the world suffer or to make it rejoice. Even though God gives the whole earth sunshine and rain; heat and frost in perfect balance; and even though the Divine Hand withhold no good thing, if this Watcher fail his God the Place of Springs may become the Valley of Weeping.

I. The Christian Farmer Stands Watch at the Spring of Social Life.

Here on the farm is the spring of American leadership. Anyone who has even a slight acquaintance with the American scene must be impressed by the preponderance of the rural background in our leadership. Furthermore, America never apologizes for its pioneer stock; rather she boasts that here we pay high compliment to our chief executive when we speak of him as having been "the Missouri ploughboy." Here, we say, is an evidence of our democracy at work. And down deep in the most urban soul among us there is the assurance that while the Christian Farmer stands with bare arm and clear eye watching over our heritage we shall have a leadership unexcelled on this earth.

America's social life depends ever more upon its rural springs. With the birth rate in our cities falling, and in some instances dropping below the death rate, it becomes more apparent that our social springs are in the forested hills, the pastured plains and the tilled valleys of our land.

Here the farm family holds forth, diligently watching to keep the springs pure—and knowing that the task begins at his own spring, his own farm. Their labors unheralded and unacclaimed, they meet the temptations imposed upon them by the ever encroaching urban life into their once secluded grove. Mother and dad know that their responsibilities lie here and they know that the Church, the Nation and the Future depend heavily upon their devotion to their tasks. From their fireside will come the automobile mechanics, the doctors, the dentists, the ministers, the housewives, the postman, the legis-

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Today, May 2, is a beautiful day. It is clear and cool enough to be comfortable. The beautiful Spring shower of yesterday made vegetation take on new life, and it looks fresh and green after several weeks of dry weather. We have often heard it said that the leaves on the trees will get full grown by May 10. Several weeks ago, when the weather was so cold, the trees did not bud until late and we had our doubts as to whether this old statement would come true this year. But at this writing we believe they will. The weather had continued so cold this Spring that garden vegetables have been retarded in growth and will be late.

Within the next ten days we will have twenty-eight acres of alfalfa to cut and fifteen acres of oats for hay. We always feel more at ease in the fall of the year when we have plenty of hay to carry stock through the winter. Our oat and wheat crops look very promising at this season of the year.

The repair work on the buildings is still making progress. The painters should finish painting in the next week or ten days. The carpenters have several days' work to do as soon as the brick mason finishes the brick work. The concrete man is pouring a new floor in one of the back porches today. When this porch is finished it will be a first-class job in every way, and ought to last for the next forty years. When all the work is finished, which will be within the next few weeks, the Congregational-Christian denomination will then have one of the nicest and most up-to-date small orphanage plants in North Carolina. We then want you to visit the orphanage and see what the church has here to render service to these little children in our care. When we can get people to visit the Christian Orphanage and the little tots gather around them, they have a different feeling toward the work here. They become more interested. It has cost us a lot of money to make the necessary repairs which would have been made several years ago, had we been able to get materials and the workmen to do the work.

I am wondering if we don't have many churches and individuals who would like to send us contributions to help bear this extra expense. Some have already contributed, and we know you want to have a part, too.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

WATCHERS OF THE SPRINGS.

lators, the bus drivers—the men and women who make America.

The Christian Farmer needs men and women of other professions to stand with him and his wife as they watch the Springs. He rejoices in the arrival of a new teacher, a country banker, a groceryman, a minister, a dentist—anyone who will appreciate the call and give ear to it. In rural areas too often there have been few professional people standing by the farmer. Shall the noble callings of medicine and pulpit, legal bar and classroom fail to cooperate in changing the destiny of the nation? Dare they refuse to assume their rightful place beside those who through the years have in so large a measure converted the tears of the world into the fountains of life?

III. Ever Watching, the Farmer
Stands by the Spiritual Springs of America.

"Blessed are they who dwell in Thy House . . . in whose heart are the highways to Zion." There are many of our city folk, thank God!—of whom these lines may be written, but for the actual Watchers of the Springs you will go to the country. The rural church may be as the cynics have it, with a wheezy old organ, a nasal toned minister, a shredded pulpit Bible, a poorly trained teaching staff—but there is something the cynic has not seen. He was busy snooping under unpainted pews and curled up, torn carpets. He didn't look under the shirt of the man in the pulpit, nor beneath that of the man in the pew. Had he done so he would have come back to his city apartment with a different kind of story. He would have told of simple hearted folk whose desires are set upon eternal things, not on fine shirts and big organs—proper as those things may be. He would have told of people whose great joy is to change the tears of many unto joy. How they knew from experience the profit and the values of that statement of the Railsplitter, "When I am gone I'd like to have it said of me that I plucked a thorn and planted a rose where I thought a rose would grow." He, too, was a Watcher.

About seventy-five per cent of the leadership of America's churches are from the rural areas. Here, then, at the source—right at the spring—we must take heed that the Springs are kept pure, and unnamed millions of us whose lives are in the soil must stand guard at the spiritual springs of America. We may, if we wish, have in our hearts the highways to Zion.

One cannot walk far on this road with the Watchers without being made aware of the seriousness with which he takes his assignment. On every side of this Highway to Zion the road is flanked by "The Lord's Acres," yielding abundantly for the Cause of Christ; pastures are literally dotted with heifers raised for the relief of hungry in many parts of the world—"The cattle on a thousand hills are His;" carloads of wheat; tons of rice; truckloads of clothing; kettles of soap; cases of home raised foods—all being sent to those who are in the Valley of Weeping. American Christian Farmers are going, with families, "from strength to strength," every one of them appearing before God.

To be a comrade with these Watchers is at once an opportunity and a responsibility. It is America's hope and it is for the benefit of the whole world that gather America will fulfill the Law of Christ even "unto these least, My brethren."

Christian Farmer, lead us then, that we may share with you the joy which is reserved for those who, "Passing through the Valley of Weeping make it a Place of Springs."

The Duke Divinity School will hold two summer sessions beginning June 12th.

churches—Union, Liberty, Lebanon, and Hebron—and of approximately nine hundred members. In the communities where each of these churches is located, the people of the local congregations visit each other's church for its worship service. As a result, the pastor of the Congregational Christian Church in the community—as do the other pastors—contacts a large number of his people as well as those of other denominations. Coming from all of these people are words of highest tribute and praise for the noble service rendered by Dr. and Mrs. Newman. I may conclude, and with hearty personal affirmation, that Dr. and Mrs. Newman fill a role which is peculiar to them; a role which can not be duplicated by another, though the search be long and persistent; a role which is wholly in and of itself, and is of inestimable value for the building of a Christian world. This role, or place of distinction, is above the power of words to describe it. You have to know this lovely couple to realize fully what is meant. Thus, being without a like or equal, a definition of unique, the latter takes on a fresh and glowing coat as its meaning is descriptive in a picturesque fashion of our "friends of the people," Dr. and Mrs. C. E. Newman.

The church will always be grateful to them for filling the unique capacity in the hearts of the people. May the blessings of the Holy Father be with them and their family.

SPRING CLEANING.

Spring weather brings with it beehive activity in almost every home as housewives prepare for summer. In-to storage go winter clothes and blankets and out come light weight garments. For a brief airing from closets and trunks are brought all manner of unused clothing, blankets, drapes, keepsakes. And back they go, merely because no one has thought of a better place for them.

But there is a better place for them. The war, which has blasted a trail of suffering and need across Europe and Asia has brought a use for every spare garment, every extra pair of shoes, every unused blanket America can give. Throughout the world, millions of weary people are coming through this winter with nothing more than rags for clothing. They cannot buy new things because there is almost nothing to buy and what there is is sky-high in price. Shoes for a child cost $20 in Poland. In Greece, a common workshirt costs $9. With food prices high and wages under $2 a day, no man with a family can afford new shoes, even if he and his children are barefooted.

But where in the busy schedule of a housewife to find time to hunt up a box, to find string, wrapping paper and labels for shipping extra clothing to the Church World Service Center at New Windsor, Maryland? Where to find time for packing? The solution to that problem is already found in the clothing collection bag now available from Promotion Office at the Center. This sturdy bag of closely woven cloth holds from 30 to 50 pounds of clothing, bedding and shoes. The Center's address is stenciled on the outside for easy shipping. With the bag hung in a convenient closet, a minute or two a day takes care of all the packing required. When it is full, the top is pulled shut, tied tight and the bag sent back to New Windsor. There is no fuss, no time-consuming packing. Every Christian home should have one, not only this spring, but all the year round, as long as men, women and children overseas are in need.

fore pleasures can be indulged in; second, how to be kind and thoughtful. Your two will never be insensible to another's need. Already they have learned how to treat a poor, tired old pedlar at the door."

"But, Aunt, I never thought—"

"No, many parents don't realize that the first requisite for teaching right living is so simple—just doing the right things oneself day by day. Nothing is more important. The attitudes of mind expressed by parents are most often the ones that will become the patterns for the children's forming characters. Simple, isn't it? But all who would be teachers should watch out also for their own faults for these, too, may become patterns for the next generation. Our own daily living is the most effective influence in character development that we can offer. Yet, I would not have you think, Mary, that this is all that parents should do. In case you can't get a chance to go to the library yourself, ask your husband to go. The librarian will assist him to choose helpful books. Then both of you should study them—together."

THE CHRISTIAN HOME.

By REV. PAUL R. REYNOLDS.

Social advances have mainly been nurtured in the "trying ground" of the home. What happens for good or ill in the growth of personality depends more on home life than anything else. Family life is at present subject to varied and terrific strains. Homes are in trouble. Every effort the church can make to undergird and enrich family life is applied at one of the points of greatest possible returns. Churches should help with premarital and family counselling; family festivals, proper celebration of Family Week; study classes on various phases of family life; the promotion of family worship; the organization of young adult groups and couples' clubs; the strengthening of ties between church and home.

The Need of the Hour

By FREDERICK L. FAGLEY

Chairman, Committee on the Ministry

"Give of thy sons to bear the message of glorious;
Give of thy wealth to spread them on their way;
Pour out thy soul for them in prayer victorious;
And all those spendest, Jesus will repay."

I think we all are beginning to realize that the Christian religion has had perhaps its greatest defeat since the days of the Goths and Vandals. But we are upheld by the knowledge that in days of seeming defeat religion renews itself in strength and depth and outreach.

We have always to remember that in the church the eternal battle between God and selfishness is fought and that the outcome of this battle is seen in the life of nations. The single truth is that mankind has not grown spiritually in traste to the growth we have made in science and industry. We are not big enough in heart and mind to carry the burdens of these days. It is in the church that the hope of the races of men is centered.

Business men are scared; scientists are full of fear; statesmen are confused, and frightened; school men are anxious, and mankind gropes for light and leading. Whence shall come the lead for these days but from the church of the living God?

But God's spirit is in the world. It is not God's will that men lose their way, that women suffer and little children cry for food. The need of the world is for men—great-hearted men of vision. Whence comes this visions but through the church? It is our bounden duty to build our churches by raising up more and better preachers of the eternal gospel, that will change lives, preachers who can be and do as God gives them voice and strength. We must face this task continually with all its implications, for the only security for the world lies in the spirit of man. The church must build up the everlasting strength of an awakened social conscience to oppose the ever-shifting ethics of our floundering civilization.

NEWS AND VIEWS

WANTED: SUBSCRIPTIONS.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN serves itself best by serving other causes and not by calling attention to itself. Like the minister himself, it should exalt Christ and the Church. The same rules apply to the publication and the prophets: "He that would save his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find. . . . Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your father in heaven."

With reasonable humility, THE CHRISTIAN SUN is endeavoring to do just this. Our plea during CHRISTIAN SUN Week does not monopolize space in this issue. The call, the conditions and the contributions of the Christian ministry are given pre-eminence.

Now it may be stated with a reasonable degree of assurance that we would have more men in the ministry if THE CHRISTIAN SUN had gone into more homes. We are missing many homes which we should reach through the printed page.

We suggest that the younger members of the family be given the opportunity of reading this issue and that the current emphases may be accentuated by wholesome discussion or table talk. Please take this issue to church Sunday and give it to a non-subscriber. The ministers have been asked to solicit subscriptions. It is hoped that these efforts will not terminate with the Sunday service, since it is not likely that all members will attend the Sunday services. Greetings to subscribers old and new, and thanks to all who assist in this campaign for an enlarged circulation.

The Christian Sun Wants 1,000 New Subscribers

THE CHRISTIAN SUN SUBSCRIBERS
WHO ARE THEY AND WHAT ARE THEY DOING?

It may be accurately assumed that the ministers and church members who read "The Christian Sun" regularly are the persons largely responsible for the ongoing of the work of our churches. They are informed as to the Church—its successes, its failures, and the hopes for the future. The purpose of The Sun is to inform and inspire. One certain way to improve the quality of the work of the Church is to put The Sun into the hands of more of our church members.

The month of May has been designated "Christian Sun Month." Our goal is 1,000 new subscribers. This goal ought to be easy to reach. It means that if in each of our churches we can obtain one new subscriber for each 25 members, our goal will be reached. This is an appeal to subscribers—Pastors, Laymen, and Women—"each to get one" new subscriber during the month of May.

As a subscriber to The Christian Sun won't you get one new subscription? You can help extend the influence of The Sun and its Christian messages by enlisting another reader. Please detach the blank below and insert the name of a new subscriber on it and mail with $2.00 to The Christian Sun, Elon College, North Carolina.

THE WRITTEN and the SPOKEN WORD.

"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of prophecy." This beatitude from the Revelation of St. John places the written and spoken word in appropriate proximity. This essential proximity should be maintained in the home and the church. Christian character is nurtured properly only when there is the proper balance between reading of the Bible and religious literature. Perhaps St. James would agree to this exhortation: "Be ye readers of the word, and not hearers only." Blessed is that child or adult who has a balanced diet of religious reading and hearing. What is the ratio in your home? Do your children read this publication regularly? It is altogether likely that our forthcoming ministers will arise out of homes where the proper spiritual equilibrium is maintained. There is therefore no conflict in our dual emphases on additional subscription, and ministers. They are complementary and supplementary.

MEN for the MINISTRY.

"The Lord will provide" has been an easy alibi for those who would evade all responsibility for recruiting ministers. Now there is no disposition to usurp the work of the Holy Spirit, but there should be a willingness on our part to cooperate with the Holy Spirit in this as in other areas. We must use legitimate aids in recruiting ministers just as we do in recruiting members. The trumpet must give forth no uncertain sound. This task is made increasingly imperative by the attractive and compelling solicitation maintained by the representatives of other vocations. The children of light should be as wise as the children of darkness. Realizing that the fate of the church rests so largely in the hands of the ministry that its future course will be measurably determined by the caliber of the men who enter the ministry, that the giving of our best to God involves our sons as well as our shekles, we must seek studiously and tactfully, in season and out of season, by precept and example to provide suitable men for the ministry.

$2.00.

It is easy to spend $2.00 these days. We hear it said again and again that money does not go very far now. A dinner, an evening's entertainment, an item in the store, a pleasure trip, and your crisp two dollar bill is gone. In so many instances the value perishes with the spending, or, at best, is short lived.

There is one very easy way to stretch $2.00 over twelve months. A subscription does just this. A group of people begin working immediately for you. They preach, teach, report, inform, illustrate for a period of fifty weeks. Give a subscription to a friend and this same group of workers become your emissaries; educating, evangelizing, exhorting, exhorting, encouraging, enlightening, expounding and entertaining. Distance is no barrier to the outreach of your $2.00. Send it to a relative or friend at a distance. Invest $2.00 in a prodigal son! Cement the home ties and church ties. Here is stewardship at its best. Invest! Subscribe! Honestly, how or where could you spend $2.00 to a better advantage?

EASTER to PENTECOST.

The New Testament tells of two significant periods of forty days in the life of Jesus, the first is the forty-day period of his temptation during which he established the spiritual orientation of Saviorhood. The second period is that between his resurrection and ascension in which he made himself known to his disciples as the risen Christ. As Luke tells us in the prologue to the Book of Acts, "He showed himself (to them) alive after his passion by many proofs, appearing to them by the space of forty days, and speaking to them the things of the Kingdom of God." Since we are now in that forty-day period, let us meditate on the significance of these momentous days and single out those experiences which have abiding value for us today.

Foremost among those experiences was the bracing realization of the reality of the living Christ. In ways that were adequate and resolved, their faith was re-enforced and galvanized. The witness of the Christian centuries has validated their faith and ours.

Other pertinent emphases include the forgiveness of sins, the bequest of peace, the heart-warming and Scripture-revealing Presence, the unity and community of believers, a spirit-filled ministry and constituency, a growing church and an ecumenical outreach. These experiences are the birthright of every church, but they are forfeited by many in the post Easter slump. Easter should mark the real beginning and not the end of our concerted missionary efforts. To allow our zeal to flag now and our missionary giving to halt is to prove truant to the cause which we espouse, it is to be totally out of step with all that transpired during that pregnant space of time.

On the day of Pentecost the smouldering fire of faith burst into incandescent flame. Mysterious? Yes and no. While "The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof, but knoweth not from when it cometh and whence it goeth; so is everyone that is born of the spirit;" it is nevertheless true that the laws of cause and effect operate in the spiritual world. Pentecost was made possible by those who had learned to "wait on the Lord." And it is still true: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint."

We marvel at the record of three thousand conversions at Pentecost. Obviously the unconverted, the non-churched were there. Precisely, and it is just here that we eliminate all possibility of a recurring Pentecost. We cannot convert the absentees; but the same Master who promised the outpouring of the Holy Spirit commanded his followers to "Go out into the bi-ways and hedges and compel them to come in." We are using the compelling power of influence for many purposes today, but there is no concerted effort to bring the indifferent and apostate under the influence of the gospel ministry. Wherever and whenever the members of a church are "in one place with one accord," great preaching and transforming influences ensue.

Fearless and fervent preaching was heard by those who awaited and witnessed Pentecost. Those who heard St. Peter realized that repentance was in order to forgiveness, and forgiveness in order to power. Among other things, Peter declared: "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ." Lord, or Master, indicates the ascription of authority or power. "He will be Lord of all, or he will not be Lord at all." Like St. Peter, we must seek to establish the Lordship of Christ in our own generation. Horace Bushnell, the noted Congregational minister of the last generation, tried to do just that. His book is out of print, but here is his superb summary of the character of Jesus. It is unexcelled.

"We have now sketched some of the principal distinctions of the superhuman character of Jesus. We have seen him unfolding as a flower, from the germ of a perfect youth: growing up to enter into great scenes and have his part in great trials; harmonious in all with himself and truth, a miracle of celestial beauty. He is a Lamb in innocence, a God in dignity; revealing an impenitent but faultless piety, such as no mortal ever attempted, such as to the highest of mortals, is inherently impossible. He advances the most extravagant pretensions, without any show of conceit, or even seeming fault of modesty. He suffers without affection of composure and without restraint of pride; suffers as no mortal sensibility can, and where, to mortal view there was no reason for pain at all; giving us not only an example of gentleness and patience in all the small trials of life, but revealing the depths even of the passive virtues of God, in his agony and patience of his suffering love. He undertakes also a plan, universal in extent, perpetual in time; viz., to unite all nations in a kingdom of righteousness under God; laying his foundation in the heart of the poor, as no great teacher had ever done before, and yet without creating ever a faction, or stirring one partisan feeling in his followers. In teachings he is perfectly original, distinct from his age and from all ages; never warped by the expectation of his friends; always in balance of truth, swayed by no excuses, running to no oppositions or extremes; clear of all superstition, and equally clear of all liberalism; presenting the highest doctrines in the lowest and simplest forms; establishing a pure, universal morality, never before established; and with all his intense devotion to the truth, never anxious perceptibly, for the success of his doctrine. Finally, to sum up all in one, he grows more great and wise, and sacred, the more he is known—needs, in fact, to be known, to have his perfection seen. And this, we say, is Jesus, the Christ; manifestly, not human, not of our world—some being who has burst into it, and is not of it. Call him for the present, that 'Holy Thing,' and say, 'By this we believe that thou camest from God.'"

OUR CHURCH NEEDS MORE MINISTERS.

The churches of the Southern Convention should face the fact that there is an acute need for more pastors. Some of our able ministers who served in the armed forces have not returned to the pastorate. Preachers grow old just as other people do. Their health fails; and the exacting demands of pastoral duties take their toll of a minister's strength. The chief cause of the present shortage of ministers is that not enough of our young men are entering the ministry as their life work.

At the present time only a few of our churches are without some pastoral care. But many of them have only a small fraction of the minister's time. Experience has proven that the progress of a church is in direct proportion to the pastoral service which it receives. There are a number of churches in the Southern Convention, whose pastor serves two or three other churches, which could support a full-time pastor. To employ a pastor to give his entire time to the church that can afford it, would mean that other churches would have to go pastorless.

Many churches in the Convention are now being served by students who are first and second year men in college. They are splendid and promising young men; but their main task now is to adequately prepare themselves for their life work. Such an arrangement limits the effectiveness of both classroom and church.

The local church has a definite responsibility for the ministry of the church. Too many of them are satisfied if they are able to secure satisfactory pastoral services for their own situation. The course that is frequently followed by the church without a pastor, does not differ so much from what has often happened during the shortage of domestic help. The housekeeper who was in need of a maid, offered her neighbor's maid higher pay, and secured her service for a time. That worked very well until someone else decided to "up the pay;" and the maid decided to move again. Then it became "servant-stealing;" but it did not help the labor shortage.

The following letter has gone out to all pastors and Sunday school superintendents of the Convention:

"The Committee on the Ministry of the Southern Convention and representatives from each of the five conferences of the Southern Convention held a profitable session on Tuesday, April 22, when Dr. Frederick L. Fagley, Associate Secretary of the General Council and Executive of our National Committee on the Ministry was present. For two and one-half hours we tried to face the great opportunities confronting our churches of the area. We recognized the shortage of ministers and we are greatly concerned that more young men be challenged to give consideration to the ministry; as a calling. Not only do we need young men for the ministry, but we need both young men and young women for other types of full time Christian service. In our world fraught with so many dangers it is generally agreed, not only by churchwomen but by our national leaders, that spiritual foundations must be re-established if the world is to avoid moral collapse. 'The fields are white unto harvest but laborers are few,' and we earnestly entreat you to join with us in prayer and in effort to influence promising young men and women for full time Christian service to the church.

"The committee, after facing the great need and realizing the splendid young (Continued on page 13)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A seventy-four-year-old Boy Scout passed away in our city this week. Row upon row of "his boys" sat silently through the funeral services, heard his minister read—"and may there be no moaning at the bar when I put out to sea," and

Blessings on thee, little man,
Barefoot boy, with cheeks of tan!
With thy turned-up pantaloons,
And thy merry whistled tunes;
With thy red lips redder still
Kissed by strawberries on the hill;
From my heart I give thee joy—
I was once a barefoot boy!

Let the million-dollared ride!
Barefoot trudging at his side,
Thou hast more than he can buy
In the reach of ear and eye—
Outward sunshine, inward joy;
Blessings on thee barefoot boy!

And each of the scores of Boy Scouts present felt that their friend knew them and loved them equally as well as John Greenleaf Whittier knew and loved the barefoot boy of his day.

As I sat in the pulpit I looked at them, and knew them to be boys from all walks of life—Catholics, Jews and Protestants; boys from beautiful homes, and boys from humble cottages; boys from his own troop, No. 5, and boys from many other troops who loved him just as well; I knew they all loved him, and rightly so. Wherever they met he was there, and his was the common denominator of devotion, and reverence, and goodwill binding them together.

Generations of scouts had passed through his tutelage. He had taught them the scout oath, the scout law, the scout motto, the scout sign and handclasp (he always gave me that handclasp in shaking hands with me), and the scout salute. How straight and proudly he stood as he recited with them: "On my honor I will do my best—to do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the scout law; to help other people at all times; to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

When he was in the hospital a Hebrew boy came to my study to ask me if I would not attend the court of honor that was to be held that week; and "wouldn't you make a prayer for him, but don't tell the boys I asked you." He did not want to be conspicuous, but he was very anxious for his friend's recovery. He knew how much that fine, old scout believed in, and loved God. Hundreds of Boy Scouts had been led in personal and public worship of God at summer camp, at lesser camps, and every Sunday in his own class in Sunday School. Yes, hundreds have thrilled to hear their friend—Clarence C. Rawles—say: "Blessings on thee, little man!"

MEN FOR THE MINISTRY.

By REV. WILLIAM A. LEITH.

When our young people are considering their life work, it is reasonable to expect that ministers will believe strongly enough in their own profession to talk to their young people about it and to seek to persuade their best young people to give it serious consideration.

Sometimes I wonder how much we ever talk about such matters to our young people. I suspect that some of our boys and girls have the same experience I had when I wanted the advice of an older minister in whom I had a great deal of confidence. I was giving a lot of attention to my life work. I was a senior in high school and I wanted to have some idea of what the ministry was like as I considered various professions. So I went to this man and sought to get from him insight into my problem. I got nowhere. He had little enthusiasm for the ministry and said that he could advise no young man to enter it. He intimated that if he were to make a fresh start, he probably would not go into the ministry. I left him with much of my enthusiasm gone and it was not until a number of years later that I decided to enter some phase of Christian life service. That man set me back a good many years, and it took a long time to view his pessimism with any understanding.

I wonder what we do when young people come to us for advice. I wonder how often we make it easy for them to talk things over. I wonder how much enthusiasm we arouse about the ministry in those we serve. I suspect that one of the most important things we can do about influencing young people toward the ministry is to let them see that we really love our profession and that we actually do consider it to be the grandest profession in the world where we are concerned. More important than what we say about the ministry is the attitude we take toward it ourselves. If we are joyous, buoyant persons, filled with a great zest for life and for people, our lives will become contagious and those we serve will unconsciously be influenced to seek to do the things we do and to follow where we lead. What is more, many of our young people will believe in the church and want to work for the church. Some of them will want to make service to the church their guiding life work. We cannot overlook the rich contagion of the right example in this matter of getting the right men for the ministry.

But this, important and significant as it is, is not enough. We need to see that our young people have opportunities to talk over their life work with competent advisers. We need to have life work conferences and to see that the Christian ministry receives its proper place in these conferences. Be sure that it receives at last as much consideration as other professions. Many of our best young people are going into law, medicine, business and engineering, etc. All too few are becoming ministers and teachers. Secular interests have become far more appealing as life work than have the old and tired professions which deal with man's spiritual life. You and I can not sit idly by and let this continue to happen. If we are not on guard, the time will come when our churches will be served by mediocre men and the schools and colleges will be manned by second- and third-rate persons. It will be a sad day for life here in America when that happens and the truth remains that it is happening fast.

See that your young people get to our summer conferences. Advise them about the colleges they plan to attend and help them to choose institutions that truly have something to offer on the spiritual side of life. You and I can demand that there be an adequate ministry to college students in our state-supported colleges. I think the time has come to see that our Congregational Christian students have adequate colleges and universities.

Let's go down the line and begin to lay our plans for making Christian life work attractive. Let's not stop until our Congregational Christian churches begin to produce their own leaders. For too long a time we have taken our leaders from other denominations. The time has come to do some producing ourselves. Perhaps the real test of our success as ministers is not the number of new members we receive each year or the popularity of our programs, the crowds

The Ministry

By DR. GERALD KENNEDY

St. Paul Methodist Church, Lincoln, Nebraska

The Christian Church has suddenly awakened to the fact that it is not recruiting enough ministers to carry on after those of us who are already in the ministry are gone. It came upon us very suddenly for we have not paid very much attention to that part of our work in recent days. We still have the memory of the depression when there were more men than we needed. But today one of the most serious problems of the church is the recruiting of young ministers. I have decided that I have a responsibility in that field and that from now on, at least once a year, I shall speak regarding the Christian ministry—its challenge and its opportunity. This is not really a sermon, therefore, this morning. It is beamed particularly to young men. I hope that if God is willing that there may be some young man in my congregation here, or someone listening to me on the air, riding in a car or at home, who may hear this word I speak this morning and be led to consider very seriously the ministry as a place for the investment of his life.

I cannot come to any young man with the promise of great wealth in the ministry. One of my friends told me a story about three boys at school. One was a doctor's son, one a lawyer's, and one a minister's. The doctor's son said, "My father performs an operation and sometimes gets $500 for it. It takes him about an hour". The lawyer's son said, "Sometimes my father conducts a case in court one day and gets $1,000." The minister's son said, "My father preaches a sermon sometimes and it takes twelve men to carry the money to the altar." On the other hand, there is another story of the official board who said to the bishop regarding the minister: "You keep him humble and we'll keep him poor." The truth is somewhere in between. You will have adequate support in the ministry. There is a growing feeling among churches that a minister should be worthy of his hire. You will not be in want. I am not speaking this morning, however, to any young man whose chief goal in life is to make a great deal of money. I am not interested in you particularly, that is, so far as the ministry is concerned, for you are not the type for the ministry.

I want to speak rather intimately and simply about seven or eight things concerning this work. In the first place let me talk for a moment about the preacher's call. There was a time, a generation or so ago, when it was thought that no young man should go into the ministry unless he had a miraculous vision, unless he saw a sign in the sky. That had both good and evil effects. It was good in that it assumed that this was a calling, a calling of God. It was bad in that it made many a young man feel that if the call did not come to him precisely in that miraculous way, the ministry was not for him. It overemphasized God's use of the miraculous and it underemphasized God's use of the natural processes. Any young man that takes an aptitude test and finds out that he is suited for this kind of work may believe that God's hand was in that the same as if he saw a vision.

I would say, however, that there must be the sense of a great compulsion. Sometimes I have said to young men as I have been discussing this with them, "If you can stay out of the ministry, you should. If it is just one calling among many, take some other one." Above everything else, it is not for any young man who thinks it is only sacrifice. If it seems to you that this is not what you want to do but that God demands it of you, that is not His calling. I am convinced that as time goes on, a man may rest finally in this sense that, for better or for worse, God made him a minister and there was no choice in it. That is the thing which came to Saint Paul who wrote, "Woe is me, if I preach not the Gospel." So this takes time, and a man must be patient. Let him wait. Let him keep his heart open. Let him be sensitive. Give God time to work his miracle and lead you, if this is your destiny, into the Christian ministry. But be alert for His word in the natural things as well as in the supernatural.

In the second place, let me speak a word about the preparation of the minister. One of the great things about the ministry is that everything is grist for the mill. Every experience, everything you read, every human relationship, if properly understood, will make a man a better minister than he could otherwise have been. The church has come to the conclusion that the minister must be well trained. The Methodist church has taken the lead in that and I am proud of it. We expect that any young man who shall become a minister in our church shall have an A.B. degree from a college and he shall have three years of graduate work in a recognized theological seminary. There are a few schools which will give degrees that are not recognized by our University Senate. They are schools that substitute, for the most part, piety for study, a little praying and hymn-singing for research. They are not for you. Other things being equal, a man who is well trained in a recognized school will be a better preacher. I know there are exceptions, and so do you, but the church is right when it says to any young man: "If you want to serve in this institution, you must be willing to make some sacrifice for your education."

In the third place, I want to speak a moment about the minister as an executive. Many a young man hesitates about the ministry because he says it is such an impractical job, you ought to try it. If there is one place where you will have to be practical, it is here. The church, you see, is a human institution and it has to pay its bills and it has to meet its budget. Therefore, if any young man has business ability and administrative ability and thinks that going into the ministry will give him no opportunity for that, let him change his mind. You will be the head of an institution, some day perhaps a large institution with a considerable budget. You will have all the business administration you want, believe me.

In the fourth place, I want to speak a moment about the minister as a pastor. The Christian minister has a relationship with people that no other individual in the world has or can have. The Christian minister comes to know people in intimate ways that no one else will ever know them. He meets them in the hours when they are at their best and he meets them in the hours when they are at their worst. He stands at the altar when a young couple has decided to launch out upon the greatest adventure—the building of a home, the building of a marriage. He brings to that most significant event the blessing of the church. Nobody else can do it. He stands with people when they are face to face with death, and they are lonely and afraid. He speaks the word of eternal life. Nobody else can do it. There is an intimate relationship which the preacher has that nobody else can have. He knows people better than anyone else can know them.

He finds that the great reward is that lives open up to him as they do

DO YOU WANT A CHANCE TO LIVE DANGEROUSLY?

The chance is waiting for you right now to come and take it. The whole world lies invitingly open as never before to the invasion of non-professional Christian missionaries. Now's your chance!

Maybe you have had the idea that missionary work is something that can be done only by professional people, such as pastors, doctors, or teachers who are specially employed by Mission Boards for the job. And of course if that were so you would be out because you would never make a preacher or a doctor or a professor. Maybe you're just a farmer, or a mechanic, or a business man, or a salesman. And though you could never be much of a preacher, you really do know your business in other lines—for instance, job printing, or advertising, or the ice cream business, or building, or mechanics. Maybe you have often wondered what such people could do to help get the Gospel into all the world besides giving their money to missions.

Well, just consider that there are hundreds of other lands where you could live and carry on your business or your job and thus support yourself while you use every opportunity that comes along to represent the King's business. Or consider again that Ford Motors, General Electric, Standard Oil and ever so many other big concerns send thousands of agents, representatives, and technicians into every corner of the globe. Why couldn't you be one of them—you who could reach people for Christ who could be reached in no other way. There are some lands which will not admit missionaries, but they will admit men like you who have goods to sell to them. In these places you could go in and help break the ice for the regular missionary. A Scotch family went to open up a business in Mexico a number of years ago. They made this their home. Their children were born there and become citizens of the country. Through the efforts of this family a large congregation of over 4,000 believers was established—one of the largest evangelical churches in Latin America.

This can happen again and again in many places. But there's a price to pay. It will mean that you will have to do again what our pioneer fathers did—leave your home and strike your roots in foreign soil, exchange soft comforts and pleasant, familiar surroundings for unknown trials and hardships. You will have to disown many of your pet personal rights and seek the best interests of others instead. Such a venture will demand earnest consecration and devotion and a willingness to be counted as nothing for Christ's sake. You may have to endure unutterable loneliness and isolation and suffer misunderstanding and cruel criticism. You will almost surely be tortured by a thousand temptations to soft pedal your testimony, to compromise with the spirit of the world, to admit discouragement and sloth into your soul, and even to quit altogether.

Does such a job seem too difficult? Surely, the pioneering, daring, crusading spirit of our fathers is not dead among us. We have seen it blaze forth during these tragic war years in the spirit of young men who unselfishly threw their lives into the struggle. Now let us throw our lives into God's war against the devil and his kingdom of darkness. If you are seriously, desperately in earnest about giving all men a chance to be saved from hell by believing in Jesus then here's your chance! Dangerous? Sure, but that's what you want, isn't it? And to those who dare to follow Him and obey His call to evangelize the world, Christ gave especial promise: "And lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world."

IF THE BIBLE WERE LOST.
One day, so runs a famous story, the world awoke to find that the Book of books had disappeared. Not only was the Book gone, but all traces of its influence had vanished.

It was as completely erased from the record of men as though it had never existed. The Bible was completely and finally lost.

Then suddenly it was discovered that all the great archives of the world appeared as if vandals had been at work slashing the capital works of the world from their moorings. All the great art galleries had massive empty frames on the walls, for the artistry of the world had drawn its inspiration from the lost Book. It was discovered that art had lost its source of highest intellect and emotion.

Much of the music of the world was silenced. The mighty oratorios were no longer to be heard. The hymns expressing the hopes and fears, the longings and reverence of human hearts, had died away; Christmas and all of its rejuvenating carols were gone. There was not much great music left, for it had drawn so upon the lost Book that now so many of the masterpieces were no more, and others had great parts of the music missing.

The libraries looked as if billions of devouring moths had descended

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

DR. WALTER H. JUDD TO SPEAK AT ELON COMMENCEMENT SUNDAY, MAY 25, AT 11:30 A. M.

Elon College is most fortunate in securing Congressman Judd as baccalaureate speaker for Commencement Sunday, May 25. Dr. Judd is not an ordained minister but he is a very fine Christian layman, interested in the whole church program and in seeing the church extend its ministry of healing and blessing to the ends of the earth.

"In 1925, Dr. Judd went to China as a medical missionary under the Foreign Mission Board of the Congregational Church. He built, organized, and for five years managed the thirty-five-bed hospital in North China. He returned to the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota, for the post graduate study in surgery from 1932-34. Then he went back to China where for four years he was superintendent of a 125-bed hospital in North China. He and his staff brought the hospital through a Communist revolution and the Japanese invasion, and at the same time improved its work so that it became eighty-three per cent instead of thirty-three per cent self-supporting.

"When Japan's armies moved into China and during the five months he was under their control Dr. Judd saw things which made him feel it imperative that we stop building up Japan's war machine. He came home in 1938 to carry that message to more than 1,400 audiences in forty-six of the forty-eight states. In January, 1941, he took up the practice of medicine in Minneapolis.

"After Pearl Harbor, many individuals and groups representing all segments of the community urged Dr. Judd to become a candidate for Congress from the Fifth Minnesota District. He was elected in 1942, and re-elected in 1944 and 1946.

"While Dr. Judd has special interest in and nationally-recognized knowledge of American foreign relations, especially in the Pacific areas, he is not less concerned about internal matters. His work in Congress on various domestic problems has been so outstanding that he was appointed as one of seven Congressmen to serve with seven Senators on the super-Committee set up to study reports of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, then to recommend measures for consideration by the various regular Congressional committees. He occupies a key position of great influence in determining the whole legislative program designed to give our country maximum production, employment and prosperity."

Dr. Judd is not unknown to our church in the South. Prior to World War II he came to Elon College at the invitation of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Southern Convention and spoke as a part of its program for the School of Missions, then in session.

Dr. Judd is a world figure. Everyone who possibly can should hear him. He will have a most worthwhile message.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The support of Elon College is largely a matter of education. When a member of the Congregational Christian Church in the South says frankly, "I am not interested in helping to support the College," one of two things is true. Either he has been misinformed or he is uninformed. If he has the correct information, he knows how essential the College has been in the development and progress of our church in the South, and how necessary the College is to the life of the church if the church is to continue and live, and live triumphantly it must.

The College continues to look to the church for inspiration and help. Your church's contribution is appreciated.

upon the printed pages. The books of authors such as Shakespeare, Milton, Bunyan, Tennyson, Longfellow, Tolstoy, Dostoevski, and hundreds of others, were well-nigh unintelligible, due to the many omissions. The volumes containing the oratory of the past two thousand years seemed to have had stricken out most of the sublimest passages. The law books no longer made sense, for the fundamental principles seemed everywhere to have been eliminated.

The Magna Charta of Britain, the Constitution of the United States, the American Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights, and all the great statements of liberty and human rights everywhere in the world were practically wiped blank, except for a few commonplace words now utterly lacking significance.

Wherever the English language was spoken, men stammered and were unable to express themselves, for the lost Book had fashioned their native tongue. And not only was this true in English-speaking lands, but in other countries as well, for the Bible in the vernacular of the people had always proved the chief instrument for fashioning speech.

But the loss of the Bible cut even deeper. Values became blurred. Human life grew cheap. Men became tools to be used. Life grew drab and meaningless, and man had only himself to worship. Restraints fell off the human conscience, and all the brutal instincts of the animal in man were unleashed.

With the Bible lost, a veritable hades had broken loose upon the earth, which nothing short of the Providential restoration of the Book of books could overcome.—Sunshine Magazine.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

THE SINGING LESSON.

Al Isaac tried very hard to keep his mind on his spelling words. Mr. Bluebird just outside the school window swinging among the blossoms on the bridal wreath shrub had no intention of disturbing little boys in their classroom. Yet, that was just what he was doing for his song made Al think of the "Springtime Varieties" which his school was going to present the next night. The bluebird's song reminded Al of the sixth number on the program which was to be the "Singing Lesson." Al couldn't wait for the time to come because he was to be the Music Professor.

This was Al's third year at Grace School and the first time that he had been given a part in a school play that just fitted him. Al was tall and thin. Today his brown eyes looked almost black with his excitement. They looked at the bluebird through two sections of glass—the little round discs of his spectacles and the square panes of the window. His long agile fingers idly played with his brown wavy hair as he observed the bluebird. His whole body seemed full of the melody of the bluebird's notes. He could imagine his mother at home pressing the shiny black and clean white of the tuxedo suit which she had created for him to wear as the Professor. This was to be the first time for his Dad to see him in a play. During the last two years of school his father had been overseas with the Army. His mother and teacher both had told him that he must do everything just right for his father.

The Parent-Teacher Association of the school was sponsoring the program. They were planning to use the proceeds from the show to help with the children's lunch program of the school for the coming year. He would carry a baton tomorrow night and he did hope that all of his pupils would sing their best. If only the day would be as heavenly as this one Al was sure that they'd be able to sing just like that bluebird. Suddenly two things happened. The door of his room opened and the voice teacher said: "Time to rehearse the 'Singing Lesson.'"

Immediately Al closed his speller and got to his feet. At the same moment the bluebird outside left his twig and flew away! "Perhaps he has to rehearse a singing lesson somewhere else," thought Al as he turned toward the door.

WHAT IS THIS, MOTHER.

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

If we live with our children according to Froebel's plan, we shall be confronted with the question, "What is this, Mother?" every time we walk out with them into Nature's ever changing treasure gardens. When we do not know the answer, it does no harm to admit it; but it should be with the promise, "I will try to find out."

Have you an Explorers' Club in your home? Have you a space in the playroom called "Our Nature Corner"? Is there a cloth strip fastened across the children's room on which pictures of birds, trees, and flowers are exhibited?

Children love to walk out-of-doors with Father and Mother. They love the idea of clubs—even small children of kindergarten age—especially when it is a family affair. Most Explorers' Clubs are in evidence every time there is a walk or drive; though sometimes a club will prefer to meet for an expedition at a regular time on each Saturday afternoon—without regard to the season or the weather. "What do you suppose we'll find today?" arouses sufficient interest in almost any child, of any age, to go forth and listen to Nature's teachings.

Do you encourage the children to bring home specimens for their "Nature Corner"? If you do, be careful to have them understand that they must not take from Nature anything she may need, nor anything that will make her less attractive to her next visitors.

Specimens brought home should always be given care. It is a good plan to buy several dozen test tubes and fasten them by strings to a screen or cloth strip. They will prove particularly convenient for sprays of flowers, weeds, and twigs. One benefit of having these tubes is they increase the interest in collecting small specimens in the spring, little sprays of buds and leaves; in the summer, sprays of wayside weeds and grasses; in the fall, collections of seeds or twigs and weeds. All these should be gathered sparingly and carefully preserved.

A "Nature Corner" should have low shelves where children can keep many of their treasures not needing the test tubes. There will be stones, shells, and many kinds of seeds, as well as different forms of seaweed washed up by the tides.

And when cold weather comes again, let us not forget that winter, as truly as the other seasons, has its treasures.

Did you ever take your children on a seeing-icles walk? Last year I saw some of the queerest, yet really most exquisite icles that I had ever seen, on the house next door to ours. I realized then that here was another bit of Nature to introduce to our children. These icles did not hang in single inverted spires as most icles do, nor were they vertical, but gracefully slanting, for the wind had done its part in increasing their beauty. They were fantastically massed, and it was not difficult to trace shapes of flowers, fruit and even tropical birds in bas-relief upon their surfaces.

A walk after an ice storm is full of interest for the children. They will enjoy shaking an ice-coated bush or a branch of an ice-coated tree. The ice falling on the crushed snow makes pleasing music. Caution the children to shake gently, so that not one of the very faint tones shall be lost and, too, so that no branch shall be broken. Winter has many different melodies for us if we have ears that hear them.

Another winter walk should be to a house or store window where Jack Frost has done some of his remarkable sketching. Not only individual giant ferns and trees will be found but often complete pictures—lovely beyond words.

Of course, there will be many meetings of the Explorers' Club, even in warm weather, when no specimens are taken. On some spring or summer day suggest going for a turn-over-the-stones walk. What fun for the children to study all the kinds of life underneath!—pale plants, beetles and all sorts of crawling things each concerned with its own business. At another time you could have a following-along-the-brook walk, and at another, a listening-to-the-birds ramble, and so on. The club idea gives a great thrill.

There is no limit to the delightful ways by which parents can introduce their children to the world about them. Whatever the season, it can be made so pleasurable that it will seem at the time, the best. And we never know how far the family-shared joy of a single season may reach.

Don't judge a man by his opinion of himself.—J. L. Schnadig.

THE MINISTRY.

to no other man. He is with his people in a relationship that is at once intimate, and profound, and ennobling. It makes a man humble, but it also fills him with a kind of heavenly pride that God has called him to this relationship. One of the greatest preachers of our time, not too far from here, as a young man had a very radical social gospel which displeased some of his leading members and they began to leave the church in flocks. The whole thing nearly fell in on him when they threatened to get rid of him and tried to enlist the leadership of the chairman of his board. That man said, "This young preacher stood beside me when I buried my wife. He brought his sympathy to me. I will have no part in this kind of a move." It saved him. He stayed on there for many years and became a great prophetic voice of his church because of his pastoral relationships with men.

The fifth thing I want to say this morning is that the preacher is a public relations director. That is another practical thing if anyone thinks this is an impractical calling. The plain truth, whether we like it or not, is that the church is represented by its preacher. Wherever he goes, he is known as the preacher of such and such a church and he has no choice in this. He is not only himself but he is also the church he represents. That is the reason why it is so terribly difficult for a man to go into a new church and a new community. The first year he seems to be walking a tight-rope. If he says the wrong thing and makes the wrong impression he has damaged his church. When people get to know him he can be more relaxed. They may not always agree with him and he may not always do the right thing but they will make allowances for him later. But not the first year.

The minister must be a community citizen. I have colleagues who think I am wrong about this. They believe that their task is only to their own congregation, that they do not belong to the community and city and therefore they have no time for it. I think we must have the time, we preachers, to serve on civic committees. We are part of the city life, for we are representing the Christian church and the Christian church should be willing to assume a place of leadership in civic affairs. The preacher, therefore, must do it.

In the sixth (I think it is the sixth, isn't it?) I want to talk about the preacher as a counsellor. It means that a minister ought to have all the training in this field that he can get. He ought to have lots of psychology and then get over most of it. He ought to be a man who has trained himself as adequately in understanding the human mind as is possible, for people will come to him as days pass, for help. He should be able to recognize certain difficulties, and above all, he should be at least wise enough to recognize when a person is beyond him, and is in too serious a situation for him to try to help. He can perform a great service in his community if he knows when somebody ought to see a professional psychiatrist.

The people will come, the lonely ones. With all the noise of this civilization, and it is a noisy one, for no matter where you go you cannot escape the radio (and someone always has one and it is always blaring) and in spite of the fact that you can always be entertained wherever you may be, loneliness is a growing characteristic. Our world is full of lonely people, and they will come to the minister to find out where to find companionship and confidence. You will have the people who will come because they are self-centered. They are their own worst enemy. Their only difficulty is that they are ego-centric and they do not know it. You have to tell them, if possible, in a nice way. If it is not possible to do it in a nice way, you have to tell them anyway. The people will come who are tempted, the people whose lives have become tangled up in evil and sin, the people who have the Ten Commandments all smashed, will come to you. You will know as well as I do that most of us know very few answers but you have within your keeping a Gospel, a Word, that means power, terrific power, tremendous power. The Gospel can heal sick souls, and the Gospel can restore hope. It will be your high calling to talk to people who are in need. You have in your keeping a word of power. You shall become to your generation and to your congregation, in time perhaps, in the great words of Isaiah, "A hiding place from the wind, a covert from the tempest, as streams of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." At least the opportunity is there if any man can measure up to it.

The seventh thing I want to say is a word about the preacher as a student. No young man ought to go into the ministry who is not a student and loves books. That is a rather broad statement but I think it will be true many more times than it is false. There is no substitute for just plain, hard study. The man who is just a nice fellow, the man who knows stories, will get along for a while, but day out and day in, no minister can serve a church without digging deep into books of the present and the past and loving it. A man must have as a minimum, four hours a day for study. If he cannot find it in the morning, he must find it at night. If he cannot find it in the forenoon, let him get up earlier. He must find four hours a day for his study and he must read at least a book a day. Nothing less is enough. I was lecturing one time to a group of preachers and saying something about this necessity of study and a man came up to me afterward and said, "Young man, don't you know that the average preacher doesn't read a book a month?" With a kind of a smart-aleck reply, of which I am not very proud but which is true, I said, "Well, brother, that is the reason why they are average preachers." This is the temptation of the ministry: to be called aside, to do this or do that, to neglect study, because no one will notice that, at least not right away. The man who wants to interpret the will of God, the man who wants to proclaim the eternal messages, must be a man who is much more than a nice personality. He must have enough profundity in his thought, so that men who are well educated and well read themselves, will know that he, too, has followed their path. The minister must be a student.

The last thing I want to say (this is eight) is that the minister is a preacher. I wrote a book about that. (It costs two and a half.) The minister is a preacher, which to me is the center of the whole thing. Here is where you meet the great silent part of your congregation. You will not come to know everybody intimately but here is the great moment when you are commissioned to stand before your people and proclaim the Gospel of Christ. It seems a foolish thing, doesn't it, that it ever works or accomplishes anything? Saint Paul spoke about the foolishness of preaching and yet, the Gospel says, "Jesus came preaching." Down through the years men who have considered that somehow they were chosen as ambassadors to say to people, "Thus saith the Lord," have managed to bring that word of God in an intimate, profound, direct way to men's lives and the church has grown. Charles R. Brown, formerly of Yale, said one time that Protestantism rises and falls with the rise

THE FALL OF THE NORTHERN KINGDOM.

LESSON VIII—MAY 25, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous; but the way of the wicked shall perish.—Psalm 1:6.

LESSON: II Kings 5:1-15; 15:8-17:41.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 1.

Sordid Stuff.

Today's lesson does not make good reading. It is sordid stuff. It is the story of a nation that had a great chance, but which gradually became rotten at the heart, and finally came to stark tragedy. Indeed it lost its identity as a nation altogether, and to this day the Ten Northern Tribes are known as the "lost tribes of Israel." Thus Israel joins many other nations, Babylonia, Assyria, Chaldea, Rome in the graveyard of the nations. And as in their case, there was moral rottenness at the core of their national life.

Sobering Truths.

Now the point of all of this is the fact that nations today are not immune to the evils that destroyed these nations of the long ago. The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind. And the nations that forget God shall be turned into hell. Military might, military secrets, treaties, open or secret, secret diplomacy, and material riches will not give abiding security to any nation. The ultimate security of a nation is grounded in the character of its citizens and the vitality of its religious life. We Americans might think "that it can't happen here" but it can. No matter how strong we are materially, our nation is doomed unless it is redeemed spiritually.

A Time of Tension and Turmoil.

The period covered by today's lesson was one of turmoil and tension. The twenty years involved by the span of the lesson saw six kings on the throne and no less than four revolutions which by assassination and violent deaths, seat new rulers on the throne. The court was rotten with intrigue and jealousy. There were invasions and threats of invasion. On at least one occasion tribute and a heavy one was the only thing that kept a powerful enemy from invading the country. And when the tribute money was withheld the king was carried away into captivity.

The Judgment of God.

Finally, at long last, the blow fell. The Assyrians came up and after bloody fighting and a long siege, they defeated Israel and captured Samaria. Shalmaneser began the thing and Sargon, his successor, completed it. The date was 722 B. C., a date which students of the Bible ought to remember—it was the end of the Northern Kingdom. The people were carried away into captivity, and the material resources of the Ten Northern tribes were confiscated. Subject peoples from other nations were brought in to replace the captive Israelites and the inhabitants of the land became a mongrel race. It would be a mistake to think that God punished His people. They simply punished themselves, they brought upon themselves the judgment of God as the result of the inevitable working out of sin in accordance with natural laws. The same thing was true concerning the recent war. World War II was simply the judgment of God upon the nations of the world. Whatsoever men, and nations sow, that shall they also reap.

There's A Reason.

One section of today's lesson—II Kings 17:7-23—is what Dr. Alexander MacLaren calls "a post mortem inquiry into the diseases that killed a kingdom." Briefly they are ingratitude, national pride, paganism, apostasy, moral compromise. The same thing happened in the life of Israel that has happened so often since—the nation conquered another nation, and in turn was conquered by the culture and the paganism of the people it had conquered. Dr. James Reid puts it thus: "How many men have risen above the circumstance of poverty and have been debased by the circumstances of wealth. How many have conquered hardship and sloth, and have been overcome by pride and hardness of heart. Every situation we come into has its false gods, a wrong spirit. Only he who gave us power to win a position can give us grace to live in it."

Stop, Look, Listen—Danger.

The blow did not come without warning, ample warning, persistent warning, pointed warning. Again and again the prophets had told the nation to "Stop, Look and Listen." Again and again they had said, "Danger, Go Slow." But the people had not given heed, or if they had given heed, they soon forgot the danger and went back to their old ways. It was inevitable therefore that doom would come. God does not leave himself without witness.

Liquor Had A Big Part.

It is rather sobering to learn that among the factors which led to the downfall of Israel, one of the strongest was liquor. It is specifically stated in the sacred record. The classes and the masses were having too much fellowship with Old John Barleycorn. This was especially true of the leaders. The drunkards and the drinkers just did not have what it took to save a nation.

This ought to give pause to our thoughtful citizens. The consumption of hard liquors, as well as of wines and beers and kindred drinks, is on a marked upsurge. The figures in Virginia for the past three years are alarming and appalling to thoughtful people. Medical authorities say that the four most serious health problems of our country are in this order: alcohol, tuberculosis, cancer, and heart trouble. Insurance companies say that during the past ten years rejections for heavy alcoholic indulgence have increased from twelve to thirty-four per cent. An expert of the Rockefeller Foundation reports that twenty per cent of the mental patients in the U. S. are alcoholics. The criminologists say that the cost of alcohol to the nation in the form of crime is beyond comprehension. Sociologists attribute much of our juvenile delinquency to alcohol. Mr. Hoover states that thirty per cent more boys under twenty were arrested for drunkenness in 1942 than in the previous year, and worse, that thirty-nine per cent more girls for the same reason. Traffic experts tell us that "alcohol is responsible for between forty and sixty per cent of all deaths and injury accidents caused by automobile on our highways. And this all goes on with the consent of our citizens, indeed your consent and my consent, and at profit to our government. One wonders why we swallow the stuff the liquor people put out in ads in magazines and billboards and radios and movies. Personally the writer does not think the American people show their stupidity anywhere more than in their attitude toward the liquor traffic. It is the most illogical, indefensible, to say nothing of the most dangerous attitude that folks who are supposed to have any sense could take. But please God, some day, the people of America are going to wake up. The

THE WHITE STONE.

By REV. DURANT D. NASH,
Hopewell, Virginia.

He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth save he that receiveth it.—Revelation 2:17.

Reference is here made to the tessera hospitals, the tally or token of hospitality employed by the ancients. When one person was received kindly by another, or a contract of friendship was entered into, the tessera was given. It was so named from its shape, being four-sided; it was sometimes of wood, sometimes of stone: it was divided into two by the contracting parties; each wrote his name on half of the tessera; then they exchanged pieces, and therefore the name or device on the piece of the tessera which each received, was the name the other person had written upon it, and which no one else knew but him who received it.

It was carefully prized, and entitled the bearer to protection and hospitality.

Plautus, in one of his plays, refers to this custom. Hanno inquires of a stranger where he may find Agorastocles, and discovers to his surprise that he is addressing the object of his search. "If so," he says, "compare if you please, this hospitable tessera; here it is; I have it with me. Agorastocles replies, "It is the exact counterpart; I have the other at home." Hanno responds, "O, my friend! I rejoice to meet thee; thy father was my friend, my guest; I divided with him this hospitable tessera." "Therefore," said Agorastocles, "thou shalt have a home with me, for I reverence hospitality."

This is a beautiful illustration of gospel truth: The Saviour visits the sinner's heart, and being received as a guest, He bestows the white stone, the token of His unchanging love. He inverts the usual course; He invites Himself and brings the feast.

He sups with us and makes us sup with Him. He enrolls our name among His list of friends. He makes an everlasting covenant with us, ordered in all things and sure. He promises never to leave nor forsake us. He tells us we "shall never perish." He gives us the tessera, The White Stone. Is not this "the witness of the Holy Spirit," the "earnest of the promised possession?" Does not "the Spirit witness with our spirit that we are born of God?" and in that same stone a new name inscribed,

On this white stone is inscribed a "new name." The part of the tessera which each of the contracting parties received contained the name of the other. And there, "the new name" which he that overcometh receives, is that of Him who gives it. By the unbeliever, God is known as Power, as Majesty, as Justice. He is dreaded. "The carnal mind is enmity against God." The Christian alone knows Him as Love! Jehovah has now "a new name." Oh, friend, do you know God by "His new name?" We are told that no man knoweth this new name, "saving he that receiveth it." He knows it for himself, but no one else can read it for him. Thus it resembles the "hidden manna." We are travelers through the desert, we are far from home; we are exposed to privations, temptations and foes. But we are never far from the presence of a friend. Everywhere, in every city and every village, on the desert and on the sea, in solitude and in the crowd, in health and in sickness, a Friend is at hand who will always recognize the white stone which He gave as a token of His friendship and love.

And then, there is a day coming when we shall be compelled to leave the homes of earth, when we must embrace for the last time our dearest friends. They can only go with us just so far. We must cross the river alone. But we shall not have left our treasure behind. No, we shall carry the White Stone with us; and at the doors of the palace of the Great King we shall present it. The angels will recognize the new name on the tessera, and will say, "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord!"

Such is the welcome that every soul shall experience to whom the promise is fulfilled. Remember, Jesus said, "I am going away, and where I go you can not come now, but you can come hereafter, I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

OUR CHURCH NEEDS MORE MINISTERS.

people within the churches of the Southern Convention, approved the following recommendations and we submit them to you for your consideration and help:

"1. That each pastor and Sunday school officer and teacher and parents be asked to covenant with us to pray, and to discover and encourage promising youth of our churches, Sunday schools and homes toward full time Christian service.

"2. That during the month of May we make a special effort to enlist consecrated young people in the decision to give their lives to full time Christian service as ministers, Christian teachers, and church workers; and that the fourth Sunday of May or the nearest convenient Sunday to that day be designated as 'Enlistment Sunday.' We earnestly solicit your help.

"In implementing the second recommendation we urge pastors, Sunday school superintendents and teachers prayerfully to list promising youth who might become messengers of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, and then after prayer seek to enlist parents in prayer that their young people may give serious consideration to these opportunities. If Sunday school teachers will seek to emphasize opportunities for full time Christian service in their classes and pastors will preach a special sermon on behalf of this cause it will bring results.

"Dr. Fagley gave your committee the results of a recent study made among 241 students for the ministry in theological seminaries. Of the 209 reporting the factors influencing them for the ministry, the three main factors were: pastor's influence, 87; personal conviction and prayer, 71; home and church influence, 35.

"We will be sending some printed material to the pastors, which can be distributed among the leaders and youth of your church."

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Everyone who visits the Orphanage admires the Old Building in its beautiful white dress of paint. It really doesn't look like the same building. We wish all the members of the Southern Convention could visit the Orphanage while the building is in its new spring coat, and see it now.

While we are on this repair job we are not going to stop until we get all the buildings in first-class condition. We will then have an orphanage plant second to none in the class of small orphanage plants in North Carolina. We will then have an institution which our people can well feel proud of and appreciate. To do all the work that we have done during the last two months has cost a lot of money. We know you are interested in having a plant here that you will feel proud of when you see it. We wonder if you would not be happy to send us a check to help us in making the Orphanage the beautiful plant that you have been wishing for during these years. The beautiful buildings are not the most important part. The children are our greatest interest. We have the best group of children here at this time that we have ever had at one time during the last thirty years. Nearly everyone who visits the Orphanage remarks how well behaved they are and how nice the little fellows play together on the play ground.

Their spiritual interest is looked after very carefully, too. At the morning meal, a scripture lesson is read and all return thanks to God for His blessings. They all bow their heads and return thanks at the other two meals, too. We send them all to Sunday School, and those who are large enough, go to church. Each Sunday night in each building they have a religious service of their own. Then on each Wednesday evening at 7:00 o'clock, our beloved pastor, Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, and his co-worker, Miss Lula Browne, come over and hold a service especially for the children. All the children from our three buildings gather together in the Old Building for the service. Dr. Dollar reads the Scripture lesson, has prayer, and makes a short talk. Then he conducts the singing, and you would hardly believe how well the little fellows can sing. Even the little tots can pick up the words and tune and sing it. Then Miss Browne takes over and always tells a beautiful and gripping story. The children look forward from week to week for this beautiful service, especially for Miss Brown's story.

they attract. Perhaps we fail or we succeed according as we get or fail to get our best young people to take up and follow the great profession of Christian minister and teacher. 1947 SUMMER SCHOOL FOR RURAL MINISTERS AT V. P. I.

JULY 14-18.

Final arrangements have been made for the Virginia Summer School for Rural Ministers. The school will be held at V. P. I., Blacksburg, Va., on July 14-18. The program begins Monday night and ends Friday noon making it possible for men to come between Sundays without missing a service at home.

The program will be especially good this year. We have been trying for several years to get Dr. J. H. Kolb of University of Wisconsin for our school. This year we have succeeded. He is head of the Department of Rural Sociology and one of the best qualified men in the United States to discuss the place of the church in the rural community as it is today. Many Virginians have been in Dr. Kolb's classes and we have a rare treat in having him with us.

Those who attended last year were greatly impressed by Dr. Wm. F. Dunkle, Minister of Barton Heights Methodist Church, Richmond, Va. This year Dr. Dunkle is coming back with a new series of lectures on the preparation and delivery of sermons in rural churches. This series promises to be one of the most challenging and helpful that we have had in our nearly twenty-years of pastors' schools.

This summer school has always been noted for its informality and good fellowship. Men of all denominations come from all over Virginia and from neighboring states. There is always great interest in the discussion periods. This year four morning periods have been set aside for panel discussions in which twenty or more men from the rural field will join with specialists and administrators in a thorough-going discussion of timely topics in the rural field. These will include a consideration of the total program of a rural church, a session on preaching led by the winners of last year's Rural Life Sermon Contest, a discussion of the work and function of the Virginia Council of Churches, and a demonstration and discussion of the use of visual aids in the rural church program.

The afternoon, as usual, will be devoted to rest, recreation, informal conferences and tours. The Thursday evening trip to Mountain Lake and the impressive vesper service on the mountain top will be arranged as usual. This is indeed a memorable experience.

The night programs will be devoted to special inspirational and educational features. Monday night Dr. Walter Newman, Acting President of V. P. I., and Mr. L. B. Dietrick, Director of the Agricultural Extension Service, will address the group and a "get acquainted" session will follow. On Tuesday night Dr. Paul Sanders, Editor of the Southern Planter, will address the school on the Influence of Mass Migration on Rural Life. Wednesday night Prof. B. L. Hummel, of V. P. I., and head of the Rural Church Department of the Virginia Council of Churches, will speak on his 15,000-mile trip through the interior of China. Scenes from his trip will be shown following his lecture.

This total program is available to rural ministers and their wives at a cost of but $10.00 which covers board, room and registration. One hundred scholarships are available from denominational headquarters and elsewhere. Those interested in attending should get in touch with their own state denominational headquarters, Mr. B. L. Hummel, V. P. I., Blacksburg, Va., or their local County Farm or Home Agent. The registration is limited. Requests should be made at once.

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION.

On the first Sunday in December, 1946, Brother and Sister Younger Bray and others of Liberty Church, Nathalie, Va., came to my home with a nice quantity of substantial supplies for our pantry, together with a gift purse from the church of $129.00.

The writer presided at the organization of this church, a branch church of the Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., in 1910. There were sixteen charter members. The present membership is one hundred and eighty. No minister ever served a kinder or more appreciative people.

While during the thirty-three years of my service with them, they were not able to pay the salary of some churches, this was supplemented by food supplies all during the year. Words cannot express the gratitude of self and family for the kind consideration of these good people through all these years. May heaven's richest blessings ever be with them is my sincere prayer.

C. E. NEWMAN.

THE MINISTRY.

and fall of great preaching. I think he was right.

There is nothing like preaching. In a day like this, to be sure that there is an answer means there never was a greater time than this to preach. The Gospel is at its best when men are in the midst of tragedy and uncertainty. When your little shallow philosophies have fallen away, then to stand before your people and proclaim the Gospel answer, what higher calling could any man have than that? It is the most exciting news the world has ever heard. There is nothing dull about the Gospel. Whenever a man preaches a dull sermon it means that he is a murderer and a killer. He has slaughtered something that was living, for the Gospel is full of excitement.

So I close with this. I was walking down the street the other day with an editor. He turned to me and said, strangely enough, "If I were a young man, I would go into the ministry." I asked him, "Why? What do you mean by that?" He said, "Because the world today needs the Christian church more than it needs anything else. If a man wants to really serve his day, he should go into the ministry." There it is. I hope some young man who is listening to me this morning will feel God Almighty is putting His hand upon him and calling him to this greatest of all tasks.

NUMBER 21.

AMONG THE 3,000

An Editorial

Unknown to us, their names are written in the Book of Life. They were the charter members of the Christian Church. What a glorious company! Moved by the Holy Spirit and the preaching of St. Peter, they swelled the ranks of the believers. They came into the Church at a crucial time, just when they were needed, and supplied the essential personnel and leadership to send the new enterprise on its world compassing mission. What a privilege it was to be a member of that original, formative, and determinative pilgrim band! How greatly we are indebted to them! They were spiritual pioneers. Thank God for that first 3000 which came into the Church on the Day of Pentecost. They were the spiritual first fruits of Christ, the harbingers of a mighty concourse of converts from that day unto this.

What will happen on Pentecost, 1947? Will it find God's people in one place, with one accord, awaiting the promise of the Father? The ingathering of 3000 members into our churches on this significant anniversary is an event devoutly to be desired. Our Church needs a new transfusion of spiritual power. And surely there are 3000 men, women and children within our influence who need Christ and the Church. Pentecost should become their spiritual birthday.

We must grow, not only by union or annexation, but we must grow from within. Our depleted ranks must be filled. The need is great and the hour is crucial. Who will endeavor to secure one or more of this number? Who will decide now to become one of that glorious number? Let the invitation be given in every Church this Sunday. Pentecost and Membership Sunday may be one. Let us fulfill the conditions and God will give the results.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Drs. John G. Truitt of Suffolk and W. B. O'Neill of Holland exchanged pulpits last Sunday.

Rev. W. J. Andes and Miss Betty Chicoine are on the faculty of the Training School this week at the Hebron Evangelical and Reformed Church, Winston-Salem, N. C.

The Windsor Church raised $12,000 toward the building of a new church. Pledges of $2,000 in arrears are being collected, and a new drive is being anticipated for the coming of autumn.

Mrs. Alice Morrill (Mrs. M. T.) died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Marion McCord, Evanston, Ill. Mrs. Morrill had the "flu" followed by a cerebral hemorrhage from which she did not rally and entered rest on April 10. Interment was at Defiance. Mrs. Morrill was a active leader in the women's work of the Christian Church and it was her gracious spirit that piloted the merged women's work of Ohio during its first two years. She will be greatly missed from among the circle of Ohio's Women's Fellowship.

JOIN THE MARCH OF THE 10,000.

By FRANCES DUNLAP HERON.

The Attorney General of the United States, and the president of noted Howard University are among the leaders in American life who are to speak at the twenty-first quadrennial International Sunday School Convention to be held in Des Moines, Iowa, July 23-27, by the International Council of Religious Education.

Their audience will be some 10,000 men and women of all ages who might also be called "leaders in American life." For they will represent that faithful host of volunteer Sunday school workers—superintendents, teachers and officers—who week after week give their time to the moral and spiritual training of 20,000,000 boys and girls in the nation's Protestant churches.

Those volunteer workers who are able to visit the tall corn state next July will get four days of inspiration, discussion and fellowship to help them in their far-reaching job. Their very presence in Des Moines will focus national and world attention on a united Protestant effort to "Live Christ—Teach Christ."

Stassen to Open.

The convention chairman is J. L. Kraft, Chicago manufacturer, who has been a Sunday school superintendent for thirty-six years. On hand to greet the convention at its opening session Wednesday evening, July 23, will be Minnesota's former governor, Harold E. Stassen, who is president of the International Council of Religious Education.

An outstanding leader is then scheduled to lay the groundwork with an interpretation of the Gospel as the creator of the revolutionary changes in personal life and in social institutions. The convention from then on will attempt to answer "How shall we make this Gospel effective?"

Thomas C. Clark, native of Texas, Presbyterian layman, since June, 1945, attorney general of the United States, will call the Sunday school teachers before his "bench" Thursday evening with the question, "Can the Church lead America and the world out of the present moral and social confusion that threatens to destroy us?"

It's Up to the Church.

Answering for the convention will be Mrs. Harper Sibley, member of the Protestant Church, and president of the United Council of Church Women, who was named American mother of 1945. She will show how the church can lead in providing the right moral climate for the development of Christian citizenship.

Daily Worship and Bible Teaching.

The Thursday, Friday and Saturday programs all will open with worship, followed by a Bible lecture period. Responsible for worship services are: Friday, Dr. Oscar Rumpf, Philadelphia, director of adult work, Evangelical and Reformed Church; Saturday, young people representing the United Christian Youth Movement.

Speakers on the Bible are: Thursday, Dr. Paul Hoh, president of Lutheran Theological Seminary, Mt. Airy, Pa.; Friday, Dr. Ernest Trice Thompson, professor of church history, Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.; Saturday, Dr. A. G. Wehrli, head of the department of Old Testament and dean of Eden Seminary, Webster Groves, Mo.

Afternoons for Denominational Meetings.

Each afternoon twenty-five denominations will present their denominational programs in simultaneous meetings. In these sessions plans will be made for carrying the Convention's emphasis, "Live Christ—Teach Christ," into the work of each denomination's educational work in church and Sunday school. Denominational executives are securing leaders and outlining programs that will make this an exceptional opportunity for reinforcing the educational work of the church back home.

Dedication Service to Climax Week.

On Sunday evening the 10,000 "leaders in American life," against a background of massed choirs and orchestras, in Drake Stadium, will gather up the week's study and inspiration and vision in a dedication service to "Live Christ in Personal Commitment."

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Curriculum Committee for Vacation Bible Schools is suggesting, on the request of many of the churches of the Convention, a list of materials which may be used in your Bible Schools this summer. In suggesting this material, the Committee does not recommend following it word for word. Some of the material may need to be changed to fit your own individual church's needs or those of your children's groups.

With one exception, each book is complete in itself. That is, the teacher's notes, the stories, the songs, the games, the instructions for handwork, the Bible references—sometimes even the conversations a teacher may have with her children!—are included in the book. The one exception is the material for the Intermediate group. In this case, there is a Leader's Guide and also a Pupil's Guidebook.

In forthcoming issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN there will be articles concerning each separate course, especially for those using the books for a Five-Day or Six-Day School. Minute by minute plans cannot be made, for that would give you no freedom to change your program to suit your group. We will make suggestions, however, that could be followed as a daily schedule.

PENTECOST, EVANGELISM and MISSIONS.

Again we approach the historic day of Pentecost, that day when there was an upsurge, an outpouring and downpouring of the Holy Spirit. Here in these mighty stirrings of the Spirit we find the headwater of Church. The outpouring of the Spirit was accompanied by the ingathering of people. All the conditions of inspired preaching, both hysical and spiritual, had been fulfilled. Peter preached with conviction and power. His hearers were Jewish people, as were the apostles. They were entitled to the fulfilment of God's promise. The conditions laid down by Peter seemed to be, first, repentance, then baptism; i. e., they must take the right attitude toward Christ the Messiah and they must identify themselves with his movement, called thus early, The Way. The numerical results of the sermon were an addition of 3,000 to the body of believers—the first example of mass evangelism, of which there have been many in the history of the Church. It is difficult and dangerous to disparage or disregard this primal mass movement. The Day of Pentecost should also be Membership Sunday in all our churches and the invitation pressed for a wholesale turning in penitence and dedication to God. Let the full impact of Pentecost register in all its mighty and transforming implications.

Even though the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch, Pentecost is usually taken to be the actual beginning of the Christian Church. Yet many stages of development awaited the infant community now just in the swaddling clothes. The important and abiding elements of the life of these early believers were the apostolic teaching, unity in fellowship, the observance of the Lord's Supper and prayer. There were added unto the church daily (not annually!) such as should be saved.

The one gift that was there given was directly related to the commission given to the disciples to evangelize all nations. This was the power to "speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." It was given, not for the spectacular, but for practical use. Many lands were represented among the pilgrims at Jerusalem and all heard the disciples "speaking in their own tongues the mighty works of God." We need to remember that although the people present came from many lands, they were all Jews or Jewish sympathizers. Besides, Greek was the language generally used by travellers in those days. The idea, therefore, that what occurred required the disciples to speak in all the vernaculars of all the countries represented may be regarded as an exaggeration.

What is often overlooked, however, is that the message of the Gospel is often concealed even though the words used may be thoroughly familiar. Every minister faces this problem from Sunday to Sunday. Of this we may be sure, the message of Pentecost "found" all who heard. It struck home. The powers both of expression and hearing were heightened. This was the gift of the Spirit that is still supreme. (I Corinthians 12:3.)

Through those gathered there the Gospel message was to reach, and did reach, all the lands represented. That same need is met now through the translations into more than a thousand languages and dialects of at least the most important parts of the Bible, and through the multitudes of missionaries, foreigners and nationals, who by the power of the Spirit help people of all countries and races to understand and believe the message of salvation through Christ.

PENTECOST and MEMORIAL DAY.

Many hallowed memories are aroused the fourth Sunday in May. Countless people will make their pilgrimages back to their childhood shrines and pay a brief tribute to the memory of their departed ones. There they will pause, the unseen world will draw near and they will experience the communion of saints. "Compassed by such a great cloud of witnesses," some will resolve to "run with patience the race that set . . . looking unto Jesus."

All the sobering and sanctifying influences of the occasion should result in a widespread dedication to the faith of our fathers. Generous offerings should be made by those who have never discharged their debt of gratitude to the church which nurtured them in the faith.

Those who have endeavored to follow the spiritual pilgrimage of Christ and His disciples during this holy season will claim the gift of the Holy Spirit. The incoming tide of the Holy Spirit which successfully launched the Christian movement is needed today to send a foundering church sailing into a new day.

Pentecost and Memorial Day speak the same language and emphasize the same things, the reality of the unseen world. Thank God for all that is worthy of being memorialized. It is secure in the eternal economy of God. The spiritual world is vibrant with power whose chain of releases has been felt across the centuries and around the world. Blessed are those who appropriate and utilize this power in the furtherance of God's Kingdom.

R. L. H.

Some of the greatest thinking has been done by those who cared little for riches—Pasteur, Edison, Jane Addams—and who shall say that theirs was not the richer life? Today, the world knows the poetry of Shakespeare, the music of Wagner, the art of Rembrandt; but who knows even the names of the money barons of their day—or cares to know? If you want your name to live after you, you'll not give all your thought to money. But, whether you want to make money, or write a book, or build a bridge, or run a streetcar—or do anything else successfully—you'll do well to remember that in all the world there is no word more important than—"Think!"

I Saw the Valley of Virginia

By REV. THOMAS ALFRED TRIPP

Virginia Valley Central Conference met in its mid-year session at Bethlehem Church on March 27. Mr. Roy A. Larriek, an active layman in the Winchester Church, is president—an office he has held for nine years. Reverend Guy H. Veazey is pastor of the host church. The conference was well attended, notwithstanding a serious influenza epidemic throughout the area.

Dr. William T. Scott, Superintendent, and Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Director of Religious Education, Southern Convention, were the principal speakers. I had the privilege of sharing the program with them. Between the three of us, either together or separately, we visited each church grouping in the conference during the week of the annual meeting. Besides, we took part in an excellent meeting of the young people of the Valley on Sunday, March 30, at Leaksville Church.

I paid "toll" at the "Gateway to the Valley of Virginia"—which is to say, Winchester—by speaking for Pastor Robert A. Whitten on the way in on March 26, and as I departed the following Sunday night. Superintendent Scott and Miss Chicoine also participated in the first meeting here.

The conference revealed progress in every way. For instance, the churches increased their giving for Southern Convention missions by thirty-three per cent during the last year. They voted to increase their goal for the Conference Fund by fifty per cent. All finances were paid in full, or more.

We three speakers had a pleasant night at Elkton in the parsonage of Rev. S. E. Madren and his family. The next day, March 28, there was a conference on rural parish methods at Bethel Church in the forenoon, followed by a dinner in the basement.

Sunday morning I spoke at Timber Ridge for Roy Coulter who rushed me eighty miles down the Valley for the youth meeting at Leaksville. Timber Ridge church represents the most progressive step forward during the past year in the conference. They are just completing a new $10,000 parsonage. They already had a strong congregation and a beautiful historic church building which they keep in excellent condition. This country parish represents one of the best prospects for the future of any rural church in our fellowship.

Timber Ridge church is the first in the Valley, after Winchester, to break with the old system of "preaching Sundays" once a month. They are now in a position to have, not only worship services conducted by their own full-time minister every Sunday, but pastoral work and leadership seven days a week. In this notable achievement they have reached the goal which is the ideal for every church.

The grouping of the churches which are unable to carry a full program alone is established in the Valley. This system of yoked fields includes all the churches of the conference excepting Winchester and Timber Ridge which each have their own full-time pastor.

S. E. Madren is pastor of the yoked rural parish which includes Bethel, Mt. Olivet (G) and Mt. Olivet (R), the letters identifying churches of the same name in Greene and Rockingham Counties. The churches of this parish are improving their parsonage at Elkton.

Shenrock Parish includes Mr. Veazey's six rural churches—Bethlehem, Mayland, Concord, Wood's Chapel, Wissler's Chapel and Palmyra. Mayland church is improving its building and adding memorial windows. Bethlehem has started a fund for a new building.

In the Luray area, the grouped rural parish is composed of Leaksville, Newport, Mt. Lebanon, Dry River and Joppa. R. E. Newton is the pastor. This parish entertained the youth conference at Leaksville.

Linville, Antioch, New Hope and Beulah rural churches comprise the remaining yoked parish. Mr. Madren was pastor of this group before going to Elkton. Superintendent Scott conferred with these churches regarding a new pastor who will apparently be called shortly.

These groupings are very significant because the relationship offers many avenues of cooperation, in addition to providing a pastor with support for devoting full-time to the Christian ministry. This system has passed beyond the experimental stage in the Valley and has stood the test of the past eight years or more.

The conference and Convention encourage these groups. Their financial subsidies are granted in ways serving to perpetuate them as follows:

1. Aid is given for the parish group, not for an individual church unless it can support a full-time pastor.

2. Aid is granted only for parishes whose grouping or other arrangements and pastoral relationships are approved by the conference and Superintendent.
3. Aid is granted on the expectation that the pastor devotes full-time to the ministry.
4. Aid is granted only when the pastor lives on the field.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference of Congregational Christian Churches is catching up with the parish patterns found elsewhere and it is leading the way, in many respects, toward new developments of rural church work.

The Valley has a good economic base for all this work. It has one of the nation's finest resources for a vacation trade in its unusually favorable scenery and climate. It has a sound economy in general farming and in its great apple industry. Culturally, the people are as advanced as any in the nation. Schools are good. The educational level seems high. Health is excellent, notwithstanding the flu. There is probably inadequate provision for rural libraries and the churches appear to depend too much upon conference aid while their prosperous surroundings suggest an obvious capacity for greater self-support.

The residents, who are understandably satisfied with their lovely communities, are already giving greater support to their churches. The type of people and culture which exist here are of the type which overcomes problems, given time. The future is very bright in Virginia Valley.

YOU ARE WHAT YOU READ.

If religious books are not widely circulated among the masses in this country, and the people do not become more religious, I do not know what is to become of us as a nation. If truth be not diffused, error will be; if God and His Word are not known and received, the devil and his works will gain the ascendancy; if the evangelical volume does not reach every hamlet, the pages of corrupt and licentious literature will; if the power of the gospel is not felt through the length and breadth of the land, anarchy, misrule, degradation, misery, corruption, and darkness will reign without mitigation or end.—Daniel Webster.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

SOUTHERN SYNOD E. & R.'S MEET IN LEXINGTON.

The annual convocation of the Youth Fellowship of the Southern Synod was held in Lexington and Salisbury, N. C., on April 26. There were 250 young people representing thirty-five churches in North Carolina which met in morning and afternoon sessions at the Second Church in Lexington and in the evening for the annual banquet at Catawba College in Salisbury. (The Southern Synod represents churches in North Carolina, Florida, and Georgia.)

Each session was well knitted with the theme, "All One Body We." To express "One in Hope" a play, "The Lost Church," was presented in a fine production by young people from the Western district.

Continuing in the afternoon session were "One in Doctrine" and "One in Charity." A panel discussion on the union of our churches was held with Rev. A. W. Hedrick and Bob Keppel representing the Evangelical and Reformed Church and Dr. W. E. Wisseman and Baxter Twiddy the Congregational Christian Church, participating. This furthered understanding by the young people on the merger.

The last portion of the theme, "One in Charity," was presented by Helen Holt of the Evangelical and Reformed Church. She discussed the projects of the Youth Fellowship. To further illustrate relief as a project the picture, "Seeds of Destiny," was shown. This is a movie of merit which depicts the sufferings of the world.

The evening session was held at Catawba College. This included the annual banquet, installation of officers for the coming year, and an address by Dr. Wisseman. Officers installed as cabinet members were Bob Keppel, president; Sue Ellen Schell, vice-president; Clarine Ingol, secretary; and Hugh Myers, treasurer. Also installed as representatives from the four districts and members of the cabinet were George Fulbright, Western; Mel Palmer, Davidson-Forsythe; Katherine Fesperman, Eastern; and Louise Klutz, Central. Advisers are Revs. A. W. Hedrick, Harvey Koontz, A. W. Cheek, and J. C. Peeler.

Bob Keppel was given full support by the young people in his going to the World Youth Conference in Oslo as one of the four delegates from the E. and R. Youth Fellowship.

We are anxiously awaiting the day of our union as one church. With this union we shall come more to realize that we are all one body in Christ.

CAMPAIGN FOR "YOUTH OUTREACH."

We are endeavoring to see that the Youth Outreach is within reach of every young person in the Southern Convention. In order to do this we need your help.

A number of individuals and groups are now subscribing, but there are many such as these without the Youth Outreach. Our goal for the campaign during this month is four hundred new subscribers with at least one subscription at the end of the month from each church.

If some young people in your church are now subscribing, perhaps there are others who would like also to subscribe. Acquaint them with it.

Briefly, here are a few of the distinct advantages this bi-monthly newsletter brings you:

1. Program suggestions for worship and recreation.
2. News from the Convention—what other young people are doing.
3. Articles and editorials of real value to you.
4. Fellowship with all young people in the Convention.

Present subscription rates are as follows: single subscription, one year—25c; five or more subscriptions to one address, one year—20c each; single copies, 5c each.

Send to: Mr. Jimmy Madren, Elon College, N. C.

Talk about the Youth Outreach in your young people's meetings, in Sunday school, at rallies and at any other gathering of young people. We need the strong tie this newsletter brings to all the young people of the Convention, and we can make it a success with your help.

WHAT ABOUT YOUR MISSION STUDY.

Many of you Pilgrim Fellowship members who read this page are members of a Young People's Missionary Society. And, in as much as this page occasionally carries notations about Young People's Missionary work, I was wondering what you have done about your mission study. Perhaps you would like to drop me a line and tell me just how your study has, or is to be, carried on.

In your study of Christian and Race Relations the following might be suggestive: Sense and Nonsense About Race by Ethel J. Alpenfels, an anthropologist, contains the answers to questions asked by thousands of high school students about race. Read this illustrated pamphlet yourself, use its facts in conversation, discuss its answers in youth meetings and then give it to a friend. Price: paper, 25c. Seeking to be Christian in Race Relations is a pamphlet by Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga. In it he points out the Christian way in race relations. It was written for you to study in your Sunday School, Young People's Society, or Missionary Group. It is also good for personal reading and for use in worship services. Price: paper, 25c. Know—Then Act is a pamphlet by Margaret C. McCulloch stressing the phrases: "Be—Know—Act," with the emphasis on action. It was especially written for use in denominational and interdenominational youth planning meetings as a guide to action. Price: paper, 25c. For your worship programs, Discussion and Program Suggestions for Youth on "The Christian and Race" by Elizabeth Nixon, contains materials for worship programs during your study on Race. Price: paper, 25c. Portraits of Outstanding Americans of Negro Origin, painted by Laura Wheeler Waring and Betsy Graves Reyneau, can be secured for use in study sessions or worship services when stories are told of these Negro Americans. Ten 9 x 11½ inch pictures with brief biographies, can be secured for $1.00 a set.

In your study on India the following might be suggestive: Our Country Is India, is a book for young people that tells what young India is doing today and hoping for tomorrow. Over twenty Indian writers helped Rebecca Wells Loeffler compile a book that is interesting for personal reading, fascinating for a book review, stimulating for use in study classes, and crammed with stories to

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

HARVEY.

My name is Harvey. I am covered with soft white fur. My ears stick up in peaks above my head. They are covered with white fur also but lined with pink. My eyes are a beautiful shade of pink and very large and bright. I have four legs; two of them are very powerful and help me to leap out of harm's way. The other two I use to hold my food with very much as you do. Yes, I am that animal which has "no tail at all but just a little bunch of hair!" I'm a very large pet rabbit.

I would like for you to come to see me some time. All of the children on our street come to see me and to watch me eat. My hutch is on high stilts very much like the homes of people in the Philippine Islands. In one corner of my wire enclosure is a little "rabbit cottage" with a door just made to fit my goings and comings. Inside there is a nice bed of wood shavings.

My master is a little lad of nine years. He has very blue, friendly eyes and black hair. His two older sisters are away from home. One is married and the other one is in training at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Richard got so lonely that his father and mother decided to buy me for him. His father made my hutch. His mother saves nice green cabbage leaves for me. Richard's father also planted a patch of turnips last fall so that I'd not get hungry through the winter.

Like all bunnies, I had a wonderful time Easter! Richard let me pose for my Easter picture with his basket of beautiful colored eggs. Richard's sister, Mary Lee, has a camera that takes colored films. The background for my picture was a big cherry tree that was as white with blossoms as my fur.

Richard and I have lots of fun together. He is very kind and takes such good care of me. Each morning he brings me my breakfast before going to school and always runs out to say hello to me when he gets home. It is high time I curled down for my shut-eye, so good-bye to you.

QUESTIONS FROM YOUR BIBLE.

(Here are four questions from your Old Testament which are answered in your Bible just after the questions. See how easily you can find them!)

1. Who shall ascend unto the hill of the Lord? And who shall stand in His holy place?

2. From Whence shall my help come?

3. Who is the King of glory?

4. Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?

A REAL CHILDREN'S PARTY.

By HILDA RICHMOND.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. Trenton was spending the afternoon with her friend, Mrs. Croft, while her children, Dick and Mary, and the Croft twins were at a little birthday party given for Tommy Nelson. They knew by the shouts of laughter coming from the Nelson's side lawn that the children must be having a good time—but what kind of a good time?

"The children will look like tramps, I'm afraid, when they leave that party," said Mrs. Trenton, shifting the needles in her Red Cross knitting. "I wish Mary had not worn her best dress."

"Yes, I too, have been wondering how the party would end," said Mrs. Croft. "Mrs. Nelson has such advanced ideas about rearing children. She leaves them so much to themselves, I greatly fear the consequences. I always supervise my children in their play hours, and today, with the children planning the refreshments even, and serving them—well, it doesn't look good to me."

But lo and behold! the laughing children were quite tidy when they returned, and they expressed sincere regret that their mothers could not have been at the party. "Do you know," one said solemnly, "Mrs. Nelson let Tommy and Anne manage everything themselves—every single thing!" and the others broke in, "They made sandwiches and ice cream all by themselves; and we had big fat lollipops."

The two mothers exchanged glances over the heads of their children. Both were thinking of a recent children's party, where the little folks played the games directed by their mothers, ate the refreshments served daintily by adults, and showed by their conduct that they had received, at home, last minute instructions in manners,

"I'm going to take that adorable tea set down from the top shelf of the closet, where I had put it to keep 'until Mary gets bigger.' She will enjoy it more right now," said Mrs. Trenton, looking as though she had suddenly seen a vision.

"I spent three whole hours making place cards for my children's last party," lamented Mrs. Croft. "Just look at these place cards made by the children themselves!"

And the children further enlightened their mothers about the invitations to the successful social affair. "We had cookies with our names on them, but we ate 'em." "I wish I had saved mine. My name was in little red candles on a white cookie. Julia made it herself. Mother, why can't we have a party like that?"

Mrs. Trenton rolled up her Red Cross knitting, and her answer seemed irrelevant, "I've learned a very important lesson this afternoon."

Mrs. Croft nodded understandingly. "Perhaps, some more of our neighbors' advanced ideas will be worth copying," she said. "I am glad to have had this lesson, for I see that whatever children do by themselves, successfully, is more precious to them than style and fancy cooking. Besides, it is an experience which assists greatly in their development."

"Yes," replied the other mother, "we have not been giving our children sufficient opportunity for initiative. This party has shown me what possibilities lie ahead. I want to talk with Mrs. Nelson."

"I'm in accord with you there, too," answered Mrs. Croft, smiling.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE TRUSTEES OF THE PALMER FUND MEET.

The Francis Asbury Palmer Fund was created by the late Francis Asbury Palmer of New York City he united with the Congregational Church. Of course, this was many years prior to the merger of the two denominations.

Mr. Palmer was a very successful business man. He contributed generously to various benevolent causes during his life-time. He challenged the trustees of Elon College to create an endowment fund for the College. He offered to give $20,000 if the trustees would raise $10,000 making a total of $30,000 for endowment. The College accepted the challenge and the late Colonel J. E. West undertook and succeeded in raising the $10,000 with which to meet the challenge. This was the beginning of efforts to undergird the College with financial strength. According to the College catalogue prior to 1930, the Palmer Fund contributed $4,000 annually to the College to help meet its current obligations. From 1930 to 1944 the Palmer Fund made no contribution to the College. In 1943 the writer was elected a trustee of the Fund. In 1944 the Palmer Fund gave Elon College $1,500 and $1,000 in 1945 and 1946. At the annual meeting held in the vaults of the Chase National Bank, 214 Broadway, New York City, Friday, May 16, 1947, the trustees voted to contribute $1,000 to Elon College. These contributions are for current expenses. The Fund gives a like amount to Defiance College.

Mr. Palmer set aside approximately $1,000,000 for the Fund, the purpose of which was to assist young men and young women preparing for the ministry or full-time Christian work and to assist the church colleges of the denomination. Through losses in various ways and suits resulting from the will, a considerable amount of the principal sum was lost. The total active assets as of April 30, 1947, amount to $648,055. These assets have increased $19,480.90 during the past year. The inactive assets total $166,394. It is the purpose of the trustees of the Fund to build the Fund back to its original amount. This is done by reclaiming from inactive assets as much and as rapidly as possible and adding to active assets and by assigning a percentage of income from the Fund to the capital fund. The Fund has a total income of $21,260.72.

Mr. Palmer was greatly interested in what was then Starkey Institute, located at Lakemont, New York. This school was closed for a while. The trustees of the Palmer Fund, because of Mr. Palmer's personal interest, reopened the school as an academy for boys. The trustees appropriate $15,000 a year for the support of this school. The academy is progressing nicely and serving efficiently a goodly number of boys. The success of the undertaking to date would seem to justify the decision of the trustees.

Elon College appreciates greatly the interest expressed and the support given to its program of education. This contribution should encourage our own people to give more generous support to their college.

APPOPTIONMENT GIVING.

We did not report any contributions for last week. We had no report to make. A statement and appeal was addressed to our churches and Sunday schools in particular and to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN in general.

Our report for this week is not too encouraging but it is better than last week's report. The College is aware that during the summer months it is not so easy to secure contributions for the support of outside work as it is during other periods. However, our needs continue and our obligations are exacting. It would be a great encouragement if a number of our churches and Sunday schools would join in the support of the College through the plan submitted by the Convention.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is commencement time at Elon. Towering trees have come to full leaf, and soft are the breezes that sigh in their branches. Lawns are spacious and green, lanes are alluring—and may they lead into unnumbered, bright tomorrows! Students who left their high schools and their homes four years ago, their luggage heavy with the high school annual and their hearts heavy with many uncommon separations, are today young men and young women ready to receive their college degrees.

Those young graduates have had their trials and their tests. At times they have suffered loneliness, at other times discouragement, and sometimes they have felt the bitter pangs of defeat. Perhaps there have been times when they were frightened, for we have had frightening years. Perhaps they have wondered oft if they would fail some course, or fumble some opportunity for advancement. Perhaps they have longed for home, or maybe some of them have regretted wasted hours, and wanted a

POSTWAR EMERGENCY PROGRAM.

The Missions Council has announced that $2,076,377 is in hand toward the $6,114,576 Postwar Emergency Fund for Relief, Reconstruction and Advance to be raised in 1946-47-48.

"Contrary to the plan followed by most denominations, the Congregational Christian Churches are not seeking their funds through a special campaign effort but through the previously existing 'giving' channels of the churches with the income to be received over a three-year spread," says Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher, Executive Secretary, in announcing the progress of the fund.

"The Congregational Christian Churches are also well ahead of their time schedule in raising $1,200,000 to augment their Ministerial Relief Funds," adds Dr. Stauffacher.

During the three years immediately preceding the beginning of the Postwar Emergency Fund for Relief, Reconstruction and Advance the Congregational Christian Churches had increased their Benevolence giving by forty per cent. Also when the Postwar Emergency Program began these churches were giving toward the Congregation Christian War Victims and Services Committee at the rate of $500,000 per year.

MISSIONARY SKIPPER DIES.

Captain George F. Garland of Oberlin, Ohio, who for over twenty years was the Skipper of three of the famous little Morning Stars, missionary sailing ships sent to the South Seas by the American Board of Foreign Mission, Boston, from 1856 to 1904, died Monday, May 12, at the age of ninety-three.

Captain Garland was Skipper of Morning Stars IV and V, beginning his full command in 1887; but prior to that time he had been temporary captain of the Morning Star III on which he had shipped as a first mate.

In 1904 Captain Garland retired from service, with his wife, Mrs. Sarah Smith Garland, a former Congregational missionary in the Micronesian Islands, and became head of a missionary home in Oberlin, Ohio.

At the time of his death, Captain Garland was in a nursing home in Lorain, Ohio, near Oberlin. Funeral services will be held Thursday afternoon, May 15, in Oberlin, Ohio.

MORNING STAR VI.

A special delegation sent to Micronesia to plan the rehabilitation of our mission work in the Marshall and Caroline Islands report the most urgent need is for a ship to transport our missionaries, native workers and supplies to the many island stations in that area of the west Pacific. The United States Navy authorities in the area have endorsed the delegation's proposal and have recommended the type of vessel to be secured.

On April 8 the Prudential Committee of the American Board for Foreign Missions voted to purchase and equip a schooner to be named Morning Star VI. Thirty thousand dollars ($30,000) is to be raised for this purpose as a part of the Postwar Emergency Program ($20,000 from the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction and $10,000 from Increased Apportionment Giving).

Morning Star VI will take its place in the succession of five gallant little ships of the same name. The first Morning Star was sent out in 1856 and was paid for largely by shares purchased by Sunday School children. The Morning Star VI may be raised in part by issuing of shares in convenient denominations which can be taken by churches, Sunday Schools and individuals.

better record. Some of them may have been sick, or have had loved ones at home who were ill. All of them have not had all the money they have wished, and some of them perhaps have had more than was good for them. Perhaps everyone of them have at times been in some sort of distress of mind or spirit. Many of them must have had moments of exaltation and joy.

At any rate now they are just about to receive their diplomas. Many hills have been climbed, and much real study—some of it done in fits and starts, much of it done in a cursory fashion, and yes, a great deal of it done as real students would do it, as pursuing interesting roads to opening doors of service and achievements. Some of us have seen almost every side of college life from the students' point of view.

But I started to write these lines to say God bless the men and women who have taught these young people, who have seen them at their mediocre levels as well as at their highest best; who have learned of their hopes and dreams, and have been patient with them when they have needed patience, and wise and strong for them at every step of their college way. I want to thank God for a college that continues the local church's care for the youth of our hearts and our homes. I want to see all the best that the church at home had in mind for Mary, and Tommy, and Jimmy, and Rachel, as they went through classes and departments of the local Sunday school and church, kept up in their training at college level. The best in all that develops Christian manhood and womanhood—of body, mind, and spirit should be found there. Elon has been fortunate throughout her history of more than fifty years in having on her campus some who could see the best in the boys and girls entrusted to her during the big years when they became men and women.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARCADLE, D. D.

JUDAH'S UNSTEADY COURSE.

LESSON IX—JUNE 1, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: In quietness and confidence shall be your strength.—Isaiah 30:15.

LESSON: II Kings 18-20; II Chronicles 29.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 46.

A Good King and a Long Rule.

Hezekiah was a good man and a great king. His biographer says in what seems as rather extravagant words "after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him." (II Kings 18:5.) He "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his father David did." "He removed the high places and brake the images, and cut down the groves, and even went so far as to break into pieces the serpent that Moses had made and which had become an end, instead of a means to worship. This latter reform was drastic to say the least and aroused a great deal of opposition on the part of some conservatives. But Hezekiah, with something of the fervor of the prophets, tried to make religion a matter of spirit and the inner life, and not from an outward ceremony. Furthermore, "he trusted in the Lord God of Israel" and "clave to the Lord and departed not from following him, but kept his commandments." He comes as a welcome change from so many of the kings of Israel and Judah, who in varying measures and manners led the people astray, and compromised ethical and spiritual ideals.

Hezekiah strengthened the nation, both from within and from without. He rebelled against the King of Assyria and served him not, refusing to pay tribute to him as had done some of his predecessors. This called for courage and faith of the highest order, for Judah was but a small kingdom, while Assyria at that time bestrode the world like a Colossus. It was all the more noteworthy in view of the fact that the Assyrians had recently come up and conquered Israel and taken the Ten Tribes captive. Later on, when Sennacherib had conquered the fenced cities of Judah, Hezekiah did buy him off by paying tribute, selling even the gold from the doors of the temple and from the great columns in order to meet the levy laid upon him.

Hezekiah also did some public works. He developed an improved water supply for the city, bringing water in through a conduit and also building a reservoir as insurance against a siege. He reigned twenty-nine years, through a turbulent and troubled period, and there is no question about his ability and his character.

A War of Nerves.

Hitler's "war of nerves" was no new thing. The king of Assyria used the method away back there in Hezekiah's day. He sent his personal "Goebbels," Rabshakeh, to intimidate the Judaites. He chided him with trusting in Egypt, whom he likened to a bruised reed, he ridiculed him for trusting in the Lord, a God who had allowed the king to take away the high places and the altars, he challenged him to furnish two thousand riders for horses that the king of Assyria said he would provide, he even insinuated that the Assyrians had come up against Judah at the express command of the Lord himself. He brought dire threats against the people, speaking in their own language so that they would get the import of his words. It was all designed to strike fear into the hearts of the people, and to lead to a ready and speedy surrender. Much of Hitler's success at the beginning of the war was due to his diabolically conceived and cleverly conducted "war of nerves" by which he defeated nations before ever he struck a blow. He was as successful in diplomatic as in military warfare. One wonders if Russia is not using the same technic now. And our words about the atomic bomb may be a part of the same technique.

A One-Man Army.

It was fortunate for Judah that Isaiah lived in Jerusalem at this time. Here was a man who was, literally a oneman defender of the nation. His words and his personal example kept up the morale of the king and the people, and saved the little kingdom from premature destruction. For instance when Hezekiah heard the blatant and blasphemous Rabshakeh broadcast his dire warnings, he was stricken with stark terror. He turned to Isaiah, and asked the prophet to pray in behalf of the nation. Isaiah promptly reassured him, predicting that the Assyrians would have to return to protect their own country against the king of Ethiopia, a prophecy that was forthwith fulfilled. When again he uttered his dire predictions against Judah, Isaiah confidently said that the king of Assyria would not come into the city, or even shoot an arrow into it, or lay it to siege. And again a great plague struck the camp of the Assyrians and thousands died overnight. This man Isaiah was one of the great men of all time. No prophet surpassed him in spiritual insight and vision, and none equalled him in the use of the spoken and printed word. He was a world statesman and a prime minister of the Kingdom of God on earth, Borrowed Years.

Later in his reign Hezekiah was stricken with what appeared to be a fatal illness. It appears that a boil must have become infected. In any event he seemed doomed to die, and the prophet plainly told him to set his house in order. But by a gracious act of God his infection responded to treat—and a simple treatment it was for figs were laid upon the boil—and he recovered. Thus he lived on borrowed time. What a new sense of stewardship he must have had as a result. As a matter of fact, every one of us lives on borrowed time. The fact that we awake every morning is a challenge to live that new day for God.

A Good Man Can Do Foolish Things.

Goodness is no insurance against foolishness. When the king of Babylon heard that Hezekiah was sick he sent his personal representatives and presents to Hezekiah. Hezekiah in a gracious and generous, but foolish gesture, showed these visitors everything he had—treasures, armor, fortifications, everything. Simple-minded fellow, that was right down Babylon's alley. They made use of that a little later when they came up and conquered Judah. Isaiah knew what was going to happen and he rebuked the king for his folly. But it was too late.

Restricted Area—Religion Keep Out.

Religious, and genuinely religious as he was, Hezekiah was not led to a radical change in his outlook on life. In a pinch he fell back on reliance, on military wealth and military power.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage management appreciates visitors. We have had a number of visitors lately from different communities. All of them have expressed their appreciation for the splendid condition in which the buildings are kept, and the splendid appearance of the Main Building in its new coat of white paint. They are amazed how beautifully the little children play together without quarreling. We find that more people who visit the Orphanage, more people we have interested in the Orphanage.

On Sunday and Monday, May 25 and 26, many of those who read these lines will attend the College Commencement. We want to give you a special invitation to visit the Orphanage while here. The matrons in charge of the buildings will be happy to show you through them. If you don't have time to go through all the buildings we want you to go through the buildings known as the "Baby Home" and the "Old Building." We hope to have them finished by commencement. We would be happy to have you look at the cattle, the beautiful dairy barn, and the milking shed which has recently been painted white on the inside. It looks so white and clean you would not hesitate to drink milk which is milked in such a clean place.

We heard our good friend, John T. Kernodle, say on one occasion, in making a talk in behalf of the Orphanage, that you could not visit the Orphanage without it costing you something; not that the superintendent was going to ask for money, but when you looked at the little children there, they would so impress you that if you did not make a contribution while there, you would send a check when you got home.

When you visit the Orphanage and see the opportunity it affords you, to give that they may have a real home and an equal opportunity, too, with other children, you will want to have a part.

The Christian Orphanage is an institution of the Church and the whole Church is expected to support it. Please visit the Orphanage, your Orphanage, and see for yourself.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

total cost is $2.45. However, in conjunction with the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention, the following offer is made. If your church will send its Children's Day offering to the Southern Convention Office, specifically marked for the Board of Christian Education, and if your Vacation Bible School offerings are given for some denominational project which is supported by the Southern Convention, the Vacation Bible School kit will be sent to you without charge. If you wish to take advantage of this offer, please write to let me know, and I shall send you the kit as soon as possible.

The Committee feels that the themes for each of the age-groups are well chosen—for who can deny that they are not topics of vital importance to us all living in this world of 1947? "God's Plan for Happy Homes" brings to mind that our homes make up the world and that God's plan for them would truly bring about His world. "We Go to Church" should be the theme of all who are concerned about themselves as truly Christians. "We Would See Jesus" is the Christian way of saying, "We Would Follow Jesus." And, "Exploring the Bible" makes us remember that the Bible is strangely up-to-date and thrillingly modern—for by it we gain truth and guidance to make us strong, to live as Christians should live in this twentieth century.

BEREA OBSERVES FAMILY WEEK.

Miss Elizabeth Chicoine was the guest speaker at a fellowship supper held in observance of Family Week on Wednesday night, May 7, by the Berea Church, Elon College, N. C. Some seventy-five people gathered in the cafeteria of the Altamahaw-Ossipee School, Mr. V. M. Bundy, Superintendent. The school is across the road from the Berea Church.

The meal was served "chow line" style and after the line had passed by the serving tables all sat down and had the meal together. Gifts were presented to the eldest mother, Mrs. Georgia Shatterly, and to the youngest mother, Mrs. William Jones. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Boone received a gift for the largest family present. Miss Chicoine was also presented a gift from the ladies of the church. During the evening preliminary plans were discussed and laid for the Daily Vacation Bible School to be held the first week of June. Rev. Kenneth Thomas and a committee from the Fairview Church met with this group and the two churches will join forces for the Bible School.

Dr. Jesse H. Dollar will conduct the revival at the Berea Church June 1-6. The fellowship concluded with the showing of the film, "Is Your Home Fun?" A real night of family fun and fellowship was enjoyed by all present.

Pastor.

"DING" and "MAO"

This is an auspicious time to start a letter. Firecrackers are bursting near and far to celebrate the ancient New Year festival, dear to all China. Moreover Robert and I are having our own celebration; for yesterday I came home from the hospital, a month from the day I was carried off on a stretcher. Such an ignominious way I took to begin our venture in a new place! But it is over, and we can go on from here. There is our home to put into shape; there are courageous people to know better; there is all this unfamiliar region to make our own. This is yet the China we love; and it is good to be here.

How lucky we were to draw passage on a cargo boat instead of a crowded transport ship; to go by way of the Panama Canal, the warm southerly route; to have wonderful friends to harbor us in Shanghai; to wait there only four days for our small steamer down the China coast, and to survive that three-day experience; to bring our sorely needed goods all the way without loss; and finally to arrive! These are things to be thankful for.

The job for which we had come began at once. Callers all day—Chinese pastors, teachers, school principles, our Christian leaders—to tell their story of terrific war years, present difficulties and discouragements, hopes and fears. There is need for wise planning in reconstruction. The long strain shows. And the present madly rising inflation of currency distorts the whole pattern of life still further.

One day we were invited out beyond the city to our agricultural school. The students work on the land as well as study. They demonstrate spraying fruit trees, modern fertilizing of truck gardens, cross-breeding of poultry, and much else to the farmers of the countryside. The school is located in a beautiful valley. Japanese bombs found it and completely destroyed the main buildings. Soldiers later occupied and damaged everything else. Guy Thelin, our agricultural expert, was trying to get his once attractive home repaired, and something in it to live with, before Betty and their two boys should arrive from America. They since have come, a happy, reunited family, undaunted by anything. The principal, K. P. Lin, loves his job and his boys. They and his teachers work with him tirelessly in the big effort of reconstruction. At dinner, delicious Chinese food, practically everything a product of the school, I asked him which weighed heavier now, discouragement or hope. He flashed a smile and replied quietly: "We have been able to lift our heads just above the edge, and from here on it is hope."

A great event has been the arrival of the Roderick Scotts and Walter Smiths and our own young recruits, Dr. Edward Riggs and the Richard Jacksons.

Now he will explain about "Ding Mao" and sign us off. Back in December of 1941, in Weston, Mass., we queried when and whence the next letter after "Bing Yin" would be. The answer you see is, right now, here! We had no faint notion of sending a next from this province—misty, steaming, fertile, courageous Fukien, instead of yellow, dusty, thrilling Tientsin. But here we are. "Ding Mao," you must know, has to come next in our Chinese cycle. Any Chinese student will tell you why. Officially the year of "Ding Mao" was 1927, and after that it will be 1987; but the private Chandler cycle is just different. This "Ding" and "Mao" signify a well-sustained person, after a hare, at six in the morning—interpret this as you please!

A Prayer for Young People

"O God, our Father, Thou Searcher of men's hearts, help us to draw near to Thee in sincerity and truth. May our religion be filled with gladness and may our worship of Thee be natural.

"Strengthen and increase our administration for honest dealing and clean thinking, and suffer not our hatred of hypocrisy and pretense ever to diminish. Encourage us in our endeavor to live above the common level of life.

"Make us choose the harder right instead of the easier wrong, and never to be content with a half truth when the whole can be won.

"Endow us with courage that is born of loyalty to all that is noble and worthy, that scorns to compromise with vice and injustice and knows no fears when truth and right are in jeopardy. Guard us against flippancy and irreverence in the sacred things of life.

"Grant us new ties of friendship and new opportunities of service. Kindle our hearts in fellowship with those of a cheerful countenance, and soften our hearts with sympathy for those who sorrow and suffer.

"May we find genuine pleasure in clean and wholesome mirth and feel inherent disgust for all coarseminded humour. Help us, in our work and in our play, to keep ourselves physically strong, mentally awake and morally straight, that we may the better maintain the honor of the Corps untarnished and unsullied, and acquit ourselves like men in our effort to realize the ideals of West Point in doing our duty to Thee and to our Country. All of which we ask in the name of the Great Friend and Master of men.—Amen."

FROM THE VALLEY.

Mrs. G. H. Veazey is the recipient of a new Speed Queen washing machine presented by the ladies of the Shenrock Pastorate. Words fail to express the appreciation for such a lovely gift.

The Rev. G. H. Veazey was made to feel younger on May 9th when he received a shower of birthday cards, the most of which contained tokens of appreciation for services rendered. This is indeed a great age to live in and the Valley is a good place to live.

The Pilgrim Fellowship-Sunday School Convention will meet in annual session June 12, with the Mayland Church, G. H. Veazey is the host pastor.

DISTINGUISHED GUESTS.

MEMORIAL SUNDAY PRAYER.

At thine altar, O God, we remember the heroism of men and the fortitude of women in a time of terror and trial; those who endured with valor, those who suffered with patience, and those who gave all, even the sweet blood of youth, for a better day. God of Mercy, let us not by carelessness or indifference be guilty of the worst of all sacrileges—the waste of sacrifice.

God of justice, make us just in mind and spirit, that the kingdoms of the world may become the Kingdom of Justice. We pray not for a peace of ease, but for the peace of righteousness and goodwill, and the moral love that fulfills itself in fellowship. Comfort thou thy people; guide our groping humanity out of chaos into brotherhood. Enlighten our darkness; let ignorance, oppression and envy cease, and heaven and earth be joined in praise of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

For those of you who have asked for some suggestions as to the use of the various books in the suggested Vacation Bible School "kit," I would like to offer the following procedure for five-day Schools. Those churches which are planning for a full ten-day School may follow the outline as given in each book.

BEGINNERS: "God's Plan for Happy Homes"—Elizabeth B. McKinney.

Study carefully the Introduction to the course, so that you may know the purpose of it, the needs of the children, how to change the course to fit your own group's needs, the day's procedure, the part of the parents, and the general course outline.

The first day, "Jesus in His," may be followed as outlined in the book, only changing it where it fits your children better. For the second day, "How Mother Helps and What Father Does," you will need to plan carefully, for you are combining into one day what was planned for two sessions. Try to show the children that Mother and Father work together in the home, and that the children may be God's helpers by being thoughtful toward their Mothers and Fathers. I would suggest that you divide the time fairly between talking about Mother and about Father, ending the day with the Conversation and Worship on page 35, substituting Mother and Father where just Daddy or Father is used. For the handwork, each child might make two of whatever the teacher has planned, one for Mother, one for Daddy. During the Conversation time, the children might talk about Mother, with the teacher using the story of a mother (on page 27) and a poem (on page 25). This period might end with the teacher's doing this. After the Play period, instead of the Activity suggested on page 28, the group might have another Conversation time, with the talk being about Fathers, as given on pages 31 and 32. This period may end with the poem and story on page 32. Follow this with the handwork period, making things for both parents, and end with the Conversation and Worship on page 35.

"Sister's Part and Brother's Part," the third day, may be worked out in much the same way. The time suggested (page 41) for an Excursion and Visit may be used for the talking about Sisters. Use the Conversation and story on pages 42 and 43 for this. Follow with the Play period, etc., and when the children have returned, open the Conversation period with the suggestions offered on page 45 concerning Brothers, following with the story beginning on page 45. The handwork for this session may be that suggested in Session No. 6 or to emphasize the fact that this handwork is for everyone in the home—Mother, Daddy, Sister(s) and Brother(s). Use the closing Discussion, etc. (page 47), to dismiss the group.

The fourth day, "Sharing Our Homes," will stress the fact that friends in our homes and helping to make them happy is part of God's plan for happy homes. This session will use as the opening Conversation the one suggested on page 55, learning the song, "Friends, Friends, Friends," and following this, have the play time. Later, the children will enjoy "acting out" guests and hosts or hostesses. Use the story on page 56, beginning with the Conversation suggested. The handwork may be the blotters suggested in the Appendix (page 68) for some special friend. Close the session with the suggestions given at the top of page 57.

The last day, "Homes Jesus Would Like to Visit," will be somewhat of a review of the activities and learning of the past four days, always coming back to the theme for the day. Follow the opening Conversation on page 59 and the Dramatic Play. After the Outdoor Play, etc., the children may help to prepare for their families and friends the work they have done during the week (that is, for the closing program, if one is to be given. If this is not the case, the suggestion for Mothers to visit on the last day may be carried out, as planned in Session 8.). Using the Conversation, etc., on page 60, tell the story which follows. The group may wish to sing again the songs it will offer on the closing program. End the session with the suggestions on page 61, using the word "tonight" (or the appropriate one, depending on the time of the final program).

PRIMARIES: "We Go to Church"—Lou Goddard.

Read carefully the purposes of this course, plan for getting ready for the School, and try to prepare for the needs of the children with whom you will work and play and worship. For the first day "We Go to Church" and "Our Own Church" combine the activities, etc., of both sessions, as outlined in the book. Most of the time will be spent on the plans of Session 1. If a tour of the church (as suggested on pages 24, 25, and 26) does not seem practical or needful, the children will enjoy "acting out" church as outlined on these pages. Using the schedule on page 14, the tour or dramatic play may come just after the Clean-up time. Let the closing worship be that suggested on page 28, beginning with learning another new song, telling the story on page 29 and 30, and ending with the suggested Conversation. The handwork may be either the drawings as suggested in Session 1 or the peep-show outlined in Session 2. (The peep-show may well be the "project" to be worked on in spare moments and offered for exhibition at the final program, to show what the children have studied and done during the week.)

The second day, "Our Minister," will need to be carefully planned. Be sure that you have invited your minister to meet with you and that he knows the reason for his being a part of the day's learning! This session may be followed as it is outlined. However, if you used as handwork on the first day the drawings, you may wish to begin either the peep-show or the frieze today. If you began the peep-show on the first day, at the time suggested for working on gifts, the children may continue with the peep-show. Use the story suggested, if possible.

The third day, "Our Church at Work for Others," will follow suggestions of Session 6. Newcomers may help finish the peep-show or frieze, instead of working on gifts, as suggested in the schedule on page 54. At the handwork period, the gifts may be made for a list of people whom the children name (shut-ins, the minister, other children, Sunday School teachers, etc.). In telling the story, change names and places where needed and so that they will suit the group.

On the fourth day, "We Help in Our Church," the schedule may be followed with the exception of working on the collection of pictures. At the planning session they may help prepare for the final program, for that is another way to help in the church. The litany, or original responsive readings, may be begun at

GREETINGS TO GRADUATES.

A host of good wishes to all high school and college graduates. One of the foremost preachers of our generation has called this "A Great Time To Be Alive." And so it is. Citizens of this portentous age need every possible iota of education. Avoid the mistake of those who scrap their educational luggage the moment they secure a diploma. Educational techniques and text books are not superfluous cargo to be jettisoned on the turbulent sea of life; they give buoyancy and direction; chart and compass they are. The practical divorce between education and vocation is one of the enemies of progress. Technical skill and scientific methods are capable of lifting every vocation to higher levels of usefulness and enjoyment. Put yours to work!

Universal knowledge and the ability to learn are God-given. A Christian must therefore practice the stewardship of knowledge and skill as well as the stewardship of money. The graduating classes of 1947 should mean new life and leadership for our churches. Education does not bring exemption from responsibility. "To whom much is given, much shall be required." Some of these current graduates will, we trust, enter the ministry or some form of Christian service. Others will enter various professions, but endeavor to discharge their stewardship of talent and influence as lay workers in the church. Those who have attended a denominational college have an advantage and a responsibility. It is their privilege to transmit their additional knowledge, school spirit and religious fervor into the work of the local church.

The God of history is the God of the future. Learn to cooperate with God. Although a graduate, you have yet much to learn. Advancement will come, not by luck but by pluck. New achievements, new knowledge, new friendships, even marriage, may await you! "Give to the world the best you have and the best will come back to you."

AFTER PENTECOST

A new era began after Pentecost. The infant church learned to stand alone, leave home, and come to terms with the world. The ecstasy of Pentecost was soon followed by the fires of persecution and the visions of Patmos. Following the theological skirmishes of St. Paul and St. Peter, there dawned the Golden Age of missions. The establishing of churches, the making of converts, and the writing of the New Testament filled these early days of grace.

Pentecost was not a hoax; it was not a pretty theological bubble which soon burst and disappeared. It was the very presence and power of God, strengthening, sustaining and directing those of The Way. This power was neither dissipated nor evaporated. It was harnessed to a mighty task, a world-conquering program.

What is to be the program in our churches following Pentecost? Does the uninterrupted program of the early Church suggest a moratorium on all our efforts until next fall? The establishing of churches, the publishing task of the Christian religion, the program of local and world-wide evangelism, these are the continuing tasks which should engage all our Pentecostal enthusiasm.

We think that church work is difficult now, and it is. But think of the added agencies for organization, publication and transportation which we now have! The early Church faced great odds and adversaries. They were handicapped in many ways. But they had the unimpeded power of the Holy Spirit, and this was the decisive factor in their spiritual conquest. Therefore, pray for the Holy Spirit, expect it, accept it, and attempt great things in its power. R. L. H.

THEY DIDN'T WANT SUCH LIFE.

A Christian family from a fine old Southern town moved to a big city in the North during the recent war on account of work. Because of the crowded conditions in that city this family was compelled to live in an old apartment house in a low type of neighborhood.

Down South this family was a respectable member of a good evangelistic church, faithful in attendance. But here in the new location neither the father nor the mother united with a church nor sent their three children to Sunday School. Soon they lived like the other irreligious people in the noisy neighborhood of the slums. Instead of going to Church School or worship they loafed at home, reading the funny papers, or went to the shows. At first their conscience rebelled at this kind of life, but in time they got used to it, even to the noise of blaring radios with crazy programs.

But there was a marked change in the behavior of the children. They picked up all kinds of bad habits and bad language from other children on the dirty streets. They got into one trouble after another. Mother found it hard to control them.

The people on their street talked loudly regardless of what they were saying, or what hour of night it was. Sometimes drunks would gather on their stone doorsteps past midnight and raise a rumpus. An Italian family in one of the apartments made life miserable. The man made good money at war industry, and she spent most of her time loafing around. The couple loved to drink, often they quarrelled, even fought till the woman screamed and the children cried for help.

After hearing such a brawl one night, the Southerner said to his wife: "Betty, if this is the way godless people live, I don't want any of it. Let's get out of this and go back to church."

"That's what I've been thinking for a long time," she said. "Let us return unto the Lord and serve him. I have already found a church, and the Lord will help us find better apartments."

Address of Governor Cherry at Elon College Commencement Exercises

10:30 A. M., MONDAY, MAY 26, 1947

It is a happy opportunity that I have today to come here for my first appearance at Elon College. I am glad to be with you here on the scene and at the sight of one of North Carolina's most notable experiments in the field of liberal education under church influences in a Christian atmosphere.

North Carolina as a state and as a people owes much to the church denominations that exist and reflect their influence within the borders of the state. Such church groups have carried a great part of the load in the field of higher education in our state and have made possible to the young people of the state a type of education in an atmosphere that is not entirely possible or practical in connection with a state institution that is supported from the tax moneys of all our people.

Church institutions, such as Elon College, supported by such groups as the Congregational Christian Church, have as their specific purpose the training of young men and young women under moral and religious influences. With classic and scientific education, this institution and the Congregational Christian Church that backs it provides every opportunity for moral development and spiritual advancement.

So here at this happy institution, which is small enough to provide the advantages that come with close contacts with members of the faculty, and large enough to offer education through intellectual experiences, Elon College has served our State and our nation by giving students a human understanding of books, themselves, other people, and God.

So I must comment on this occasion on the obvious and very noticeable spirit and character that marks this fine institution. College life at Elon has always been wholesome and invigorating.

There is, of course, a reason for the character which every individual and every institution possesses. In most instances it looks back of the individual or the institution to a begetter for the beginnings of the formation of that character.

The history of Elon College is, in a measure, the history of the Christian Church. Looking back of this College to its real beginning we find in 1794 a group of dissenters from Wesleyan Methodism seeking what they considered to be a more democratically governed church. Under the leadership of Rev. James O'Kelly this group met in Surry County, Virginia, and formed a new denomination which they called the Christian Church. In 1929 this denomination and the Congregational Church merged to form the present Congregation Christian Church.

In 1889 the group that looked back to O'Kelly as a founder established Elon College here on this spot and in the spirit that is still predominant on its campus. Many church colleges were established in the 19th century. It was the trend then for denominations to establish church colleges for the training of their own leadership and as a contribution to civilization. The Christian Church as then constituted was no exception. It was in September of 1888 that the Southern Convention of the Christian Church met in extra-ordinary session in Old Providence Church at Graham to hear the reports and the recommendations of the committee on schools and colleges.

A college board was named there, with authority to choose a site for the college and to make necessary legal and financial transactions.

Dr. W. S. Long of Graham, a pioneer in higher education here in North Carolina, had opened a school at Graham nearly a quarter of a century before which bore the name Graham Normal College. This institution proved to be a forerunner of
